"THE ENIGMA OF PALMYRA"

For more than 100 years vigorous, but futile attempts have been made to explain him away, only to be rejected, discredited or abandoned.

One explanation survives the tests of time and truth. Read it, and its many-sided manifestations in these books:

The One Hundred Twentieth Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints

The One Hundred Twentieth Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was held in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Utah, Thursday, Saturday, and Sunday, April 6, 8, and 9, 1950.

General sessions of the Conference were held at 10:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., Thursday, Saturday, and Sunday, and the General Priesthood meeting convened in the Tabernacle Saturday evening, April 8, at 7:00.

A special meeting was held in the Salt Lake Temple Friday morning, April 7, at 10:00, to which were invited the General Authorities, Presidencies of Stakes, Presidents of High Priests quorums, Bishops of Wards, Presidents of Branches in Stakes, and Presidents of Missions.

The full services of the General sessions were broadcast over Station KSL, Salt Lake City, and by arrangement through KSL were broadcast over the following stations:

In Utah: KSUB at Cedar City, K SVC at Richfield, KJAM at Vernal, and KVNU at Logan.

In Idaho: KGEM at Boise, KID at Idaho Falls, KEYY at Pocatello, KBIO at Burley.

In Oregon: KBKR at Baker, and KSRV at Ontario.

By transcription over KTYL at Mesa, Arizona and KEXO at Grand Junction, Colorado.

The services of the general sessions were also televised over the KSL television station, channel 5.

Provision was made to accommodate in the Assembly Hall, just south of the Tabernacle, many who could not find seats in the Tabernacle, where they were able to see and hear the speakers and those who presented musical numbers in the Conference sessions. Many others who could not find accommodation in either of these two buildings assembled on the Tabernacle grounds and listened to the services by means of amplifying equipment.

President George Albert Smith was present and presided at each of the general sessions. He conducted the services at the Thursday morning and Sunday afternoon sessions and also at the General Priesthood meeting. President J. Reuben Clark, Jr., First Counselor in the First Presidency, conducted at the Thursday afternoon and Saturday afternoon meetings; President David O. McKay, Second Counselor in the First Presidency, at the Saturday morning and Sunday morning meetings.

FIRST DAY

MORNING MEETING

Conference began Thursday morning, April 6, at 10 o'clock. President George Albert Smith presided and conducted the services. All of the brethren of the General Authorities of the Church were present.

The Choir singing for this session was furnished by the Brigham Young University Choir, Elder John R. Halliday conducting, and Elder Frank W. Asper was at the organ.

*Elder Thomas E. McKay, who was convalescing from illness, was present at the opening session.

President George Albert Smith:

This is the opening session of the One Hundred Twentieth Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City.

All of the General Authorities of the Church are present. Elder Joseph Anderson is the clerk of the conference.

These services will be broadcast in the assembly hall over a loud speaking system and by television. All of the general sessions of the conference will be heard and seen in the assembly hall in the same way.

This service will be broadcast over station KSL, Salt Lake City, as will also the services this afternoon at 2:00 p.m., Saturday and Sunday at 10:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m.; and by arrangements through KSL, over the following stations:

In Utah: KSUB at Cedar City, KSVU at Richfield, KJAM at Vernal.

In Oregon: KBKR at Baker, KSRV at Ontario.

By transcription, over KTYL at Mesa, Arizona, and KEXO at Grand Junction, Colorado.

These services will also be televised over the KSL television station, channel 5.

The calla lilies that you see here have been sent by the Berkeley Stake. We appreciate them very much.

The choir singing for this morning's session will be by the Brigham Young University choir with Elder John R. Halliday conducting, Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ.

We shall begin the morning services by the Brigham Young University choir singing: "Let The Mountains Shout For Joy."

The opening prayer will be offered by President Glen M. Bennion of the South Box Elder Stake, Brigham City, Utah.

The Brigham Young University Choir sang the hymn "Let The Mountains Shout For Joy."

The opening prayer was offered by Brother Glen M. Bennion, President of the South Box Elder Stake.

The Brigham Young University Choir sang "Allelujah, Christ Is Risen."

PRESIDENT GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

One hundred twenty years ago today six members constituted the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Today more than a million souls claim membership in the Church, and this morning the Tabernacle is filled to overflowing, and many hundreds more are in the Assembly Hall and on the grounds. It does not seem possible that so many people could be here this morning.

GEORGE B. MARGETTS

But there is one man missing, and I think you will all remember him. He always has been here; he has not failed, since I can remember, to be in a conference. He always has had a boutonniere in his coat. He came in from the north side of the stand to see that everybody was seated. In the providence of our Heavenly Father that good man has been summoned home. He has gone back to the God that gave him life. I refer to our faithful usher, George B. Margetts.

One by one we are going. The years are passing. A year ago I was only seventy-nine years old myself. Now I am eighty. There are those on the stand who are older than I. The Church is getting older, but fortunately, to take our places in the ranks are the younger people, not only of the Church, but who are coming out of the world into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in the various nations of the earth.

BLESSINGS OF CONFERENCE

It is wonderful to be here this morning. It hardly seems possible that there would not be room for everybody on a busy weekday, but the Tabernacle is filled to capacity, and the thing that impresses me most is that our Heavenly Father is keeping his word when he said, if even two or three shall meet together in his name, he will be there to bless them.

But this morning we are here in great numbers, and this morning the Spirit of the Lord is here, and all of us who have come prepared to be edified under the influence of it will not go away disappointed.

CALLING OF JOSEPH SMITH

Conditions in the world remind us of the fact that our Heavenly Father, knowing what would occur—realizing that the people of the world were not paying attention to him, and that those who were in charge of religious worship in the various nations of the earth had disregarded his teachings—a little over a hundred and twenty years ago called a boy, not yet fifteen years of age, one who had not been spoiled by the philosophies of men, but one who believed in God sufficiently to go out in the woods and ask the Lord which of all the churches he should join. He was no doubt astonished when the Father and the Son appeared to him and told him to join none of them, that they were all astray.

As a result of that remarkable experience of Joseph Smith as a boy, we see in the world today hundreds of thousands of men and women who have turned to our Heavenly Father, who have understood the purpose of life, and who have accepted the gospel of Jesus Christ, our Lord. Today we have more than five thousand of our brothers and sisters of this Church scattered throughout the world as missionaries, urging the people of the world not merely to be satisfied with what they now have, but to seek the Lord and go on, with the promise that if they will do that, they may know the truth. The Lord himself has said,

If any man will do his [God's] will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself. (John 7:17.)

Our work in the world, my brethren and sisters, is to reach out after all of our Heavenly Father's children at home and abroad; and if we will do that, the Spirit of the Lord will dwell in our souls; and we will be happy; and our homes will be the abiding place of his Holy Spirit.

NEED FOR REPENTANCE

When we realize the uncertainty that exists in the world today, realize that the strongest nations of the earth as well as the weaker ones are arming to the teeth preparing for war, we may know that it is only a question of time, unless they repent of their sins and turn to God, that war will come, and not only war, but pestilence and other destruction, until the human family will disappear from the earth.

The world does not know that brothers and sisters. Our Father's other children who are in different parts of the earth do not understand that—those who are not members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. They have an idea that they can legislate and fight it out, but there is only one way to enjoy peace and happiness in this world, and that is for the children of men to repent of their sins, turn to the Lord, honor him and keep his commandments. That is the only way.

Because the Lord knew that, one hundred and twenty years ago he established his Church, and from that time until now his sons and daughters have been going through the world pleading for the opportunity to share with their fellows the joy and happiness that results from keeping the commandments of God.

I am very grateful indeed to be here this morning. Since I was here with you last, I have not been in many parts of the world, but I have traveled, and I have found faithful members of the Church, found the wards and branches of the Church increasing in some sections to the point that their meetinghouses will not hold them. The result is that two wards, and in some cases three wards have to meet in the same house.

GROWTH OF CHURCH

Since world War II closed, we have built more than two hundred meetinghouses and dedicated them, and we are still building and are short of places in which our people may worship. The Church has increased during the past year more than any other year since it was organized. It is not our Church. It is the Church of Jesus Christ. God gave it the name, and it is flourishing. How happy we should be, not that we have increased in numbers in the organization that we belong to, but that more of our Father's children, more of his sons and daughters, have been brought to an understanding of the truth, and are coming into his organization that he prepared to teach us the way of life and lead us along the pathway of eternal happiness.

APPRECIATION FOR REMEMBRANCES

I want to take this occasion personally to thank you, my brethren and sisters, for your kindness to me. I have received a host of birthday congratulations and cards that it will not be possible for me to acknowledge, and if any of you do not receive any word of acknowledgment, I want you to know that I appreciate just the same your kind remembrance of me in my advancing years.

WORK OF THE LORD

This is the work of the Lord. This is the Church of Jesus Christ, and we have all the blessings that may be enjoyed by anybody anywhere in the world. That is what the Lord promised.

But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you. (Matthew 6:33.)

As we sit here in comfort in this marvelous auditorium today, listening to the sweet strains of music of the sons and daughters of our Heavenly Father, listening to the voices of those who are called to address us, we do so in peace and quiet, not in anxiety, as is the case in so many places in the world. Here we are in the land of Zion, and in this part of it that our Heavenly Father set apart for the gathering of his people more than a hundred years ago. Ought we not to be grateful?

BLESSINGS TO FAITHFUL

I cannot understand how people can be other than happy under all these circumstances. Think of our opportunities. There is not a desirable blessing, and all blessings are desirable, that we may wish to have that we may not enjoy if we are faithful to God and honor our membership in his Church. He has promised us that all things will come to us if we are righteous.

This morning among the many things that we enjoy, we are meeting in this house, built during the poverty of the Latter-day Saints, erected for the worship of our Heavenly Father; and as I look over this audience, I see people from nearly every section of the country and from parts of other nations of the world. We have the mission presidents who are here from their various fields of labor, as well as presidencies of stakes, bishops of wards, and presidents of branches. This audience is an example of a gathering of the Latter-day Saints.

I am sure that as we come together to worship we will go from here feeling grateful that we have had this privilege. Now again, may I say this is not the work of man. This is not the Church of Joseph Smith nor any of those who have succeeded him in the presidency. This is the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, named by the Lord himself.

I bear you witness of it in love and with a desire that all of our Father's children may learn the truth and accept of it, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

Welfare Report

The General Church Welfare Committee makes the following further report, indicating the production and distribution of bishops' storehouse commodities during the year 1949 and inventories at the close of the year:

Production, Distribution and Inventory of Commodities For Bishops' Storehouses

Production during the year 1949 amounted to 1,980,000 quarts of canned produce; 10,700,000 pounds of fresh vegetables, fruits, grains and grain products; 1,220,000 pounds of animal products and other foods; 94,000 pounds of cotton and wool; 13,500 tons of fuel; 236,500 articles of clothing, household supplies and furniture. The production in 1949 was 14% higher than 1948.

The distribution amounted to 1,300,000 quarts of canned produce; 4,000,000 pounds of vegetables, fruits, grain and grain products; 1,800,000 pounds of animal products and other foods; 12,500 tons of fuel and 468,000 articles of clothing, household supplies, furniture, etc. The value of the articles distributed is $1,095,000.00, which is an increase of 15% over 1948.

Present inventories, amounting to 1,700,000 quarts of canned produce; 5,600,000 pounds of grain and fresh vegetables; 3,800 tons of coal and 635,000 other items, having a total value of $1,075,000.00 are 16% higher than the inventories of a year ago.

In addition to distribution in the United States and Canada, as reported above, there have been sent from welfare stocks to foreign missions, 250,000 quarts of canned produce, 63,000 pounds of meat and lard, 570,000 pounds of grain and grain products, and 100,000 pounds of beans and sugar. The total relief supplies sent to foreign missions to December 31, 1949 (shipments commenced October 29, 1945) amount to 41 freight carloads of clothing and 99 freight carloads of food; a total of 140 cars. The value of these commodities is $1,232,000.00. They were shipped at a cost, including transportation, cartons, insurance, etc., of $504,000.00, a total of $1,736,000.00. They were sent to Austria, Belgium, Great Britain, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Netherlands, Norway, Japan, China, and Tahiti.

Assistance Rendered

There have been from 17,913 to 55,460 persons assisted through the bishops' storehouse program each year since 1938. In 1949, there were 38,280 persons so assisted in the United States and Canada. This is an increase over 1948 of 5,501 persons. We also sent to Europe food and clothing to help 7,000 persons, or a total of about 45,000 persons assisted in 1949.

From 1938 to 1949 more than 1,970 families have been helped to become self-supporting, and 14,824 families have been assisted in other ways. During this same period, $737,000.00 has been paid in wages to persons working at Desert Industries. These individuals, most of whom are handicapped or aged and therefore not able to earn a livelihood in commercial pursuits, have collected and processed salvage materials valued at $1,237,000.00 from which sales have been made amounting to $1,158,000.00. The Deseret Clothing Factory, another branch of the Welfare Plan, has paid $296,000.00 in wages to employees, most of whom are widows and elderly persons.

Budget Production and Other Projects

To produce the 1949 budget, 646 crop projects and 290 livestock projects were operated, on which 81,000 man days of work were donated. For purposes other than the production of the budget, 337 crop projects, 144 livestock projects were operated during the year and 16,000 individuals using welfare canneries processed, for their own use, 1,100,000 cans of food.

About twice the amount of food on the accepted 1950 welfare production budget could be had from a normal yield of the welfare projects now owned if the entire yield were turned to the storehouses. This would not be a balanced diet as set up in the budget, however, because the production would be short in dairy and some other products and would be long in garden and row crops.

Persons Relinquishing Government Relief

Obedient to the command of the Lord that men should be self-supporting, looking to the Church for necessary help, 3,184 persons have, during the past seven years relinquished their position on government relief rolls. Of this number, 1,418 have been rehabilitated and are receiving no aid from the Church nor, so far as known, from any other gratuitous source; 1,121 are yet receiving part of their support from the Church; and 645 are receiving all their needs from the Church.

Placement and Counseling Service

During 1949, 3,945 persons were given occupational counseling resulting in the solution of their employment problems, and 4,982 other persons were placed in remunerative employment.

President George Albert Smith:

President Clark did not call attention to the fact that the Church is still solvent, after giving away all that money.

Elder Orval W. Adams will now read the report of the Church auditors, after which President David O. McKay of the First Presidency will present the names of the General Authorities, general officers, and general auxiliary officers of the Church for the sustaining vote of this general conference.

REPORT OF CHURCH AUDITING COMMITTEE

Elder Orval W. Adams read the following report:

April 3, 1950

President George Albert Smith and Counselors

47 East South Temple

Salt Lake City, Utah

Dear Brethren:

The Church Auditing Committee has reviewed the annual financial report of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints for the year ending December 31, 1949.

The accounting system and records were found to be adequate and are meticulously maintained. Disbursements of Church funds is controlled through a comprehensive budget system, which includes checks and balances to properly safeguard expenditures. The funds are being care-

PRESIDENT GEORGE F. RICHARDS

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

The following is a quotation from the Pearl of Great Price, the word of the Lord to his servant Moses, the Prophet:

For behold, this is my work and my glory—to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man. (Moses 1:39.)

MAN'S SALVATION

Hence we have the gospel and the Church of the Master as enjoyed by the Latter-day Saints of today, for it is through these sources that he purposes the accomplishment of all his designs pertaining to man's salvation.

There are therefore tremendous responsibilities resting upon his Church, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, pertaining to the salvation of the children of men; one of the greatest of which is to preach this gospel of the kingdom in all the world as a witness unto all nations before the end shall come.

And what is the Church doing about it? It is keeping about five thousand missionaries in the mission fields and stake missions of the Church, with several hundred in excess of that number at the present time in the nations of the earth and on the islands of the seas, where an intensive work of proselyting is being carried on and a wonderful work of conversion is being accomplished. There is also a condition at home, in the stakes of Zion, which calls for able missionaries who are zealous for the cause of the Master, and for the welfare and salvation of their fellow men.

ADULT MEMBERS OF AARONIC PRIESTHOOD

According to the latest statistics compiled in the office of the Presiding Bishopric, there are 53,392 male members of the Church over twenty-one years of age who hold some office in the Aaronic Priesthood who have not received the Melchizedek Priesthood. These are designated as adult members of the Aaronic Priesthood. There are 17,643 male members of the Church over twenty-one years of age who hold no priesthood at all. Taking these two groups together, we have 71,035 male members over twenty-one years of age who do not hold the Melchizedek Priesthood; a sufficient number to fill this Tabernacle to seating capacity seven times over, estimating the seating capacity at ten thousand.

These figures are appalling, and they represent only those living in the organized stakes of the Church. The missions have their quota also.

Worthy boys of the Church at twelve years of age are supposed to receive the office of a deacon in the Aaronic Priesthood; at fifteen years the office of teacher; at seventeen years, the office of priest, and at nineteen years the office of elder in the Melchizedek Priesthood.

IMPORTANCE OF PRIESTHOOD

Statistics show that there are in the Church 3,648 male members between the ages of twelve and twenty-one years who hold no office in the priesthood.

One may ask, how important is it that male members of the Church should receive the priesthood; and how serious for them not to do so? The Lord answers this question on this wise:

And wo unto all those who come not unto this priesthood. (D. & C. 84:42.)

As Latter-day Saints, the goal of our existence and purpose in life is to obtain an exaltation in the kingdom and presence of the Father and the Son; and a man may not attain to that glory without receiving the Melchizedek Priesthood. This being true, the importance of receiving the Melchizedek Priesthood by the men of the Church is as important as is salvation itself.

The holy endowments administered in the temples of the Lord are to prepare men and women to enter into the celestial kingdom and presence of God the Father and his Son Jesus Christ. But to receive these endowments a man must first receive the Melchizedek Priesthood. Marriage for time and eternity as ordained of God is necessary for man's salvation.

... neither is the man without the woman, neither the woman without the man, in the Lord. (I Cor. 11:11.)

ETERNAL MARRIAGE

But a man must receive the Melchizedek Priesthood and endowments before he can go to the temple and be married for time and eternity—hence, the importance of receiving the Melchizedek Priesthood.

Of the 71,035 men of the Church over twenty-one years of age who have not received the Melchizedek Priesthood, a large percentage of them, no doubt, are married and rearing families. Not having received the Melchizedek Priesthood, we know that their marriages are not for eternity as ordained of God, and that their children are not being born under the new and everlasting covenant of marriage. Men of the Church who have been married for time only are in danger of losing their wives and their children if they do not take the necessary steps to receive the priesthood and sealing ordinances "... my Spirit [the Spirit of God] will not always strive with man..." (Ether 2:15). Neither will the patience of a good woman. For example, a man and woman came to the temple recommended for marriage, and with them were two children born to the woman by a former husband. The mother desired the children to be sealed to her and to the man to whom she was about to be sealed. But how about the father of those children and his rights in the matter?

RULES IN TEMPLE WORK

There is a rule (rule 30) governing in temple work which says:

Children should not be sealed to other than their own parents, except for important reasons, and then only by special authorization of the temple president.

Hence, the appeal to the temple president: The rights of the father in this case must receive consideration. The father being dead, the mother was the only witness available. Her story was as follows:

The father and mother before marriage were members of the Church, and when contemplating marriage, she desired to go to the temple for marriage, but he had not been living his religion so as to be counted worthy of a recommend for that purpose. She decided to marry him by the civil law with the understanding, and his promise, that he would make himself worthy, and they would later go to the temple and be sealed. He failed to keep his promise. Several years after these children were born, he was taken ill and finally passed away. She said she nursed him through a long spell of sickness before his death and felt that she had done her full duty by him as his wife, but she did not want to be sealed to him for eternity, and she wanted her children to be sealed to her and the man of her choice.

The temple rules (rule 36) provide that where a man and woman are married by the civil law and have children and are afterward separated, so that the children cannot be sealed to both parents, if one has been altogether worthy and the other unworthy, the children may be sealed to the worthy parent and his or her sealed companion.

Under this rule, permission was given for the children to be sealed to the mother and the man to whom she is sealed; thus the father, through his unworthiness and neglect, has lost his wife and his children. This is but one case in a class which is far too numerous.

LOSS THROUGH NEGLECT

There is another class of members who, without the element of unworthiness, but by pure neglect, may lose their wives and children. A Latter-day Saint girl and boy contemplating marriage decided that they would marry outside of the temple and later go to the temple for sealing. Time went by until they had three children, and the husband became ill and died. Sometime later a Latter-day Saint man came along, courted and married the young widow, with the understanding that they would go to the temple later, and he would act as proxy in having her and her children sealed to her dead husband. This contemplated work was delayed until she had three children by her second husband, who now thinks that he has as much right to her for eternity as has her dead husband. The woman desires to know to which husband she and her six children should be sealed. She was told that she would have to decide to which husband she would be sealed, and that to him and her all the six children are to be sealed. She is likely to take the living husband, in which event the first husband loses his wife and his children, through his own neglect. This represents another class of cases, and they, with slight variations, are numerous in the Church: evidences of the folly of neglect of religious opportunities.

LOSS THROUGH UNWORTHINESS

Another unfortunate class consists of those who have been married for time and eternity, and later the husband becomes lukewarm, inactive, and unworthy, resulting in a very unhappy marriage. The husband dies; the wife obtains a cancellation of their sealing; she later marries a man for time and eternity; the first husband has lost his wife, and possibly his children, through his unworthiness.

For the benefit of these men, their wives, and their children, no stone should be left unturned in an effort to improve these conditions. For the Lord's sake and that of his Church, also, we should try to love these people into activity and service. He needs them in the leadership and organizations of the Church, in quorums, wards, stakes, and missions. They owe it to the Lord that they put themselves in a position and condition to be used in his service.

MISSIONARY WORK

Individual missionary work on the part of active members conforms to the Lord's way with indifferent Church members and with non-members alike. In the Doctrine and Covenants we have the word of the Lord as follows:

Behold, I sent you out to testify and warn the people, and it becometh every man who hath been warned to warn his neighbor.

Therefore, they are left without excuse, and their sins are upon their own heads. (D. & C. 88:81-82.)

From this revelation, I understand that the Lord expects every person who has received the gospel to be a missionary for him throughout his life—not necessarily to go abroad by special call only, but to seek opportunity to preach the gospel to his non-member neighbors as well. We should not be afraid to offer to our neighbor or to any person who is desirous of obtaining salvation, that which, if accepted, and its precepts followed, will be to them as valuable as it is to us, which is of more value than anything else in life or than life itself.

That there are living among us many people who need what we have to offer—the gospel message—there can be no question from the fact that they are being converted in great numbers within the stakes and wards of the Church. The souls of these inactive members and nonmembers among us are as precious as the souls of people in foreign countries and in the islands of the seas where our missionaries are laboring. In conclusion let me read a few lines of poetry.

How sweet 'twill be at evening,
 If you and I can say
 Good Master, we've been seeking
 The lambs that went astray—
 Heartsore and faint from hunger
 We heard them making moan,
 And lo! We've come at nightfall
 Bringing them safely home.

May the Lord add his blessings, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER ANTOINE R. IVINS

Of the First Council of the Seventy

I hope, my brethren and sisters, the words of testimony that I shall bear to you today may be prompted by the Spirit of our Heavenly Father, that I may carry on in the same fine spirit that has characterized the things that have been said already.

CONVERSIONS TO THE GOSPEL

I am extremely happy today in the fact that I am here; that I am, with you, a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints; that with you I have a testimony as to the truth of the gospel and the authenticity of the priesthood which we bear.

It is almost a hundred years since a missionary in New England found my mother's father and baptized him into the Church. He became one of the Apostles of the Church and was sent to open the missions of the Church in the Scandinavian lands.

Yesterday Dr. [John A.] Widtsoe told me that it is quite likely that nearly half of the people who are in the Church today can trace their ancestry to Scandinavia. About the same time a missionary in New Jersey found my father and brought him into the Church, my father eventually to become a counselor to President Grant. When I think of the weight of the responsibility I have in representing them, it is almost more than I can carry.

MISSIONARY BODY

I stand before you this morning representing the seventies of the Church, the great missionary body especially set apart for that purpose. It is our problem to see that the work initiated by the Twelve is properly carried into the world, and that the people who are susceptible to the teaching and the spirit of God shall have the opportunity of coming into the Church where they can receive the benefits and the blessings which President [George F.] Richards has indicated in his remarks this morning.

We are not all in the mission field, but we still have that duty. The presidents of our priesthood quorums, all of the Melchizedek Priesthood quorums, and especially the members of the seventies' quorums and their presidencies have the responsibility of preparing men for this priesthood, the purpose of which, I believe, is to perfect men—bring them to a state as near perfection as possible so that they may be worthy of the heavy duties imposed by the receipt of the priesthood.

I fear that many of us who have those responsible positions of presidency in the Melchizedek Priesthood don't realize the weight of the responsibility that we have. What are we expected to do for the members of our quorums? Are we to sit and preside over them, assuming that all of them are firm in the faith and know the whys and wherefores of all these things, or is it our duty to look after the members of our quorums and implant in their hearts the principles of righteous living, as well as to preside over their meetings and keep the quorums moving along nicely?

PERFECTING OF QUORUM MEMBERS

I believe the great weight of their responsibilities is in the perfecting of the members of their quorums, and since this great body of people to whom President Richards referred is not in any of these Melchizedek Priesthood quorums, I believe it the duty of the seventies of the Church to reach out and find them. When they find them, it is their duty to teach them, to lead them back into activity. And, of course, in order best to do that, they should all be exemplary bearers of the priesthood. They should live the principles of the gospel as nearly perfectly as possible so that when they go to these men they may have influence with them which comes from the presence of the Spirit of God.

There are in some of the stakes as many as two hundred and fifty to three hundred men outside of the priesthood over twenty-one years of age, and when I think of the responsibility of this group of seventies toward that group of men, I am appalled. I wonder how I am going to teach them their tasks, for it devolves upon the Council of which I am a member to teach the leaders of this group of men their duty and how to perform it.

FULL FAITH REQUIRED

What should they be, these men in the priesthood, in order to be worthy of it? They should not only have full faith in the principles of the gospel, know that God lives, and that he instituted this great organization, but they should also live so as to be exemplary and useful men in their communities.

Every man in the quorums of the Melchizedek Priesthood should be an honest man, a man who would not deliberately incur an obligation when he had a fair assurance that he would not be able to complete it or carry it through; a man who would turn every resource in his power to the realization and fulfilment of a promise he had made; a man whose verbal promise, without witnesses even, is just as potent, just as powerful over him as a promise before a notary public and witnesses. An honest man, in other words, should be every man who bears the Melchizedek Priesthood.

He should likewise be a diligent man, so that he could not only carry his own burdens and the burdens of his family, but that he could also find time to seek out these other people and teach them the gospel.

TIME FOR SERVICE

We think, many of us, that we do not have time for that, but if we will find time for it, we will be surprised how much there is that we can spend in the interest of our fellows, much of that time being spent now to no worthy purpose and to no really significant accomplishment.

I remember the story of a bishop who had a herd of sheep and was prospered; then he bought two herds of sheep, and still he prospered. The authorities made him president of the stake, and he became so well off that he bought three herds of sheep, and then he couldn't find time to be president of the stake, so he asked to be released. Within the next little while he found out that he didn't have any sheep, and he wasn't president of his stake, or the bishop of his ward, and he wasn't even happy.

DEPENDABILITY

We must be diligent enough and sincere enough in our sense of responsibility to our brothers that we will find time to seek them out and help them. If we are honest and diligent, we must also be dependable. We must be such men that when the leaders of the Church assign us a responsibility and we say we will accept it, they may rest assured that we will do it, and the leaders will have no more worry about it.

Dependability is one of the best attributes of a fine man, so we must develop that, and if we will, we will be useful. We should all of us strive to be useful in our community, men that others respect because of our fine qualities.

If we can develop these and a few other tendencies so that the men with whom we labor will have no cause to find fault with us when we go to them, we will have an influence with them that we should have.

DUTY BETWEEN MEETINGS

Now, how many of us who are presidents of the priesthood quorums, the Melchizedek Priesthood quorums, feel that we have a duty to our fellows between meetings? How many of us ever go to them and sit down by the haystack or on the ditch bank, or take an automobile ride with them and talk over their responsibilities, especially with those who are not up to the full performance of their duty?

It is not the duty of the president of a priesthood quorum to work only with the members who come out to meeting every meeting day. That is the least of his responsibilities. His responsibility is to the lame and the halt, the indecisive and the inactive members of his quorum, and if and when he can so discharge his duty as to bring one or two or three or more of those inactive men into full activity, then he is a worthy president of a quorum.

Now, can we do it? Can we who have this responsibility first come to know actually and deep down in our hearts that Christ lives and that we hold the right to represent him in the ordinances that will save men? Let's not make it a parrot-like thing to bear testimony to these truths, but let's know deep down in our hearts.

After one of the general conferences, one of our prominent brethren received a letter from another prominent man who had listened to the testimonies of the conference, and he indicated that he was a bit fearful that these testimonies become routine with us. Now that just must not be. We must have in our hearts a testimony that is actual and true, to know the truth of these things, and then we must feel our responsibility if we are to preside over the quorums of the priesthood.

We should go out and seek the lost among us, and we have heard this morning how numerous they are. If we can't do that as presidents of priesthood quorums and as members of priesthood quorums, the quorums serve us to little purpose; for, after all, those quorums exist for us, their members. They are supposed to offer the means of bringing us as near as possible to a state of perfection so that we can always be worthy to go into the temple of God and receive there the wonderful ordinances which are the gifts of the priesthood of God.

I pray that we may have that type of testimony in our hearts as leaders of the priesthood and as members of it, for it is the greatest and grandest power under heaven that has ever been given to man.

I bear you this testimony as it comes from the bottom of my heart, brothers and sisters. God bless you. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

President Antoine R. Ivins of the First Council of Seventy has just spoken.

Brother June B. Sharp, past president of the South African Mission—and I may say that he has been home for some time past, and this is the first opportunity we have had of hearing from him—will talk to us now.

ELDER JUNE B. SHARP

Former President of the South African Mission

I can assure you, my brothers and sisters, it is with fear and trembling I stand before you and in the spirit of deep humility. Yesterday I attended a meeting of the presidents of the missions in the Temple. It was a day of feasting and a day of testimony bearing, the like of which I have never enjoyed before.

I want to assure you, my brothers and sisters, I have most thoroughly enjoyed my experience in the South African Mission. I have spent eight years there and I have learned to love the people of that land, to know their ways, and to appreciate their fineness. Many of you think of Africa as being the dark continent and of the animals and of the natives, but for three hundred years the white people have been settling in that land and they have been doing a wonderful work. Many of our relatives are there who fled to that land for religious freedom, even as many of our ancestors fled to this land that they might be able to worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience. And when I think of mingling with fine men like Brother Thomas Wilson, and fine women like Sister Johanna Fouire and her husband, who some day will become a member of this Church, I rejoice, my brothers and sisters, in the choice men and women, sons and daughters of God, who have accepted the Gospel of Jesus Christ in that land.

Generally speaking, the missionaries there are well. They are doing a fine work. They are searching out the honest in heart, and the Lord is blessing them richly, accordingly as they serve him and are diligent in the work that is theirs to do.

I am grateful and happy in the testimony of the gospel that I bear, for I know with every fiber of my being that it is true, and I feel something like David of old when he stood before the giant. The giant told him: "Am I a dog that thou comest to me with a staff and a staff?"

And David said to him: "I come to thee in the name of Israel's God." And in that power and in that strength David was blessed that he could accomplish the purpose and the mission that was given to him.

When I went into the South African Mission I went there feeling that certainly unless the Lord blessed me as he did Nephi of old I could never accomplish the work that was mine to do. And as experiences came and as responsibilities came, I bear witness to you, my brothers and sisters, that so also came the Spirit of the Lord to guide and direct and assist in the work that was ours to do.

All the days of my life I shall be grateful for that experience. All the days of my life I shall never be able to repay this great Church for the blessings I have received in the callings that have been mine, and I hope and pray that I shall always express my gratitude and show by my actions the gratitude that I bear for the privileges and the opportunities that have been mine.

I honor and sustain these my brethren with all my heart and soul, and I honor them in their great and high calling, and I do it humbly, and in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

The closing prayer will be offered by President William F. Edwards of the New York Stake, after which this conference will stand adjourned until two o'clock this afternoon. The proceedings of that session will be broadcast over KSL of Salt Lake City, and by arrangement with KSL over the other stations that you are now listening to. The conference will also be broadcast over television station, KSL, channel 5.

Any important messages and calls that have come to us for persons supposed to be in attendance at the conference will be announced at the dismissal of the meeting over the loud speaking system on the grounds. Everyone will do well to listen carefully to such announcements.

The choir music for this session has been furnished by the Brigham Young University Choir, with Elder John R. Halliday conducting and Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ.

The benediction will be pronounced by President William F. Edwards of the New York Stake.

President William F. Edwards of the New York Stake offered the closing prayer.

Conference adjourned until 2:00 p.m.

FIRST DAY AFTERNOON MEETING

The second session of the Conference convened in the Tabernacle at 2:00 p.m., April 6.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

This is the second session of the One Hundred Twentieth Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square, Salt Lake City, Utah.

President Smith is presiding and he has asked the one speaking, President Clark, to conduct the services.

These services will be broadcast in the Assembly Hall over a loud speaking system and by television. All general sessions of the Conference will be seen and heard in the Assembly Hall in the same way.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over Station KSL of Salt Lake City, and by arrangement through KSL, over the following stations:

In Utah: KSUB at Cedar City, KSVC at Richfield, KJAM at Vernal, KVNUE at Logan.

In Idaho: KGEM at Boise, KID at Idaho Falls, KEYY at Pocatello, KBIO at Burley.

In Oregon: KBKR at Baker, KSRV at Ontario.

And by transcription: KTYL at Mesa, Arizona, and KEXO at Grand Junction, Colorado.

This session will also be televised over the KSL television station, channel 5.

The choir singing for this session will be by the Brigham Young University Choir, with Elder Newell Weight conducting, and Elder Frank W. Asper, at the organ.

We will begin the services by the Brigham Young University Choir rendering "Christ, the Lord, Is Risen Today."

The opening prayer will be offered by President A. Lewis Elggren of the Liberty Stake, Salt Lake City, Utah.

Singing by the Brigham Young University Choir, "Christ, the Lord, Is Risen Today."

President A. Lewis Elggren of the Liberty Stake offered the opening prayer.

The Brigham Young University Choir sang, "The Heavens Resound."

President Clark:

President David O. McKay of the First Presidency will be the first speaker this afternoon.

PRESIDENT DAVID O. MCKAY

Second Counselor in the First Presidency

Most sincerely I join President George Albert Smith in expressing appreciation for the inspirational singing furnished us this day by the Brigham Young University students, and equally inspirational is their presence here—three hundred and twenty young men and young women devoting their service willingly, gladly, to the inspiring and upbuilding of the members of the Church in attendance at this conference.

ANCHORED TO THE TRUTH

I feel impressed to say to you young folks that I know of no greater blessing you can receive than to be anchored to the truth, and by that I mean three things: First, always to feel a surety that this Church is divinely guided. Second, that the Lord has authorized his servants and placed upon them the duty to proclaim to the world the restoration and truth of the gospel of Jesus Christ. Third, and most applicable to us all, that inspiration from the Lord is a reality, just as real as the love each one of us has for his loved ones. Young men and young women, God bless you that this testimony may be yours as it is mine this day!

INDIVIDUAL LIBERTY

... Remember, my brethren, ... ye are free; ye are permitted to act for yourselves; for behold, God hath given unto you a knowledge and he hath made you free. (Helaman 14:30.)

These words taken from the Book of Helaman indicate the purport of what I should like to say this afternoon. I pray for his inspiration and your sympathy and prayers that I may give this message in accordance with his will.

Next to the bestowal of life itself, the right to direct that life is God's greatest gift to man. Among the immediate obligations and duties resting upon members of the Church today, and one of the most urgent and pressing for attention and action of all liberty-loving people, is the preservation of individual liberty. Freedom of choice is more to be treasured than any possession earth can give. It is inherent in the spirit of man. It is a divine gift to every normal being. Whether born in abject poverty or shackled at birth by inherited riches, everyone has this most precious of all life's endowments—the gift of free agency; man's inherited and inalienable right.

Free agency is the impelling source of the soul's progress. It is the purpose of the Lord that man become like him. In order for man to achieve this it was necessary for the Creator first to make him free. "Personal liberty," says Bulwer-Lytton, "is the paramount essential to human dignity and human happiness."

The poet summarizes the value of this principle as follows:

Know this, that every soul is free
To choose his life and what he'll be,
For this eternal truth is given,
That God will force no man to heaven.

He'll call, persuade, direct aright—
And bless with wisdom, love and light—
In nameless ways be good and kind,
But never force the human mind.

Freedom and reason make us men;
 Take these away, what are we then?
 Mere animals, and just as well
 The beasts may think of heav'n or hell.

—William C. Gregg

With free agency there comes responsibility. If a man is to be rewarded for righteousness and punished for evil, then common justice demands that he be given the power of independent action. A knowledge of good and evil is essential to man's progress on earth. If he were coerced to do right at all times, or were helplessly enticed to commit sin, he would merit neither a blessing for the first nor punishment for the second.

Says the Prophet Lehi,

Wherefore, the Lord God gave unto man that he should act for himself. Wherefore, man could not act for himself save it should be that he was enticed by the one or the other. . . .

Wherefore, men are free according to the flesh; and all things are given them which are expedient unto man. And they are free to choose liberty and eternal life, through the great mediation of all men, or to choose captivity and death, according to the captivity and power of the devil; for he seeketh that all men might be miserable like unto himself. (II Nephi 2:16-27.)

MAN'S RESPONSIBILITY

There is more of that in II Nephi to which I call your attention.

Thus we see that man's responsibility is correspondingly operative with his free agency. Actions in harmony with divine law and the laws of nature will bring happiness, and those in opposition to divine truth, misery. Man is responsible not only for every deed, but also for every idle word and thought. Said the Savior:

. . . every idle word that men shall speak they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment. (Matthew 12:36.)

As a boy I questioned that truth when I first heard it expressed by my father. I remember saying to myself, "Not even the Lord knows what I am thinking now." I was very much surprised, therefore, when later as a student in the university, I read the following in [William] James' psychology about the effect of thought and action on human character. I am giving it today for the young people particularly:

SPINNING OUR OWN FATES

We are spinning our own fates good or evil, and never to be undone. Every smallest stroke of virtue or of vice leaves its ever so little scar. The drunken Rip Van Winkle, in Jefferson's play, excuses himself for every fresh dereliction by saying, "I won't count this time." Well he may not count it, and a kind Heaven may not count it; but it is being counted none the less. Down among his nerve-cells and fibers the molecules are counting it, registering and storing it up to be used against him when the next temptation comes. Nothing we ever do is, in strict scientific literalness, wiped out. Of course, this has its good side as well as its bad one. As we become permanent drunkards by so many separate drinks, so we become saints in the moral, and authorities and experts in the practical and scientific spheres, by so many separate acts and hours of work. Let no youth have any anxiety about the upshot of his education, whatever the line of it may be. If he keep faithfully busy each hour of the working day, he may safely leave the final result to itself. He can with perfect certainty count on waking up some fine morning, to find himself one of the competent ones of his generation, in whatever pursuit he may have singled out. Silently, between all the details of his business, the power of judging in all that class of matter will have built itself up within him as a possession that will never pass away. Young people should know this truth in advance. The ignorance of it has probably engendered more discouragement and faint-heartedness in youths embarking on arduous careers than all other causes put together.*

PERSONAL INFLUENCE

There is another responsibility correlated and even coexistent with free agency, which is too infrequently emphasized, and that is the effect not only of a person's actions but also of his thoughts upon others. Man radiates what he is, and that radiation affects to a greater or less degree every person who comes within that radiation.

Of the power of this personal influence William George Jordan impressively writes:

Into the hands of every individual is given a marvelous power for good or evil—the silent, unconscious, unseen influence of his life. This is simply the constant radiation of what man really is, not what he pretends to be. Every man, by his mere living, is radiating sympathy, or sorrow, or morbidness, or cynicism, or happiness, or hope, or any of a hundred other qualities. Life is a state of constant radiation and absorption; to exist is to radiate; to exist is to be the recipient of radiation.

Man cannot escape for one moment from this radiation of his character, this constantly weakening or strengthening of others. He cannot evade the responsibility by saying it is an unconscious influence. He can select the qualities that he will permit to be radiated. He can cultivate sweetness, calmness, trust, generosity, truth, justice, loyalty, nobility—make them vitally active in his character—and by these qualities he will constantly affect the world.

PROGRESS THROUGH FREEDOM

Freedom of the will and the responsibility associated with it are fundamental aspects of Jesus' teachings. Throughout his ministry he emphasized the worth of the individual, and exemplified what is now expressed in modern revelation as the work and glory of God—"To bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man." Only through the divine gift of soul freedom is such progress possible.

Force, on the other hand, emanates from Lucifer himself. Even in man's pre-existent state, Satan sought power to compel the human family to do his will by suggesting that the free agency of man be inoperative. If his plan had been accepted, human beings would have become mere puppets in the hands of a dictator, and the purpose of man's coming to earth would have been frustrated. Satan's proposed system of government, therefore, was rejected, and the principle of free agency established in its place.

FORCE RULES TODAY

Force rules in the world today; consequently, our government must keep armies abroad, build navies and air squadrons, create atom bombs to protect itself from threatened aggression of a nation which seems to listen to no other appeal but compulsion.

Individual freedom is threatened by international rivalries, inter-racial animosities, and false political ideals. Unwise legislation, too often prompted by political expediency, is periodically being enacted that seductively undermines man's right of free agency, robs him of his rightful liberties, and makes him but a cog in the crushing wheel of a regimentation which, if persisted in, will end in dictatorship.

The Magna Carta, signed by King John at Runnymede, June 15, 1215, was an expression of freedom-loving men against a usurping king. It was a guarantee of civil and personal liberty. These guarantees later found fuller and complete expression in the Constitution of the United States. Today, seven hundred years later, consider what is happening in Great Britain! With nationalization of industries, planned economy, control of all productive power, including persons and property, that country of liberty-loving people is on the verge of a totalitarian state as dictatorial as that which the feudal barons and the people wrested from King John. People are bargaining their liberty for a chimera of equality and security, not realizing that the more power you give the central government, the more you curtail your individual freedom.

GOVERNMENTS THE SERVANTS

Governments are the servants, not the masters of the people. All who love the Constitution of the United States can vow with Thomas Jefferson, who, when he was president, said,

I have sworn upon the altar of God eternal hostility against every form of tyranny over the mind of man.

He later said:

To preserve our independence, we must not let our rulers load us with perpetual debt. We must take our choice between economy and liberty, or profusion and servitude. If we run into such debts, we must be taxed in our meat and drink, in our necessities and in our comforts, in our labors and in our amusements.

If we can prevent the government from wasting the labors of the people under pretense of caring for them, they will be happy. The same prudence which in private life would forbid our paying our money for unexplained projects, forbids it in the disposition of public money. We are endeavoring to reduce the government to the practice of rigid economy to avoid burdening the people and arming the magistrate with a patronage of money which might be used to corrupt the principles of our government.

FREEDOM OF WORSHIP

This principle of free agency and the right of each individual to be free not only to think but also to act within bounds that grant to every one else the same privilege, are sometimes violated even by churches that claim to teach the doctrine of Jesus Christ. The attitude of any organization toward this principle of freedom is a pretty good index to its nearness to the teachings of Christ or to those of the Evil One. For example, I read recently the statement of a leading clergyman who claimed the divine right of his church, wherever it was in power, to prohibit any other church from promulgating its doctrine. . . . And, "if religious minorities actually exist, they shall have only a de facto existence without opportunity to spread their beliefs."

He who thus tramples underfoot one of God's greatest gifts to man, who would deny another the right to think and worship as he pleases, propagates error and makes his own church in that regard as far as he represents it a propagator of evil.

Contrast this unchristian-like stand with the statement of the Prophet Joseph Smith:

We claim the privilege of worshipping Almighty God according to the dictates of our own conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may. (Eleventh Article of Faith.)

REVELATION ON GOVERNMENT

And, again, in one of the greatest revelations on government ever given, we read the following:

That the rights of the priesthood are inseparably connected with the powers of heaven, and that the powers of heaven cannot be controlled nor handled only upon the principles of righteousness.

That they may be conferred upon us, it is true; but when we undertake to cover our sins, or to gratify our pride, our vain ambition, or to exercise control or dominion or compulsion upon the souls of the children of men, in any degree of unrighteousness, behold, the heavens withdraw themselves; the Spirit of the Lord is grieved; and when it is withdrawn, Amen to the priesthood or the authority of that man.

No power or influence can or ought to be maintained by virtue of the priesthood, only by persuasion, by long-suffering, by gentleness and meekness, and by love unfeigned;

By kindness, and pure knowledge, which shall greatly enlarge the soul without hypocrisy, and without guile—

Reproving betimes with sharpness, when moved upon by the Holy Ghost; and then showing forth afterwards an increase of love toward him whom thou hast reproved, lest he esteem thee to be his enemy;

That he may know that thy faithfulness is stronger than the cords of death.

Let thy bowels also be full of charity towards all men, and to the household of faith, and let virtue garnish thy thoughts unceasingly; then shall thy confidence wax strong in the presence of God; and the doctrine of the priesthood shall distil upon thy soul as the dews from heaven.

The Holy Ghost shall be thy constant companion, and thy scepter an unchanging scepter of righteousness and truth; and thy dominion shall be an everlasting dominion, and without compulsory means it shall flow unto thee forever and ever. (D. & C. 121:36-37; 41-46.)

If you can find more sublime thoughts anywhere in literature than expressed in that great revelation, please let me know where they are.

PRESERVATION OF FREEDOM

In conclusion, I repeat that no greater immediate responsibility rests upon members of the Church, upon all citizens of this Republic and of neighboring Republics than to protect the freedom vouchsafed by the Constitution of the United States.

Let us, by exercising our privileges under the Constitution—

(1) Preserve our right to worship God according to the dictates of our conscience,

(2) Preserve the right to work when and where we choose. No free man should be compelled to pay tribute in order to realize this God-given privilege. Read in the Doctrine and Covenants this statement:

... it is not right that any man should be in bondage one to another. (Ibid., 101:79.)

(3) Feel free to plan and to reap without the handicap of bureaucratic interference.

(4) Devote our time, means, and life if necessary, to hold inviolate those laws which will secure to each individual the free exercise of conscience, the right and control of property, and the protection of life.

To sum up this whole question: In these days of uncertainty and unrest, liberty-loving people's greatest responsibility and paramount duty is to preserve and proclaim the freedom of the individual, his relationship to Deity, and, (repeating the message of our President, to which I subscribe with all my soul) the necessity of obedience to the principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ—only thus will mankind find peace and happiness:

... If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free. (John 8:31-32.)

God enlighten our minds to comprehend our responsibility, to proclaim the truth and maintain freedom throughout the world, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER THORPE B. ISAACSON

Second Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

President Smith, President Clark, President McKay, my dear brothers and sisters, friends of the radio and television audience, I sincerely ask you for an interest in your faith and prayers, because I need that sustaining power.

I confess to you, and I confess to all of the young people of the Church that I have humbly prayed and fasted for the blessings of the Lord while I should speak to you. I want to bear testimony to you, humbly and sincerely, that I couldn't say anything worth while, I am sure, without the blessings of the Lord.

I know that God hears and answers prayers. I know that he sustains us in righteousness and in humility. Without him we cannot succeed, and with him we cannot fail.

PURPOSE OF CONFERENCE

We have met here as members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints to worship God, our Eternal Father, and to bear testimony as to the truth of this work. We have assembled to receive counsel and advice, given under the inspiration of the Lord. We come here to this great Tabernacle conference after conference because we know that God lives, and we are anxious and happy to bear that testimony to the world.

Many who cannot attend this conference listen to the radio, others see on television, and thousands of others will read the proceedings of the conference. We come here not for any selfish reason; we come here in humility; we come here and assemble in the name of our Lord, Jesus Christ, and the Lord has said to us, as President Smith reported this morning, and quoted, and his Spirit is here with us, and it has been with us today in rich abundance.

For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them, (Matthew 18:20.)

There isn't anyone who attends these conferences or any conferences of the Church in the stakes of Zion but who can partake of the Spirit of the Lord if he will come to those conferences humbly. We come here together in prayer, extending thanksgiving to God, our Father. We come here to thank him for the blessings that we enjoy as a Church, and I am referring to the entire membership of the Church. We should try to be truly grateful and loyal to the Church, first and always.

We come here to unite our faith. We come here to pray to God our Father for the blessings of the world at large. We pray for the sick and the needy and the poor, for those who are discouraged. We pray for the inactive. We love all men, and we love God our Eternal Father.

TESTIMONIES

I have enjoyed so much visiting the stakes of the Church, listening to the testimonies given at these stake conferences, and my testimony has been strengthened. My faith has been made strong because I have listened to men bear testimony in the name of the Lord, Jesus Christ.

I am grateful for the privilege of coming among you in the stakes, for your kindnesses and your tolerance and your courtesies extended to us. As Nephi said,

... I will go and do the things which the Lord hath commanded, for I know that the Lord giveth no commandments unto the children of men, save he shall prepare a way for them that they may accomplish the things that he has commanded them. (1 Nephi 3:7.)

Yesterday we had the privilege of going to the temple and listening to the reports of the mission presidents, and oh, how I wish the world could listen to those testimonies. How I wish all of the membership of the Church could have heard their testimonies, and seen their great faith, their love for the Church, and their love for the service, and their great affection for your boys and girls, their missionaries. Truly they are servants of God, and he has blessed them and magnified them. They live very close to the Lord. You can't listen to them but what you know that they are partaking of his Spirit very richly each day of their lives. The spirit and the power they possess could come only to those serving God and their Eternal Father with all their heart, might, mind, and strength.

MIRACLES TODAY

Miracles are performed today. The power of healing is in the priesthood and in the Church. Some wonder whether or not miracles are performed today. If they could hear the testimonies of these missionaries in the stakes and these mission presidents, they would have no reason ever to wonder about miracles. But sometimes our faith is not strong enough. Sometimes we are too weak to accept the blessings of the Lord as miracles. Sometimes we are inclined to call them just a coincidence. Sometimes we say, "Oh, it's just one of those things." That's because our faith is not strong enough to recognize the hand of the Lord in these miracles and the healing power of the priesthood that is in the world today.

MAGNIFIED IN SERVICE

I want to bear testimony that when men are called to work in the ministry of the Lord, if they will accept these calls in humility, they will have no need to worry. I am very deeply impressed when I see professional men and businessmen giving of their time and talent in the service of the Lord, and I have watched them magnified, and I have seen the Lord bless them. I feel sorry for the man who takes upon himself the feeling that he hasn't the time to work in the service when he is called.

There are many men who may be inclined not to accept a call when it comes to them. There are men who feel that perhaps they are not qualified, but I want to bear testimony to you that if you will accept those calls in humility and pray to God your Father for help and guidance and comfort, he will not forsake you, but he will make you capable for the responsibilities that are assigned to you.

Testimony inspires testimony, and faith promotes faith, and most of us gain our testimonies through prayer and through work and study, and I think that is as it should be, but we can increase that testimony if we will try to draw close to God our Eternal Father, and have faith in the Lord, Jesus Christ. Faith is so essential to the souls of men. Sometimes we are inclined to be discouraged. Sometimes we are inclined to feel as though it is no use, and oh, if we could just then call upon the Lord for his help.

INACTIVE MEMBERS

I would like to say a word to the inactive members of the Church and the adult members of the Aaronic Priesthood. It is never too late to start over again. When men are discouraged, when men have made mistakes, that's the time they should go to God their Eternal Father and pray to him with all their hearts, but sometimes in our weak moments, we may feel that it's no use, and then we just draw a little farther away from the Lord, and then perhaps we fail to feel his influence.

It is not always easy to be humble. We are living in a very busy world, in a world where there are so many things that may tend to take our minds and our attention away from the things that are really worth while. If we can draw close to the Lord and not let those things come first, I am sure that when we are discouraged and our hearts are heavy, we will have the strength to feel that that's the time we should go to the Lord and ask for his blessings.

Now there are men who feel that they have perhaps drawn so far away from the Lord that they can't pray. Sometimes we are careless in our praying, and yet we have been designated as being a praying people, and we want always to stay a praying people. I would like to encourage those men who are not as prayerful as they might be, that we should not consider prayer as a duty. We can consider prayer as a privilege. We can consider prayer as a blessing. We can consider prayer as a comfort.

You mean to tell me that it is a duty to commune with God, your Eternal Father? If that isn't a comfort and if that isn't a blessing and a power to the souls of men, then I don't know where they will ever receive that comfort and power.

Yes, "God so loved the world," and that love is so sweet and so powerful, so comforting, that if we can partake of it, we will receive the happiness and joy we never receive in any other activity. I would say to men who perhaps have not become as active as they might be, that it is not too late to start over again. You can overcome the things that are keeping you inactive if you will supply your soul with that spirit that comes from God your Eternal Father, and he will give you the power and the desire and the strength to put those things aside that perhaps have taken you from activity in the Church, when perhaps you are not quite so close to the Lord as you should be.

A WAY OF LIFE

Accepting the gospel, and accepting the Church, and living the gospel is a daily way of life. It affords man that something that he can't get anywhere else. It is not alone a plan of eternal salvation. It is the comfort and the happiness that every man loves and craves.

Let us live so that the Lord will not leave us alone. Let us stay so close to him that we can go to him with all our problems. I think it isn't wrong to take our problems to the Lord, because President McKay just told us there isn't any thought or any act that He is not well acquainted with. And so let's humble ourselves. Let us put away that false pride, and let us try to live so that we can have the Spirit of the Lord with us each day of our lives, and when our day is over, if we've made mistakes, and probably most of us will make mistakes every day, we can go to the Lord and acknowledge those mistakes, and he will forgive us, and he will help us to overcome them.

There is a statement that has given me some happiness, and I'd like to repeat it to you:

O may we empty our soul to God our Eternal Father so he will fill it again.

TESTIMONY

I want to bear you my testimony that I know God lives. He has blessed me so abundantly, I can never repay him for the comfort and the strength that I have received from him. I hope that I can stay humble and become even more humble, that he will not leave me, but that he will stay with me each day in all the efforts in righteousness that I undertake to do.

God bless each of you, that the things that are here and the things that you will read and every talk that you will hear may lodge in your hearts so deeply that they will stay with you the rest of your lives. God bless each of us that we may comfort one another, that we may stay close to God our Eternal Father, that he will magnify us in our callings, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER SPENCER W. KIMBALL

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My brothers and sisters: You have already heard much today about certain trends that would engulf us and destroy us. As President McKay was talking about the freedoms which we seem ever more eager to exchange for bread, my thoughts went back to old Israel, who, becoming hungry, went south to Egypt and found corn. That corn tasted so good to them that they continued eating the corn of another people. Eventually they accepted the grain and the security it symbolized in full payment for their liberty. Chains and abject slavery came to them and to their children and their children's children. Their suffering accelerated in intensity until a great Moses, under God, came to emancipate them. Thank the Lord for a deliverer! But how much nobler if people could accept the advice of God's leaders before the bondage comes!

DESTRUCTIVE TRENDS

Some of these destructive trends remind me of the river which drops from Niagara's precipice. Time and again I have stood on the banks of this river far above the falls and watched its waters flowing normally toward the sea. At this point a small craft, manned by strong oarsmen, could be controlled and sent up or down or across the stream. I watched the river farther downstream. Having started downward there is no stopping. Faster and faster it goes, splashing, boiling, frothing. The boat in full control on the upper reaches would now be at the merciless fury of the lashing stream. Even strong men who a few miles above could control their movements, would now, at the nearing of the falls, lose power to guide their boat to safety. Suffering, sorrow, and destruction are inevitable after a certain point has been reached.

Not only the Israelites but more modern people have also fallen victim to this evil. Our pioneers came across the plains and developed a great commonwealth here by their toil and industry, frugality, savings. They were independent of all agencies except the Lord and their own hands and efforts, but many of their descendants have embraced, against counsel, the destructive philosophy that involved and well-nigh destroyed the ancients.

In the figures that were given to us this morning, it appeared that many people had relinquished public agency assistance and had returned to their own efforts and to the Church for their support. But it was a comparatively small number, and there are many in this Church who, even yet, join the hordes outside of the Church to accept gratuities from public agencies.

LAMANITES ENSLAVED

Some Lamanites, in whom I am greatly interested, have fallen victim to the same enslaving principle. The Lamanite did not, like the Israelite, go into another country for food. He remained in his own country, but he was dispossessed of his food. His conquerors took from him his means of livelihood and his country and liberty; and in exchange for his very freedom they gave to him reservations of some millions of acres, generally of little value. In a hundred years or more the Indian has learned quite well the lesson that his Israelitish brothers taught him of accepting whatever was offered.

He is, like many of his white contemporaries, dependent and grasping. But he was not ever thus. He, like our pioneers, in the great yesterday, before contaminated by these influences of destruction, was quite independent. Read his scripture, and you will find that for hundreds of years he tilled the soil, made his way, and lived in peace and prosperity.

Up north in Canada, about a half-century ago, Chief Yellow Face of the Crees called his people together and said, "Don't accept the reservations from your government, for when you accept a favor, you always pay, and you pay heavily."

INDEPENDENCE OF MAYAS

Down in the far south, in Maya land, the Indian was self-sustaining. Dr. Sylvanus Morley in his book, The Ancient Mayas, gives us this paragraph:

Nor are the Mayas given to begging. During the seventeen years the Carnegie Institution carried on archaeological investigations at Chichen Itza, a free medical clinic was maintained for Indians of the surrounding region, medicines being distributed among them without charge. Although the Indians, from long experience, came to know that this service was free, invariably after receiving treatment and medicines at the clinic, they offered to pay for the same, and when payment was refused, the next time they visited Chichen Itza they would bring gifts of food—chickens, eggs, deer meat, and native embroidery. There seemed to be a deepfelt desire not to accept something for nothing, but rather to repay an obligation in some way.

LOSS OF LIBERTIES

Down along the Mexican border in the yesterdays, even the notorious Apaches were quite self-reliant. They, like almost all the rest of their countrymen, have become dependent now. But I want to quote from another author. Cochise, the great warrior and man of peace, continued his lamentation and said:

"Look at my people." This was after he had been placed on the reservation given to them in exchange for all that they possessed, including their liberty.

Look at my people. Do you think they were made to live this way, on charity, like women? No, this is wrong. My warriors have hunted their own deer, built their own wickiups, and fed their own children. We were like the animals of the forest, doing all for ourselves, but now we wait for our food to be given to us, and when it does not come in time, we go hungry. Look, look at my people. They are without blankets. We sit like rabbits and wait until the white man gets ready to feed us.

HOPÍ INDIANS

And then the Hopi in northern Arizona is an example to us all, and we can learn many things from the Indian. Just one or two quotations from an author and a great student of the Hopi Indian, Oliver LaFarge.* He says that the orthodox Hopi also resists the encroachment of governmental agencies who give security in exchange for liberties. The Indian who is not of the conservative group, it is held, can no longer take part in the ceremonies carried on by the "pure" members of the tribe. He must leave the religion entirely. Thus, those members of the Moenkopi Village who accepted allotments of fertile land offered them by the government many years ago, were immediately considered to be excommunicated, and they themselves accepted this belief.

Later, being a sizable body, they took up the practice of their religion again, but in the eyes of the conservatives they are still excommunicated. Their practice of ceremonies is considered blasphemous, and they remain cut off from participation in the common efforts of the communities nearest to them.

And I quote a little further:

Indians holding this belief may trade with the white man, may work for him and earn money, (but not for the government), may use the white man's material and goods, but they may not take relief or other governmental handouts. They are consistent in this. The Hotevilla conservatives and others of their belief have not accepted relief, have always insisted on paying for clothing issued to school children, and so forth. Normal trade is one thing; any action indicating acceptance of the government's, to them, blasphemous and irreligious plans for Indians, is entirely different.

This whole concept seems ridiculous to us, but it is vital to them. It should be emphasized that it is not a self-serving concept. On the contrary, it is a belief which has caused them to endure many hardships and for which they are prepared to endure many more. Be it noted that under this belief the extreme conservatives have remained the most self-respecting, industrious Indians on the reservation, denying themselves many assistances offered by the government, determined to get by solely on their own efforts. They are orderly, notably industrious, even in that industrious tribe, and self-supporting.

The Lord bless the Indians. And, brothers and sisters, may God bless you and me that we may go back to our stakes and our missions with the determination to pray for the red man and then to do something about it to see that he is trained in the ways of God; that he is educated, that he is given the opportunities he so richly deserves after this long period of suffering.

This I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Brigham Young University Choir and the congregation sang the hymn, "How Firm A Foundation."

ELDER S. DILWORTH YOUNG

Of the First Council of the Seventy and President of the New England Mission

If one were not disposed to have humility and a desire for the Spirit of the Lord, I think that climbing the eight or nine steps between the place where I usually sit and this pulpit would soon put it into him.

I desire more than I can ever express to have an interest in your prayers. I have learned from experience that I might speak to you of myself, but I cannot instruct or edify you or myself without the Spirit of the Lord. That Spirit I desire. Your faith in my behalf will help.

MISSIONARY PRINCIPLES

It would appear to me, after some experience in the mission field, that there are certain principles that add to missionary work, without which very little is accomplished. I think these apply to all missions, whether a missionary be walking along under the arches of the lovely birches of New England, or shelters his tired body in the shadows of the mesas of Arizona on a visit to the hogans or crosses the South Pacific and finds housing and shelter in the palm-fronded houses of the Maoris and the Hawaiians, or in the paper homes of the Japanese.

Because, however, I am connected with one mission, I shall apply it to my own mission and let you, my brothers and sisters, apply it to yourselves and to those places which you serve.

LOVE OF COUNTRY

One must feel and absorb in his heart the country to which he goes. Not only must he know the oaks, the beeches, the birches, and the hills of the White Mountains and the Green Mountains, not only must he find the homes and the hearthstones of the inhabitants, but he must also learn these so well that in his heart he substitutes his love for his own home temporarily, for a devotion to the land of his adoption, even though it be for only a year or two.

I love these native hills where I was born. The tapestry which the Lord God hangs upon the sides of these mountains in the fall thrills me, but I must not let that thrill surmount that which I shall feel when I walk among the threads of another tapestry in the land to which I am called. Not only must I love and enjoy the country in which I labor, but I must also learn to love and enjoy the people. I cannot have one feeling of ill-will toward any man in the New England Mission if I am to be a missionary in that mission.

LOVE OF PEOPLE

I must even develop a personal love for the people, rich or poor. I think I have seen about as much of poverty there as anywhere. I thought one time when I went into a poor cabin in Louisiana and lived with a member of the Church on corn pone and milk so sour that one couldn't pour it out of the glass that I had found the ultimate. That is not true. There are homes in Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, which are even poorer than that. And our job is to teach those people when they invite us in, to lift them up, and to make them know that the gospel saves men.

I would like to express my feelings in the words of poetess

Elizabeth Hanly Danforth, who has written about these people and your people with feeling. May I quote:

FIREWOOD

The second crop of clover is mown,
 Grass grown tall in the old woods road,
 Goldenrod faded in every rut.
 Haying is over and the harvest done,
 Barns are filled and the swallows flown,
 Gentians blue in the marshes still.
 Brush for the banking must be cut.
 And apples go to the cider mill.
 Haying is over and harvest done
 In Hope and Union and Appleton,
 Little and lovely and honest places
 (I name you over, one by one),
 St. George, Liberty, Thomaston.
 In a world grown timid I think of you,
 Your small white houses, your mighty barns,
 Your berry pastures that once I knew,
 Your stony fields with their browsing sheep,
 Your strong old men with their quiet faces,
 And the green graveyards where my people sleep.
 Kingdoms waver, empires fall,
 Summers blossom, and summers pass.
 Apples gleam in the orchard grass,
 And the year grows tragic and tired and old.
 But the men that I know the best of all,
 Old Maine men with patient faces,
 Their wood stands heaped like a fortress wall.
 Their children sleep in quiet chambers,
 Their fires burn against the cold,
 Their rooms are sweet with the smell of birch
 Rough to the touch with its curling bark.
 Their sheds are stacked with maple and oak,
 Their windows are ruddy in the dark.
 Blow by blow and stroke by stroke,
 Gnarled and deft and tireless hands
 Have raised these roof-trees, walled these lands,
 Have shaped the destiny to their will
 Till it stands four-square to every shock.
 There is flame at the heart of the granite rock.
 They are strong with the strength beyond our ken.
 God be praised for New England men.*

You may apply that to the world. Unless the missionaries and you and I feel that way about the world, we cannot succeed in teaching them to love us.

ATTITUDE

The second thing I shall briefly mention is about the attitudes of boys and girls after they have come into the mission field. I think I can best tell you by reading to you extracts from two letters I received. Two missionaries found one truth, and reported it in this way. "We are experiencing that 'one-mind-and-one-spirit' feeling in our tracting as to where to go and also to present our message. This is surely a more efficient way of missionary work than before when we pulled our different ways." Two boys living in a room, the snow piled deep outside, the thermometer hovering around zero or lower, discover that in unity the Spirit of the Lord dwells in their hearts, and having made that discovery they now go forth and do missionary work with sufficient power not to be refused.

I have a boy in a far-off place. He and five others labor there alone. In each three-month period I have written a letter to this young presiding elder and said to him, "Will you send me a list of the names of the missionaries as to how we should pair them off for the next three months?" This time his reply was (and I liked it), "I have tried pairing the names of my brethren and myself several times in various ways. The list I now enclose is the best that I believe that I can do. I send it to you simply because the Spirit whispers peace."

"The Spirit whispers peace." That boy has found the key to work in this Church. If he can keep it all of his life, he will be a power for good wherever he goes.

When you have a problem facing you, and you can pray to the Lord God about it, and the comforting influence of the Holy Spirit comes to you, and the Spirit whispers peace, then you know that you are on the right track.

May all missionaries find quickly that Spirit that whispers peace.

THE FOLKS AT HOME

The last thing that I would talk about has to do with the numbers we have. It was reported this morning that our foreign missionaries, that is the missionaries that go out and spend full time, number between four and five thousand. I'd like to report to you folk that these men and women are each a part of a team of three. If there are five thousand boys in the mission field, there are nearly ten thousand others who are one with them in their rights and their privileges. I refer to the folk at home, those patient and splendid mothers and fathers who, without argument, without question, send their boys the wherewithal to do whatsoever the mission president asks of them. Now I make mistakes. I have erred in judgment. But I have never yet had a parent write and tell me that I made a mistake. Each has always said "We'll back our boy to the limit."

A remarkable thing takes place when a boy goes into the mission field. Not only does he become sanctified and glorified in the presence of his Father's Spirit, but the peace of our Father comes also upon his parents' home. They enjoy the sacrifice as much as does he. Is he out without money? Does he go without food? Yea, so do they, and without clothing, too, as they make the savings bank ring with the quarters and the dollars which keep him in the field.

I want every parent to know that so far as I am concerned, I would do nothing to hurt their boys, and I shall do everything I can to make their missionary experiences as full of spirit and as cheap financially as I possibly can do. I would court their letters to me expressing their feelings and letting me know something of their situations so that I can more profitably advise their boys and girls. My colleagues feel the same way.

LETTER FROM MISSIONARY

May I read you a part of a letter? I believe I am not violating any confidence in so doing, for I shall not tell you whose it is. He will recognize it, of course, when he reads about it in the conference report, but he won't tell, and you'll never know.

I received a note from my folks yesterday, and in answer to a question I had asked them they said if I was asked to stay out longer they would be very happy to keep me there. I thought it was pretty wonderful of them because we have had sort of a struggle, you know. The Lord has always opened an effectual door just at the right time. The going hasn't always been easy; for instance, when I was waiting for my passport to come through so I could come up here I was down to rock bottom. I had about six dollars.

I talked to that boy face to face when I invited him to go to this place, quite an expensive trip, and he didn't mention that he had only six dollars. He said, "You want me to go?" I said, "Yes, I do." "Well, then, I'll go."

And I was supposed to have about $180.00. The winter had been pretty rough, and the folks' bank account was nil. The only way they could raise the money was to sell a steer. And they were snowed in. I guess you'd have torn your hair if you'd known, and I guess I did wrong by not telling you, but you called me to come up here, and I thought it was the Lord's will, for I knew he would provide a way; so a thaw came, the steer was sold, and I received the required amount on the first of March, two days before I left Massachusetts. You'll never know how happy I was to get that letter along with the check telling me that everything was all right.

God bless those parents.

The harvest is truly ripe here, the laborers certainly few, so I want you to know I will be happy to stay as long as you think I should. This mission means more to my parents and me than we can express. We have grown closer in every way and gained much more than we can ever hope to repay. When I think of all the elders who have been in the service, and almost as soon as they returned home left again to come on missions, while I have never been away from home myself much longer than three weeks, it certainly wouldn't be a sacrifice on my part to stay out longer. Also, Mother and Dad raised turkeys for the first time last summer, and while quite a few of the turkeys owned by our surrounding neighbors died from various causes, ours thrived, so the finances are on a more even keel, and since country work is coming up soon, the only hardship on them is my absence. Whatever you do will be the will of the Lord, and I won't be looking for my release.

SUPPORT OF MISSIONARIES

May the Lord bless the missionaries, you folk, you parents. I'd like to say to you folk that most of the boys and girls who go on missions come from homes where parents can't afford financially to send their children, but they send them. There are many men here in this audience, I take it, and all over the Church for that matter, who have never been on missions, never had opportunity to go. I'll tell you how you can go. If you can find the way to do it, send a boy and enjoy vicariously that mission as you never had hoped you could enjoy one. Couples having no children, who oftentimes are both working, can go to a widow and say, "You have a boy; let us send him on a mission," and you'll be blessed for it.

The New England Mission has approximately one hundred twenty missionaries. Five hundred would not be nearly enough to touch the hearts of the ten million people of that area, and ten thousand would not be enough to take care of all the people over the world who need the gospel. We can send more than five thousand if we buckle down to it. I pray that we may do so, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER ALBERT E. BOWEN

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

If I can manage it, I should like today to make a little comparison. Something more than nineteen hundred years ago, twelve obscure men with conviction and a message entered upon an undertaking which turned the world over and shaped the course of history.

COMMISSION OF THE LORD

They were acting under a commission given them by the risen Lord as the final injunction of his early ministry. Coming to them at an appointed place on the occasion of his last appearance, he made this epoch marking announcement, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." (Matt. 28:18.) That was a monumental assertion of authority. It was the premise upon which he based his solemn charge:

Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost:

Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you. (Ibid., 28:19-20.)

As Mark narrates the incident, the commission was accompanied by a promise of equally positive and sobering import: "He that believeth . . . shall be saved." (Mark 16:16.) To be sure, certain requirements were enjoined upon believers as a condition to the fulfillment of the promise, but they would follow as a consequence of genuine, sincere belief—the kind of belief that Jesus was talking about. A tremendously arresting quality of this whole matter is the tone of finality of it all. There is no uncertainty, no qualification, no temporizing. It is the voice of complete assurance, supreme confidence, final authority such as is not to be matched in the words of any other man who has lived in mortality. It is in keeping with the character of one who had declared himself to be the Son of God, the Redeemer of the world.

During the period of his mortal ministry, the crowd had perceived this quality in his utterances and said in wonderment one to another that "he taught them as one having authority." (Matt. 7:29.) Neither does one get the sense that there is any bombast or vanity or pretentious arrogation of power. Straight and clear in the calm authoritative tones of one who had conquered death and thus redeemed the race from its power came the words, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." (Ibid., 28:18.) It is the bedrock upon which the foundation of all his teachings rests. No one else in all the world has ever spoken like that, and no one can disprove the assertion. On the contrary, there have been and are vast multitudes who for nearly two thousand years have proclaimed and now proclaim assurance of its truth.

AWESOME ASSIGNMENT

It would be difficult to conceive of an assignment more awesome than that one just referred to as being given by the Lord to his chosen disciples. Consider for a moment their station. They were humble men—fishermen and peasants—without wealth or social position or high-placed friends. They had neither political prestige nor armed might. They lived in a remote province of the haughtiest and mightiest empire of the earth, whose proud legions had carried its banners to remote corners. Members of a turbulent, troublesome, and therefore unpopular race, they were directed to carry an unknown and hitherto unheard-of message to all the world, calling upon its inhabitants to observe all things whatsoever the crucified Lord had commanded, promising salvation to all who believed and complied. Before the magnitude of that task, the stoutest heart might well have quailed.

What their personal feelings were we are not told. The record is silent. We are left to inference from what they did about it. They seem not to have been overwhelmed or weighted down with apprehension. Perhaps they were not too much startled because they had previously been sent out as emissaries under the personal direction of the Master and had had personal experience of his sustaining power. During the period of his mortal ministry they had been under his personal tutelage and had heard him with unwavering assurance declare:

... I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live. (John 11:25.)

And again:

For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me.

And this is the will of him that sent me that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life: and I will raise him up at the last day. (John 6:38, 40.)

With like definiteness they had heard him declare:

I am the door: by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out, and find pasture.

Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life, that I might take it again.

... This commandment have I received of my Father. (John 10:9, 17, 18.)

They had seen him crucified and, in fulfilment of his words, rise from the dead. All this must have given them an immensely fortifying trust in his promise. At any rate they went unhesitatingly to their work.

FAITH PUT TO TEST

The quality of their faith and their courage was soon enough put to the test. When Peter and John, going up to the temple, healed the crippled man, they got themselves hailed before the rulers who demanded of them by what power or by what name they had done this thing. Peter boldly answered.

Be it known unto you all, and to all the people of Israel, that by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, whom God raised from the dead, even by him doth this man stand here before you whole. (Acts 4:10.)

They were forbidden further to teach in that name, and ignoring the warning, were thrown into prison. Being liberated, they continued their teachings and were beaten and enjoined from teaching; but still they persisted, saying,

... Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye.

For we cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard. (Ibid., 4:19-20.)

Peter told his inquisitors to their teeth:

The God of our fathers raised up Jesus, whom ye slew and hanged on a tree.

Him hath God exalted with his right hand to be a Prince and a Saviour, for to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins. (Ibid. 5:30-31.)

That was the power of their message, and the basis of their strength.

PERSECUTIONS

Their numbers multiplied with amazing rapidity, and so did the persecution. They were hunted down, driven into hiding, beaten, and stoned. From the account of Saul of Tarsus something of the bitterness of their suffering may be learned, but still they pressed on, their multiplied number spreading throughout the empire and to the very capital itself. An edict of extermination was decreed against the sect. They were driven into hiding, cruelly tortured, thrown to the beasts in the circus for the amusement of the populace, where they were torn limb from limb. But still the work spread, a triumph of fidelity to a cause and sincerity in its advocacy.

These men believed. Men do not endure that kind of persecution without deep conviction. Here was no lip-service or sham or apologetics or denaturing to suit the doctrines to the tastes or practice of listeners. That is the kind of belief and these were the kind of men who perpetuated the teachings of Jesus in the earth, rescued them from fading into forgetfulness, and carried the Christian faith triumphantly to its establishment as the worship of the majority of the people of the empire which once had proscribed it and decreed the extermination of its adherents. That is the kind of belief of which Jesus spoke when he said, "He that believeth shall be saved."

THE SON OF GOD

In the execution of their commission, the disciples clearly perceived that it was their first task to get him accepted, to get men to believe that he was the Son of God, the resurrected Lord who had redeemed the race from the bondage of death. All their teaching accordingly revolved around that central theme. Without that, there could be no hope of inducing the world to accept his moral and religious doctrines.

The pattern of their discourse was foreshadowed by Peter's bold declaration to the rulers: "Be it known to you all and to all the people of Israel, that by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, whom God raised from the dead, even by him doth this man stand here before you whole." That is what gave authoritative sanction to their teachings about the way of life which Jesus taught, and which so profoundly influenced the whole world.

INFLUENCE OF CHRISTIAN TEACHINGS

It was clearly the intent and purpose of the Savior that men and peoples and nations should come to order their lives on the basis of principles he laid down, and it is something to marvel at how deep those teachings finally penetrated into those nations that espoused the Christian faith and furnished the standards of values and judgments to which they profess to cling. The nations formed from the breakup of the Roman Empire, as well as new nations which sprang or were peopled from them, in general fell under the influence of the Christian teachings and were called the Christian nations. The very frameworks of their governments were colored and shaped by these principles, and their Christian convictions have made these nations dominant in the world for fifteen hundred years.

Various Greek philosophies, and Roman too, taught rules of life, but such of them as have survived have done so by penetrating into the Christian faith which overshadowed them as the dominant spiritual power of the western world. In the Christian nations when men have judged conduct or the validity of principles, they have evaluated them as good or bad according to their conformance or nonconformance to the standards laid down in the Christian code. Before Mussolini and Hitler could corrupt the youth of their countries they had to undermine and break down and destroy belief in the principles taught by Christ which for centuries their countries had been taught to revere as ideals, howsoever short they may have fallen in practice. While the Christian church compromised many of its vital principles and in that degree weakened itself and subverted its initial purpose, it nevertheless still gave lip-service to the Christ and a certain veneration for him and his precepts, which gave controlling color to the institutions and practices of the Christian world.

DISQUIETING SIGNS

But something ominous is happening now. There are disquieting signs that all over Christendom the underpinnings of the Christian faith are being knocked down. The crumbling of the Christian pattern is of grave portent. Ancient supports may be torn away, but what shall buttress us then? It begins to look as though the world is slipping back to the position it held when the Lord commissioned his disciples to carry his message to all the nations. The task again seems to be to get men to believe in him—to get him accepted. There is something highly suggestive about the fact that the upheavals which are threatening the destruction of the civilized world follow so closely on the heels of open denial by professed Christians of belief in Christ as the Son of God and of the divinity of his teachings.

I suppose it has always been true that individual persons have disavowed belief in Jesus as the Messiah, but generally this has not been true on a mass scale. Where such unbelief has been declared, it has generally been professed that nevertheless the moral and ethical teachings of Christ were still recognized as of the highest value and valid without acceptance of the claim of his Messiahship or his resurrection. But repudiation cannot go halfway and stop. Denial of his divinity is only the first step in the process of complete denial to which the logic of the position inevitably drives. And now we seem to be experiencing on a scale never before thought of the disavowal of any superior validity to the whole Christian creed. In other words, we are now driven by the logic of events to recognize that you can't have Christianity without Christ, and those who have decided to get along without him are driven to choose whether to compromise on their principles, too. This is of almost worldwide consequence because Christianity has penetrated into non-Christian nations far more than their creeds have penetrated into the Christian world.

CRITICISM OF CHRISTIANITY

It is only two or three years ago that the president of a worshipping body in our country, which formerly was assumed to call itself Christian, said:

Christianity has been guilty of spiritual arrogance on a world-wide scale, labeling all other religions false, and asserting that only when all mankind accepts the one true religion will there be any hope for world-wide cooperation and peace. That amounts to spiritual imperialism and is as out of date in our world today as any other form of imperialism.

In a recent writing, an ordained minister who had held many pastorates proposes and argues the necessity for a new religion for a new age. He begins by demolishing the Christian God, and tearing to bits the Christian church, Protestant and Catholic alike. He tells us that Christianity is a minority group even in America, and ridicules the idea that the great majority are going to surrender their own beliefs to accept "the Christian God."

But that is precisely what Christ directed his disciples to teach the world to do. Moreover, that is what the great body of the Roman world professedly did in its conversion from paganism to Christianity.

The writer of the article dogmatically asserts, "God doesn't talk to you." All forms of religion as known today, he says, and all ideas of God are man-made. They are not eternal; they grew out of the feeling of man that he was impotent to achieve his ideals and turned the job of carrying through to a supernatural power. He proposes as a religion for the modern age one that is secular, presided over not by a ministry or a clergy or anyone acting under an ordination but managed by professional and businessmen and workers and artists. He depicts the organization of a brave new world where every man who has a talent will be expected to use it. It will be noted on careful perusal that in this scheme of things there is no place for God. The writer makes it abundantly clear that He does not exist, nor is there any future estate for man. It would appear that man himself, and certainly religion, is to be but a tool of the state.

ALTERNATE PROPOSALS

It is possible to agree with much of what the writer says about the failure of the Christian Church to bring about the desired condition of peace and good order in the world and harmonious living among men. He points to war and frustration and the disappointments of human hopes through lapses in human behavior. But in all the principles and practices which he sets forth as those to be embodied in his new religion, there is not one that is not already laid down in the teachings of Jesus Christ. He proposes no new virtues. Just how the ideal of the good life for all is to be implemented by supplanting the gospel taught by Jesus with a secular-political-economic-sociological regime is not made clear, though there is some indication that this is to be managed through the authoritarian powers of an omnipotent state, which is a concept in direct variance from what Jesus taught. Right here I should like to interpolate without using more words the stirring discourse we have just listened to from President [David O.] McKay relating to human dignity and the right of all men to be free.

A REVELATION OF GOD

So we come at the end to the simple question whether religion is a revelation of God with enduring validity in all times, and through the practice of which man may work his way up to perfection, or is it a human creation with no higher sanction than the wisdom of man and subject to change with the passing moods of changing times? The one gives stability and constancy and purpose to life, the reason for being, with freedom to choose one's course; the other sets man adrift with nothing enduring to hold on to and little hope to inspire noble living.

In the brief time at my disposal, I have known that I could not make a complete portrayal of the idea that is lying in the back of my mind. I had dared hope that I might advance something suggestive enough to set your minds working on the idea sufficiently so that you might fill in what of necessity I have left incomplete.

I have had more particularly in mind those who by their daily pursuits or association or environmental influence might be confused or even disturbed by the godless humanism that is so prevalent in the thought of the day. If you want to meet scholasticism with scholasticism to bolster up your trust in the teachings and promises of the Master, you may take comfort in the knowledge that many of the profoundest scholars of this and of other times still place trust in God, who may be communed with through prayer.

I recall here the words of Henry George, the economist and political scientist, many of whose political and economic and sociological views are in greater favor today than when he first propounded them: "Political economy and social science," George said, "cannot teach any lessons that are not embraced in the simple truths that were taught to poor fishermen and Jewish peasants by one who 1800 years ago was crucified."

May all men learn to revere the teachings of the Lord and Savior. May they come to know that in them is saving power and that outside of them within the realm of human wisdom there is nothing that can save, I pray in the name of Jesus. Amen.

The Brigham Young University Choir will now sing "Glorious Is Thy Name."

The closing prayer will be offered by President Thaddeus M. Evans of the East Riverside Stake, Salt Lake City, Utah, after which this conference will stand adjourned until 10:00 o'clock Saturday morning. The proceedings of that session will be broadcast over KSL, Salt Lake City, Utah, and by arrangement through KSL, over the other stations to which you are now listening, and will be televised over the KSL television station, channel 5.

At 10:00 o'clock tomorrow morning, a meeting will be held in the Temple. Those invited should assemble in the Tabernacle not later than 9:00 o'clock. Only those especially invited will attend the meeting.

At 7:00 o'clock tomorrow evening, the Presiding Bishopric will conduct a special meeting in the Tabernacle. Those invited to attend include bishops and counselors, members of Stake Aaronic Priesthood Committees for Aaronic Priesthood, Stake Presidencies and High Council advisers to the L.D.S. Girls Program, ward clerks, and general secretaries of Ward Aaronic Priesthood Committees.

Any important calls and messages that may come to us for persons supposed to be in attendance at Conference, will be announced at the dismissal of this meeting over the loud speaking system on the grounds. Every one would do well to listen carefully to such announcements.

I should like to express my own gratitude and congratulations to the Brigham Young University Choir which has sung today under the direction of Elder John R. Halliday, Elder Newell Weight conducting, and Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ.

Singing by the choir, "Glorious Is Thy Name."

The closing prayer was offered by President Thaddeus M. Evans of the East Riverside Stake.

Conference adjourned until 10:00 a.m., Saturday morning, April 18.

SECOND DAY

MORNING MEETING

Conference reconvened Saturday morning, April 8, at 10:00, this being the third session, no general sessions having been held on Friday, April 7.

President David O. McKay:

This is the third session of the One Hundred Twentieth Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City. President George Albert Smith is presiding. He has asked that his second counselor conduct the service.

These services will be broadcast in the Assembly Hall over a loud speaking system and by television. All general sessions of the Conference will be heard and seen in the Assembly Hall in the same way.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over Station KSL of Salt Lake City, and by arrangement through KSL, over the following stations:

In Utah: KSUB at Cedar City, KSVC at Richfield, KJAM at Vernal, KVNU at Logan.

In Idaho: KGEM at Boise, KID at Idaho Falls, KEYY at Pocatello, KBIO at Burley.

In Oregon: KBXR at Baker, KSRV at Ontario.

And by transcription, over KTYL at Mesa, Arizona, and KEXO at Grand Junction, Colorado.

This session will also be televised over KSL television station, channel 5.

The singing of this session will be by the congregation, Elder Richard P. Condie conducting, and Elder Roy M. Darley at the organ.

We will begin the services by the congregation singing "High On the Mountain Top."

The opening prayer will be offered by President W. Clair Rowley of the Parowan Stake.

Singing by the congregation, "High On the Mountain Top."

The opening prayer was offered by President W. Clair Rowley of the Parowan Stake.

The congregation sang "Prayer Is The Soul's Sincere Desire."

ELDER JOSEPH F. MERRILL

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

Brethren and sisters:

It is trite to say we are living in perilous times. There are numberless troubles, disputes, dissensions, dangers, complexities, everywhere. People in every land want and earnestly pray for peace, and yet the outlook for peace is seemingly becoming darker and more gloomy. Talk of war is getting louder; and war preparations are being accelerated, particularly in means so destructive that if generally and widely used, nearly total extinction of human life would result. The recent world war was so expensive and destructive that everywhere the feeling was prevalent at its close that nations never again would engage in such a foolish and disastrous conflict. But what do we now see? Notwithstanding, no treaties of peace with major nations have yet been made, rearmament programs are going forward as rapidly as is feasible.

DISTURBED CONDITIONS

Why do the conditions here indicated exist? There are many reasons, some of which have been stated many times from this pulpit. These may all be summed up in a single sentence—failure to live as the Lord has indicated we, his children, should live. Some fundamentals of this way are given to us by the Prophet Joseph Smith in articles 11, 12, 13, of our faith, which are as follows:

11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our own conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.

12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates, in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.

13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men. . . .

Article 11 is an ideal statement of religious tolerance, a condition sadly lacking in the world today, as indicated in so many places, examples of which are the bloody conflict that has recently cost the lives of thousands in the deadly fight between Moslems and Hindus in Pakistan, and the expulsion from Czechoslovakia of missionaries of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Religious tolerance is perhaps the most difficult of all types of tolerance for devout people to grant, giving which they could also be tolerant in other matters related to moral standards.

THE GOLDEN RULE

Speaking of how the Lord would have us live in all our relations with human beings, there is another sentence that beautifully expresses the way. It is: "Do unto others as you would have others do unto you." This is known as the Golden Rule. The second great commandment requires us to love our neighbor as ourselves. To do this, must one not comply with the requirements of the Golden Rule?—not always an easy thing to do, but a divine requirement, nonetheless. If all individuals, peoples, and nations would do this, peace would come at once to every part of the currently disturbed world. The measure of peace that we have or shall have will be proportionate to the degree of fullness to which the aggressor observes the Golden Rule.

But as to aggressors, they are found everywhere—locally, nationally, and internationally; and wherever found they all have in common at least one fault—excessive and inordinate selfishness. They want, and usually insist on having, more of something that does not rightfully belong to them and, if necessary, will fight to get it. As a rule, however, they prefer to satisfy their unrighteous desires and wicked cravings by other means than physically fighting for them. Bloodshedding is not as general, therefore, as it might otherwise be; for example, does Russia want war? Why should she? Has not communism made rapid progress in the control of peoples and nations since fighting ceased in World War II?

But the fear of a war, of appalling bloodshed, is so great in this country that our government is spending many billions of dollars annually to ward it off, seemingly believing that an up-to-date readiness to fight is the surest preventive of war. The people of the United States most certainly do not want another war of nations, and the majority of them are willing to do everything feasible to prevent it. How far it is necessary to go to attain this objective is a debatable question.

DANGERS WITHIN

But it is not of war between nations and the danger of it that I desire to speak further, for I feel that an immediate greater danger of destruction of the best interests of the people in the United States lies within our borders rather than beyond them. And these dangers are rooted in the unreasonable and damnable selfishness that is manifest on every level of our society by individuals, groups, and organizations.

For many years this country has had anti-monopoly laws to govern business corporations. The federal government and the states have set up controls and boards and commissions to administer these laws, the purpose being to protect the public against unfair commercial practices and unreasonable charges for the goods and services of corporations. The intent of these laws has met with overwhelming public approval. But during recent years another form of monopoly has been developing that, if not controlled, imposes a type of slavery on the country unknown and undreamed of by the founders of our glorious republic, which, from its beginning, has served as a cherished ensign to all the world of personal liberty and free enterprise.

But these two essentials of a free people are being more and more restricted in this country. They have been practically destroyed in Russia and some other communistic controlled countries where it is claimed a people's democracy rules—a highly absurd claim in the light of the facts.

FREE ENTERPRISE

What do I mean by the words "free enterprise"? I mean individual freedom of action and of opportunity. Everyone born in mortality, according to our teachings, comes from God, our Father, with the priceless gift of "free agency" and will be held accountable for its use. Naturally, in the exercise of this gift one may not, without sinning against God and man, do anything knowingly to hurt, or injure a fellow human being. Further, our Church teaches that the Constitution of the United States as given to us by the founding fathers of our republic is a divinely inspired document, designed to protect the citizens in the enjoyment of their inalienable rights among which are "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." Hence, are not restrictions to our freedom of action, insofar as we do not harmfully interfere with others, violative of the spirit of the Constitution and our Bill of Rights?

America has become great in many lines of human endeavor, in fact the greatest nation on earth, due unquestionably to its free enterprise or capitalistic system. This system is our pride and the envy of some other peoples. Because of our great corporations, industrial and financial, America astonished the world, particularly Adolf Hitler, by the speed of her preparations and participation in the recent world war.

DEVELOPING TENDENCIES

But there are developing tendencies, sponsored by selfishness, greed, and ambition that, if unchecked, will soon or late bring sorrow and ruin to our country. Among these tendencies is that of "something for nothing," at least "more and more for less and less"—more pay for less work. And as I see it, in whatever words these tendencies are expressed, they all lead to some type of national socialism. And generally, socialism is an enemy of free enterprise in the development of which, I repeat, this country has become the greatest on earth. Then why does any honest, patriotic, intelligent citizen of America prefer socialism to free enterprise? Is it not in free enterprise that free agency, a divine gift to every human being, finds an environment favorable to growth and development and to living in harmony with our beautiful doctrine of eternal progression?

LABOR UNIONS

Now to give point to what I have said, let me give a few illustrations.

Recent experiences have convinced us that some labor unions have a monopolistic power that, if fully exercised, would spell ruin to industrial America. The exercise of this power employs a method that is a twin brother to that used by the bank robber. The corporation hands over just as the cashier does. In the case of the corporation, you and I—that is, the public—pays the bill. The recent settlements between coal-and-labor and steel-and-labor are good illustrations of this fact. Immediately following the announcements of the settlement of the disputes, up went the price of steel and of coal. Yes, when costs go up, the public pays and almost always does so if the corporation is to remain solvent.

After fighting ceased in the last war, a labor union operating in the automobile field demanded an increase of wages of thirty cents an hour but insisted there should be no increase of prices—an absurdity. In any productive enterprise, labor is a large factor in the cost of operation. In our competitive free-enterprise system how can labor costs materially go up unless prices go up, if the corporation is to remain solvent? What answer does recent history give? Beginning in the autumn of 1945, wage increases occurred in nearly all productive industries. A rise in prices followed. Because of this, labor demanded and got a second wage increase. Prices again rose, followed by a demand for and receipt of a third wage increase. More recently, steel and coal workers have received a fourth raise in wages and other money benefits resulting, as I said a moment ago, in another rise in prices.

But why cannot a prosperous corporation raise wages without raising prices, is a question that many ask. I have already given an answer, but I now explain a bit by quoting from an annual report I received about two weeks ago from a large corporation:

Costs of operation in 1949 remained high, and additional expenses were incurred in changing models and in preparing for the introduction of new products. At the same time, to strengthen the business and to prepare for the future, the company intensified its marketing efforts to meet more competitive conditions and expanded its research and engineering programs to provide a continuing flow of new and improved products on a long-range basis. The expenses resulting from these activities had a marked effect on the company's profits for 1949, which were 9 per cent of revenue.

USE OF PROFITS

Every other large productive corporation could make similar statements. Compare 1950 models of automobiles with those of 1920. Have not huge amounts of money and time been spent to perfect and manufacture the modern automobile? Where did this money come from? Of course from profits, stockholders, and borrowings. How absurd for well-paid workers to say that the profits belong to them! But in the long run, who gets most of the profits? I answer, the workers and the public, not the stockholders: the workers, in jobs; the public, in better goods and services. But it is the savings of these thrifty stockholders who risk their money and are satisfied with relatively small returns on their investment that make it possible for corporations to come into existence and create jobs for the workers and goods for the public. How foolish and senseless to contend that the stockholders should get no returns on their ventured money, and that depreciation reserves should not be set up! Fourteen years ago when we were in London, we came to know that labor leaders in Britain were agreed that working invested capital was entitled to five percent annual dividends and that funds for depreciation should be provided. But in these respects I fear that Britain has since been influenced by what she sees in America—selfish demands of unions, irrespective of what is fair and just.

Now, in view of the eminent leadership position American industry has attained in the world, how is it that in recent years moves have been made that ultimately will practically destroy our free-enterprise system and end in socialism or statism or a welfare state (take your choice of terms)?—moves that are substituting highly inflationary financial policies for the time-honored soundness of the past and moves tending to create the feeling that the government offers the best social security available in this country, etc.

OFFICE-HUNGRY POLITICIANS

In giving answer I am speaking on my own responsibility, expressing my personal views and speaking plainly, using homely, everyday language. As I see it, the leaders of these moves are in general office-hungry politicians, longing for the emoluments, influence, and power of public office. These candidates for office have courted, and are courting, the support of selfish, ambitious, and powerful leaders of labor unions, as well as the ne'er-do-well elements in our population. Through the abundant and widespread use of misleading propaganda in which they have indulged and do indulge, the minds of the public in great measure have become confused and multitudes won over. Compare, if you please, half-century-old platforms of political parties with those that go out today under the same party names.

TWO ALTERNATIVES

Time allotted to me will not permit of further elaboration, but I appeal to all honest, patriotic people and lovers of freedom to whom my words may come, to make careful study of the matters of which I have spoken with the view of determining what is the wise and safe thing for them to do in order to serve unselfishly the best interests of the people of this country and of other countries who accept our moral standards. In every case let us beware of the bearers of "Trojan gifts."

As I see the situation, we are faced in this country with two alternatives, repentance or slavery—turn away from indulging in the unreasonable, excessive, and wicked selfishness manifest in many of the things we do or lose the freedoms that have been our pride and glory, the freedoms that every parent should desire from the depths of his soul to pass on to his descendants. Yes, it is repentance or industrial slavery. Which will you choose?

My remarks are directed particularly to Latter-day Saints, for they believe, as I do, that our religion is so broad and practical that it covers every phase of our life's activities, material as well as spiritual. "Faith without works is dead." Our faith in a real, personal, Living God is unquestioned among us. Let us humbly, diligently, and persistently, through earnest prayer and righteous living try to keep ourselves in tune with the mind and will of God as it has been revealed to us, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ, our Redeemer. Amen.

ELDER LEVI EDGAR YOUNG

Of the First Council of the Seventy

My brethren and sisters: We are reminded this day that one hundred years ago Latter-day Saint missionaries were called to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ in Germany. From that time on, hundreds of the people of that land and Switzerland have accepted the revealed word of God, and have migrated to Utah and have contributed much to our culture and development. The German music particularly has been of enduring joy to us, for in this very Tabernacle where we are assembled, the creations of Bach, Mozart, Wagner, Haydn, and the oratorios and operas of Handel have been heard with deep appreciation of the masters. In hundreds of homes the writings of Goethe and Schiller are well-known. I believe and have faith in the German people and feel that they will emerge from their days of sorrow and tragic condition and will come back to their former culture in days to come.

DIVINE LIFE OF JESUS

Tomorrow, Sunday, is the Easter day. Millions of Christians will kneel at sacred shrines and in churches and pour out their souls to God in deep gratitude for their knowledge that God lives and that death is but the entrance into immortal life. "How blessed is the king that cometh in the name of the Lord." Beautifully does the prophet Nephi write of the divine birth of the Savior Jesus Christ:

And it came to pass that I looked and beheld the great city of Jerusalem, and also other cities. And I beheld the city of Nazareth; and in the city of Nazareth I beheld a virgin, and she was exceedingly fair and white. . . .

And it came to pass that I beheld that she was carried away in the Spirit; and after she had been carried away in the Spirit for the space of a time the angel spake unto me, saying: Look!

And I looked and beheld the virgin again, bearing a child in her arms.

And the angel said unto me: Behold the Lamb of God, yea, even the Son of the Eternal Father. (1 Nephi 11:13, 19-21.)

It was in the hearts of the humblest and most faithful poor people that his words found lodgment. Whenever he was overtaken with deep sorrow, he left his disciples and went into the woods to pray. The words of Jesus lived in the fulness of their truth. The soul of man was to be unafraid and was to deal direct with God. We read in Mark that "All things are possible to him that believeth." He had been baptised by his beloved John who declared that "the kingdom of God is at hand. Repent and believe the good news." He founded his Church, and his disciples were dominated by the Spirit of the Living Christ. They came to know the power of the Holy Ghost and the ideal life of the kingdom. Repentance and faith signified attachment to God. With his crucifixion, his life was destined to change the history of mankind more deeply, more widely, and more permanently than any other from the beginning of time unto the present hour. It was the resurrection that gave the knowledge of eternal life to all the children of God. St. Luke gives us a sacred description of the resurrection:

Now upon the first day of the week, very early in the morning, they came unto the sepulchre, bringing the spices which they had prepared, and certain others with them.

And they found the stone rolled away from the sepulchre.

And they entered in, and found not the body of the Lord Jesus.

And it came to pass, as they were much perplexed thereabout, behold, two men stood by them in shining garments:

And as they were afraid, and bowed down their faces to the earth, they said unto them, Why seek ye the living among the dead?

He is not here, but is risen: remember how he spake unto you when he was yet in Galilee, Saying, The Son of man must be delivered into the hands of sinful men, and be crucified, and the third day rise again.

And they remembered his words.

And returned from the sepulchre, and told all these things unto the eleven, and to all the rest.

It was Mary Magdalene, and Joanna, and Mary the mother of James, and other women that were with them, which told these things unto the apostles.

And their words seemed to them as idle tales, and they believed them not.

Then arose Peter, and ran unto the sepulchre; and stooping down, he beheld the linen clothes laid by themselves, and departed, wondering in himself at that which was come to pass. (Luke 24:1-12.)

AMERICA'S DESTINY

In after ages America was discovered by Christopher Columbus, who was directed by the Spirit of the Lord to cross the mighty deep. His prayer on landing was a dedication of this land to God. Then came the people from England and other countries of Europe to America, and they brought in their little ships not money, not merchandise, but they came weighted with religion, learning, law, and the spirit of men. Strong in God and their own heroic patience, they began their combat with danger and hardship. They built a house for God, then for themselves. They established education and a stern but august morality. They gave their sons to God; through him to virtue, and through virtue to the state. So they laid their foundations of government and life.

In time the government of the United States was established with its Constitution, which we believe was written by the blessing and power of God. The formation of the republic of the United States was an event ordered of God for the bringing of his kingdom upon the earth.

De Tocqueville wrote,

A Republic is the highest form of political institution, and the highest form of Republic is one made up of different nationalities, brought under one government and one flag.

Generations before, John Winthrop, one of the pioneers of Massachusetts, wrote:

It will be a great service to the Church of great consequence to carry the gospel into those parts of the world to help on the coming of the Gentiles.

And generations later, George Washington uttered the prayer:

Almighty God, we make our earnest prayer that Thou wilt keep the United States in Thy holy protection; that Thou wilt incline the hearts of the citizens to cultivate a spirit of subordination and obedience to government; to entertain a brotherly affection and love for one another and for their fellow citizens of the United States at large.

LAND OF LIBERTY

We read in the Book of Mormon how Lehi's son Jacob taught the people the sacredness of America as a land preserved by the hand of God for his future holy work.

But behold, this land, said God, shall be a land of thine inheritance, and the Gentiles shall be blessed upon the land.

And this land shall be a land of liberty unto the Gentiles, and there shall be no kings upon the land, who shall raise up unto the Gentiles.

And I will fortify this land against all other nations.

And he that fighteth against Zion shall perish, saith God.

For he that raiseth up a king against me shall perish, for I, the Lord, the king of heaven, will be their king, and I will be a light unto them forever, that hear my words.

Wherefore, I will consecrate this land unto thy seed, and them who shall be numbered among thy seed, forever, for the land of their inheritance, for it is a choice land, saith God unto me, above all other lands, wherefore I will have all men that dwell thereon that they shall worship me, saith God. ((II Nephi 10:10-14, 19.)

The nineteenth century saw many new changes in economic, social, and religious thought. America became a land of freedom, and men could worship God as they pleased. In time, America became a nation of different churches. Christianity became more divided. Churches began to dispute with one another, and the divisions of Christianity became an affront to the divine teachings of the Redeemer. "The world had become filled," says Matthew Arnold, "with unprofitable disputes. The Church had been turned into an academy, and religion into wrangling. It had fallen into endless schism." The simple teachings of Christ our Redeemer had been lost.

CHURCH REESTABLISHED

In the day when the Prophet Joseph Smith lived, the divisions of Christendom were seen. His going into the woods to pray was a divine act, for through the deep faith of the boy, God spoke to him. We all know the story. God reestablished his Church, the priesthood of God was restored by John the Baptist, and Peter, James, and John. They came again to earth as resurrected beings. Thus Joseph Smith came to understand the supreme test of religion—revelation. Religion as a purely human product, valuable at it is to human life and progress, has not the inner vigor to retain a place of commanding power. Religion requires revelation. "The completest carrier of revelation can be no other, or less, than a chosen personality." This was the Christian conception in the beginning. So we have the restored gospel today. The Church has its priesthood with its Apostles, seventies, and all the other offices in the Holy Priesthood of God. Our foundation is the divine truth:

We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in his Son, Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.

DEDICATORY PRAYER

I commend to you seventies and to all who hold the priesthood of God the dedicatory prayer of the Prophet Joseph Smith as given in the Kirtland Temple in March 1832. Among the many thoughts he expressed was:

Thanks be to thy name, O Lord God of Israel, who keepest covenant and showest mercy unto thy servants who walk uprightly before thee, with all their hearts—

. . . And as all have not faith, seek ye diligently, and teach one another words of wisdom; yea, seek ye out of the best books, words of wisdom, seek learning even by study, and also by faith; . . .

O Lord, we delight not in the destruction of our fellow men. Their souls are precious before thee; . . .

Have mercy, O Lord, . . . upon the rulers of our land, may those principles which were so honorably and nobly defended, viz., the Constitution of our land, by our fathers, be established forever;

Remember the kings, the princes, the nobles, and the great ones of the earth, and all people, and the churches, all the poor, the needy, and afflicted ones of the earth.

And may all the scattered remnants of Israel, who have been driven to the ends of the earth, come to a knowledge of the truth, believe in the Messiah, and be redeemed from oppression, and rejoice before thee. (D. & C. 101:1, 7, 43, 54-55, 67.)

MY REDEEMER LIVETH

What a divine admonition for all of us on this Easter day! We can all bear testimony to these truths and to the truthfulness of the words of Job:

For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth:

And though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God: (Job. 19:25-26.)

In conclusion, I want to give you the prayer of John Drinkwater, the English writer:

We know the paths wherein our feet should press,
Across our hearts are written Thy decrees,
Yet now, O Lord, be merciful to bless
With more than these.

Grant us the will to fashion as we feel,
Grant us the strength to labour as we know,
Grant us the purpose, ribbed and edged with steel,
To strike the blow.

Knowledge we ask not—knowledge Thou hast lent,
But, Lord, the will—there lies our bitter need,
Give us to build above the deep intent
The deed, the deed.

I pray that we may all be blessed this Easter day with the sacred knowledge that God lives, that Jesus Christ is the Redeemer of the world, and that Joseph Smith lives and is a prophet of God. Amen.

ELDER ELDRED G. SMITH

Patriarch to the Church

I hope the Lord will bless me with an interest in your faith and prayers while I stand here before you. I appreciate the honor and privilege that is mine to talk to you at this time. I am grateful for the many blessings given to me and mine, and above all I am grateful for the gospel of Jesus Christ.

A BLESSED PEOPLE

The Latter-day Saints as a people are more blessed than any others on the face of the earth because we have this gospel which offers to us such great blessings, both for this life and for all eternity. Perhaps the very magnitude of the blessings makes it difficult for us to comprehend them. I wonder if that is why some of us are not taking advantage of our opportunities. We cannot appreciate what we do not understand. Perhaps our parents or our teachers neglected to instil in our minds the glorious blessings promised for keeping the commandments of God.

I would not hesitate to say that many of our failures to comply with the laws and ordinances of the gospel come from a failure to understand completely the blessings gained therefrom. No one in his right mind would knowingly turn down such gain for a fleeting satisfaction. How great is our responsibility then as parents, teachers, or missionaries to try to instil these teachings in the minds and hearts of our children, neighbors, and fellow men.

We might do well to look to the methods of our teachings. We are all familiar with the slogan, "If the learner hasn't learned, the teacher hasn't taught."

METHODS OF TEACHING

In our schoolrooms, teaching has become an art instead of a mere presentation of fact. Material that used to be dry as dust to me as a child has now been made so attractive that children learn because it is fun, a pleasant experience. Children learn because they want to. It has been said that the only satisfactory way to make people do things is to make them want to do them.

Truly, my dear brothers and sisters, this is an age of advertising. Products both good and bad are made so enticing that we think we cannot live without them. The art of salesmanship must first attract interest, and then create a desire. Is not the gospel important enough that we use this proved psychology in selling it to others? I do not mean by this that we must use billboards along the highway or glamorous ads in the magazines, etc., but can we not present the blessings promised for faithfulness in keeping the commandments of the gospel in such a way that the desire for the blessings will be far greater than the temptations to do wrong?

STRENGTH OF GENTLENESS

We have found in teaching children that each child responds differently. When we are teaching our own children, therefore, we must know their nature and appeal to them accordingly.

It is said that there is nothing so strong as gentleness, and nothing so gentle as real strength. Be careful, you parents and teachers. Explain the beauties of the gospel, play up the blessings that the Lord promised as a reward for faithfulness. Sheer force rarely accomplishes anything.

I cannot help thinking of the father of a large family, who ruled by force. Every meeting must be attended by every child. Tithing was enforced, departure from the truth was punished by physical violence, but there was little love and less teaching of the principles of the gospel in an attractive form to make the children want to do right. As a result, when each child grew old enough to rebel, it left home. It is hard for others to penetrate this rebellious spirit and right the wrong that has been done. If we cannot teach by love, then we cannot really teach at all. It is a human failing to resent being told we must do thus and so without being given a reason. Even some reasoning does not produce the desired results.

BLESSINGS FORFEITED

I am thinking now of a young man who came from a good family, who had been taught that tobacco was poisonous to the system and did great bodily harm. He had been told of the great waste of money involved in the use of tobacco. (And, by the way, may I say that eight million, four hundred seventy-two thousand, nine hundred and fifty-three dollars were spent in Utah for cigarettes for the year 1949. Compare that figure with some of the figures President Clark gave us the other day.) This young man resented the curtailing of his actions. He said it was his own business. The Church had no right to order his personal actions. Well, the result was the same as in thousands of other similar cases. He could not feel comfortable in church because he reeked of tobacco. He forfeited his chances to increase his knowledge, to associate with his brethren in sacrament and priesthood meetings, and to advance in the priesthood. Not permitted to enter the temple, he has given up eternal blessings in exchange for the fleeting satisfaction of a little tobacco. Why? I cannot think that he knew the blessings he was passing by.

TREASURES OF KNOWLEDGE

The most important part of the Word of Wisdom is that which we so often fail to emphasize—the blessings promised. Beginning with the eighteenth verse of the 89th Section of the Doctrine and Covenants the Lord said,

And all saints who remember to keep and do these sayings,

Now I believe that has reference to what is given in the 89th Section. And then he continues,

. . . walking in obedience to the commandments.

I think that means more than just the 89th Section, I think it means to keep all the commandments and all the laws and ordinances of the gospel.

... walking in obedience to the commandments, shall receive health in their navel and marrow to their bones;

And shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures.

Those treasures of knowledge, I think, are the greatest part of the promises given in the Word of Wisdom.

And shall run and not be weary, and shall walk and not faint.

And I, the Lord, give unto them a promise, that the destroying angel shall pass by them, as the Children of Israel, and not slay them.

If we really understood these blessings, would we so thoughtlessly transgress the law?

IMPROVEMENT IN TEACHING

I do not intend to give a talk on the Word of Wisdom. It is the method of teaching that I wish to stress, that we make the reward for the blessings for obedience stand out so high above everything else that we create a desire to do right to obtain these blessings.

I think our teaching methods can stand improvement when we find such statistics as these. As I stated, nearly eight and a half million dollars were spent for cigarettes in the state of Utah in 1949. A total of $33,531,951.00 was spent for cigarettes, beer, and liquor for the same period, and I think the adjoining states surrounding us don't have any better record. That's over thirty-three and a half million dollars in the state of Utah in one year. Compare that with the figures President Clark gave us the other day on expenditures of the Church. The total expenditures were something near twenty million dollars, yet in the state of Utah we spent thirty-three and a half million dollars for liquor, beer, and cigarettes.

The result is this: over thirty-five percent of the adult male members of the Church do not hold the Melchizedek Priesthood. That is the total to which President Richards referred the other day: Those male adult members who hold no priesthood and those who are adult members of the Aaronic Priesthood comprise over thirty-five percent of the male population of the Church.

Also, fifty-eight and one-half percent of the marriages of members of the Church in the stakes in 1949 were outside the temple. It sounds to me like we need to check up on our teaching methods. There is something wrong with our teaching. It is my opinion that such people have not been taught the valuable blessings and full meaning of these blessings, or no one could keep them away from the temple.

I could tell you of a number of experiences where I know that the people are not being taught what temple marriage or celestial marriage means.

We are all familiar with the methods and results of force with which the past generation was sometimes ruled, and which sometimes still continues. Today there is a tendency to swing to the other extreme. The child is encouraged to choose for himself. Yet if he is to choose for himself he needs to be taught proper values; he needs to understand above all else the blessings promised to those who would adhere to the gospel principles.

APPRECIATION OF PRIESTHOOD

Not long ago a father from one of our prominent Latter-day Saint families proudly told me of his son who was achieving a great name for himself in the scholastic world. He had turned down the opportunity of being ordained an elder for fear duties in the priesthood might interfere with his studies. He is now married—not in the temple. Yes, he may attain great heights in this world, but at the risk of losing the blessings of eternal life.

Contrast that with what I heard the other day. One of our mission presidents said that he valued more highly his ordination as a high priest than his doctor's degree from Cornell University. That's the kind of faith that the priesthood is made up from; that's the kind of faith that I thank God we have in the Church.

JOYFUL LIVING

I tell others, many of them, the difference between civil marriage and celestial or temple marriage is the difference between slavery and godhood for eternity. The Lord makes it sound a little nicer when he says those who reject the law of celestial marriage will be ministering angels, and worlds without end shall have no increase. Waiting on others with no further progress is an eternal existence but is not real living. Living involves progress. Many people are just existing in this life, but not really living. It is the inner consciousness of righteousness and progress that makes for happiness. It is no wonder that good Latter-day Saint people are often said to be the happiest people on earth. We have more to live for.

A recent convert to the Church was telling me how much happier her life has been since she has accepted the gospel. Always before she had lived in constant fear of death, and, to her, the unknown beyond. Now the gospel plan and the knowledge of the future have taken away all fear and put in its place a happiness and joy beyond description, but well understood by true Latter-day Saints.

REWARDS FOR OBEDIENCE

Brothers and sisters, let us familiarize ourselves with the blessings the Lord has promised and stimulate a desire in others to receive them, and we will find that the price set to receive them will dwindle into insignificance in comparison with the magnitude of the blessings promised. We are rewarded for obedience in attending meetings, by partaking of the sacrament, renewing our covenants that we may have his Spirit to be with us. For paying tithing the Lord has said,

... Prove me now herewith . . . If I will not open you the windows of heaven and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. (Mal. 3:10.)

Further, the Lord says in the Doctrine and Covenants, 84th Section,

And also all they who receive this priesthood receiveth me . . .
For he that receiveth my servants receiveth me;
And he that receiveth me receiveth my Father;
And he that receiveth my Father receiveth my Father's kingdom;
therefore all that my Father hath shall be given unto him.

And this is according to the oath and covenant which belongeth to the priesthood.

Therefore, all those who receive the priesthood receive this oath and covenant of my Father, which he cannot break, neither can it be moved. (D. & C. 84:35-40.)

The gospel is full of many such glorious blessings. May the Lord bless us that we may so live to receive them and teach them to others, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

The radio audience undoubtedly will be interested to know that the tabernacle is crowded beyond capacity, men and women standing in the aisles of the main body of the hall and in the gallery. The building is filled with eager listeners. We are informed that the Assembly Hall also is crowded with people attending these services by radio and television.

All will now join in singing "Do What Is Right." Following the congregational singing we shall be favored by remarks from Elder Ezra Taft Benson of the Council of the Twelve.

The congregation sang the hymn "Do What Is Right."

ELDER EZRA TAFT BENSON

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My beloved brethren and sisters: If I may have an interest in your faith and prayers and a portion of the Spirit of the Lord, I desire to give expression to a few thoughts which I have had in my heart since returning from the shores of war-torn Europe some three years ago.

A MIRACULOUS DRAMA

I should like to speak with reference to a rather miraculous drama that is taking place today before our very eyes. In large measure it is unobserved, particularly by spiritual leaders, and yet it has been predicted by prophets anciently thousands of years ago, and in modern times has been referred to frequently by Latter-day prophets during the past one hundred and twenty years.

In spiritual matters mankind seems inclined to worship the past and ignore new revelation of the present. People generally revere prophets dead and persecute or ignore the living while disregarding current fulfilment of ancient and modern prophecy. This condition was evidenced in the Meridian of Time as the people proclaimed Moses and Abraham and rejected the greatest of all prophets—yea, even the Redeemer of the World. In large measure the same spirit characterizes the present.

This great event of which I speak is one of the signs of the times, and is very important, it seems to me, particularly to all Christian people. It is transpiring in a small strip of country about one hundred and ten miles long and fifty to sixty miles wide, in an area about the size of the state of Vermont. This little section has a population of approximately three million, divided as follows: about 1,700,000 Arabs; approximately 140,000 Christians and other relatively minor sects; and about 1,000,000 descendants of Judah, the son of Jacob.

The number of Jews has multiplied in recent years in this area in a rather remarkable manner. Plans are underway for the incorporation of about a million and a half more during the immediate months ahead, and projected plans call for an eventual population of some four million in this small area.

This one and a half million to be added during the next few months according to plans, will bring approximately two hundred thousand Jews from displaced persons' camps throughout war-torn Europe; about seven hundred thousand other European Jews; some six hundred thousand now living in Moslem countries; and approximately one hundred thousand from other continents.

In connection with this great drama, it seems to me that the words of the Lord through Isaiah are being fulfilled again, namely that in the last days the Lord would proceed to do a marvelous work and a wonder, that the wisdom of their wise men should perish, and the understanding of their prudent men should be hid. (See Isa. 29:14).

THE JEWISH PROBLEM

While in Europe in 1946, when mention was frequently made in the European papers of the Jewish problem, I received a comment from one of our great industrial leaders in this country who is a student of this particular problem, in which he said the only salvation the Jew has is to be as good a citizen as he possibly can of whatever country he is a resident.

Then later, one of our prominent business leaders quoting a high church authority whose church numbers into many millions in the South American countries, stated that the Jewish people would do their cause much more good if they attempted to move their people from places where they are not wanted to places where they are wanted, for example, South America, where there is ample room.

As Latter-day Saints, familiar with ancient and modern prophecies, we of course do not agree that some other more suitable place should be and will be found for the descendants of Judah. We believe in the over-ruling power of Providence in the affairs of men and nations. We believe that the Old Testament prophets clearly predicted the dispersion and scattering of Israel and the eventual gathering of Judah in the land given to their fathers.

LACK OF WISDOM

Some of our magazines have commented editorially on this same problem. I have before me a quotation made in 1948 from one of our most popular magazines and reprinted in the New York Herald Tribune, which has a wide circulation through their European edition printed in Paris, in which the author states:

What the Jews really need is not a national state, but the right sort of world. "If the nations carried out the provision in the United Nations charter for universal respect for, and observance of, human rights, and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion," it would do far more to solve the Jewish problem than any multiplication of the Jewish population in Palestine.

In 1949, about a year ago, the United States News and World Report commented on the miscalculations of government officials and military experts with reference to the outcome of the struggle then being waged in Palestine, and reported that the "prophecies of the military experts, in particular, have had to be revised." Then it continued by outlining the predictions of military authorities in our own country and in Great Britain particularly, to the effect that it was only a matter of a very brief time until the Jews would be overcome and be wiped out and "the Arabs would win quick control of Palestine. Now," the article continues, "these official but private forecasters are in a state of confusion," and the "U. S. and Britain, as a result, have to adjust their diplomacy, their military strategy to this fact of a strong Israel in the midst of Arab weakness."

It seems as though this probably is one more evidence of the fact that the wisdom of the wise shall perish. The prophecies of economists, wouldbe statesmen, and military experts fail, while those of the Lord through his prophets are vindicated.

An interesting sidelight on this recent development is the fact that many of the descendants of Judah who have assembled in Palestine seem to look upon the events of the last few months as being nothing short of miraculous. It is a common comment among them that victory, in their eyes at least, was a miracle which cannot be explained in purely military terms. Some of our recently returned missionaries from Europe who have visited that land bring back the same report.

PROPHECIES CLEAR

Now the prophecies are very clear with reference to the dispersion and scattering of Israel and Judah. Moses, Ezekiel, Amos, Jeremiah, and others made clear predictions that Judah would be scattered. The Master referred to it when asked by his disciples for a sign as to the end of the world. The Lord said,

And they [referring to the Jews] shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations: and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled. (Luke 21:24.)

Jeremiah made it clear that they, the Jews, would be persecuted with the sword, with famine, and with pestilence and that the Lord would deliver them to be removed to all kingdoms of the earth to be a curse, and an astonishment, and a hissing, and a reproach, among all the nations whither I have driven them:

Because they have not hearkened to my word, saith the Lord. (Jer. 29:18-19.)

Is it possible that the times of the Gentiles are nearing their fulfillment, that the time is approaching when the gospel will be carried to the descendants of Judah? I think one of the saddest chapters in history is the account of the dispersion and suffering of Judah.

SUFFERINGS OF JUDAH

I have before me a quotation of Will Durant in his book, The Story of Civilization, in which he states that "no people in history fought so tenaciously for liberty as the Jews, nor any other people against such odds." He says further, "No other people has ever known so long an exile, or so hard a fate."

Then referring to the siege of Jerusalem under Titus, lasting for 134 days, during which 1,110,000 Jews perished and 97,000 were taken captive; he states that the Romans destroyed 987 towns in Palestine and slew 580,000 men, and a still larger number, we are told, perished through starvation, disease, and fire.

Nearly all Judea was laid waste. So many Jews were sold as slaves that their price fell to that of a horse. Thousands hid in underground channels rather than be captured. Surrounded by Romans they died one by one of hunger while the living ate the bodies of the dead.

Scarcely eight thousand Jews were left in all of Palestine. And even their banishment and scattering didn't end their persecution. Efforts were made to drive them from various countries. Some nations made an effort to banish them completely. They were accused of causing the "Black Death" that spread through Europe in 1348, and many Jews were crucified therefor.

I have said nothing regarding the Crusades and the dastardly deeds perpetrated in the name of Christianity upon the remaining Jews in Palestine. Yes, the prophecies regarding the dispersion and the suffering of Judah have been fulfilled. But the gathering and re-establishment of the Jews is also clearly predicted.

GATHERING OF ISRAEL

The gathering has three phases: the gathering of Israel to the land of Zion, the American hemisphere; the return of the Ten Tribes from the countries of the north; and the re-establishment of the Jews in Palestine as God's chosen people.

This miracle of the return of the Jews was to be one of the events to precede Christ's second coming, and the scriptures are very clear with reference to this fact. Isaiah said that they shall gather "the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth" and "set them in their own land," that they will "build the old waste," and "repair the waste cities." (See Isa. 11:11-12.)

Jeremiah, who predicted so clearly their dispersion, also states that the Lord will "cause them to return to the land that I gave to their fathers, and they shall possess it," and "build them, as at the first." (Jer. 30:3; 33:7.)

The prophets of the Book of Mormon even more clearly predict the conditions under which they will gather. These prophets also foresaw the time when they would begin to believe in Jesus Christ, that the kings of the Gentiles would be as nursing fathers and their queens nursing mothers in helping to bring about their return. These prophets make it clear that eventually the fulness of the gospel will be carried to Jerusalem and to the descendants of Judah.

In our day, in that first visit of Moroni to the Prophet Joseph, mention was made that the "dispersed of Judah would be gathered from the four corners of the earth." Thirteen years later, when Moses delivered the keys for the gathering of Israel and the Kirtland Temple was dedicated, the Prophet Joseph made further reference to the promises made to Judah and appealed to the Lord that the time may soon come when the children of Judah would return to the land promised to their father, Abraham.

In some of the revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants, particularly the 133rd Section, reference is also made to the fact that the elders would go to the nations of the earth, to the Gentiles first, and also to the Jews, that the Jews would "flee to Jerusalem," and that "Judah, after their pain shall be sanctified." (D. & C. 133:8, 13, 35.)

DEDICATION OF PALESTINE

As Latter-day Saints, from the very inception of this latter-day work, we have had a deep interest in this group of our Father's children, the descendants of Judah. One hundred and ten years ago, at this very conference, two of the elders of the Church, Elders Orson Hyde and John E. Page, were called to go to the land of Palestine and dedicate it for the return of the descendants of Judah.

Ten years before, the Prophet Joseph had predicted on the head of Orson Hyde that in due time he should go to Jerusalem, the land of his fathers, and be a watchman to that people. History tells us that Elder Hyde did go and dedicate the land in 1841, and in 1873 Elder George A. Smith went to that land and again dedicated it for the return of Judah.

In Elder Hyde's prayer of dedication on the Mount of Olives, he prayed that the barrenness and sterility of the land would be removed, that springs of water would burst forth, that the land would become fruitful again, that the Lord would subdue their unbelief and "incline them to gather in upon this land." He also prayed that God would inspire the kings of the earth to help bring about the promises made to Judah.

Other prophecies were made in connection with this event. Great Britain was referred to particularly as one of the nations which would play a very prominent part in helping to bring this about. And almost immediately following the visit of George A. Smith to this land, organizations began to come into existence, the purpose of which was to sponsor the return of the Jews to the land of Palestine.

PROPHECY OF WILFORD WOODRUFF

At about this same time, President Wilford Woodruff uttered a very important prophecy, prayer, and testimony with reference to this people, in which he said,

... the Lord has decreed that the Jews should be gathered from all the Gentile nations where they have been driven, into their own land, in fulfilment of the words of Moses, their law-giver. And this is the will of your great Elohim, O house of Judah, and whenever you shall be called upon to perform this work, the God of Israel will help you. You have a great future and destiny before you and you cannot avoid fulfilling it; you are the royal, chosen seed, and the God of your father's house has kept you distinct as a nation for eighteen hundred years, under all the oppression of the whole Gentile world. You may not wait until you believe on Jesus of Nazareth, but when you meet with Shiloh your king, you will know him; your destiny is marked out, you cannot avoid it. (Wilford Woodruff, Matthias F. Cowley, p. 509.)

Then he said further that the time would come when the armies of the Gentiles would be gathered against them, but he promised further that the time is not far distant when the rich men among the Jews would be called upon to use their abundant wealth to gather the dispersed of Judah and purchase the ancient dwelling places of their fathers in and about Jerusalem, and rebuild the holy city and temple. (Ibid.)

It is rather significant that up to 1948 more than seven hundred million dollars had been expended by American Jews alone in helping to bring about the fulfilment of this prophecy by President

Wilford Woodruff. The part that Great Britain played in the liberating of Palestine from Turkish rule is a matter of history which occurred during World War I in a remarkable manner. Then Lord Balfour, secretary of foreign affairs for the British government, made a very significant statement of policy to the effect that his Majesty's government would view "with favor the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people, and will use their best endeavors to facilitate the achievement of this object."

This statement of policy was later supported by the Congress of the United States and was endorsed by President Wilson and all of his successors that it is the policy of our own land to look with favor on the establishment of a national home for the descendants of Judah in Palestine.

RETURN OF THE JEWS

So today, my brothers and sisters, in fulfilment of these ancient and modern prophecies, a great drama is being enacted in Palestine. The Jews are returning as one of the events of the last days. Resources are being built up through reclamation, rehabilitation, and modernization.

I read the other day of one authority who stated that there is more scientific "know-how" concentrated today in Palestine than in any similar area upon the face of the earth. I wonder if there isn't purpose behind it. I noted, too, in the report of the Anglo-American Commission which was made of their study in 1946, that they commented that considerable numbers of the Jews are being converted to Christianity and that their attitude toward the Christ as the Redeemer of the world is rapidly changing. There has been much confusion over the Palestine question—much talk of division of the land, of quotas, import restrictions—but out of it all I cannot help feeling that we will see a complete fulfilment of the prophecies which have been made regarding this people. These prophecies are in rapid course of fulfilment before our very eyes today.

PERSECUTION OF JEWS

While in Europe, traveling through the war-torn countries, I was deeply impressed with the fact that the Lord had used, as a means of prodding the Jews and bringing about a fulfilment of his purposes, legalized persecution under the great and terrible Nazi program. The Jews were persecuted and driven, I presume, like no other people under heaven.

I remember standing on the ruins of what was the largest Jewish ghetto in Europe, in the Jewish section of Warsaw, Poland, in August 1946. There we were given a description of what had transpired as being somewhat typical of that which had gone on in various parts of Europe through the establishment of the medieval ghetto.

Here 250,000 descendants of Judah had lived prior to the war. Under the Nazi rule, through forced labor, they were required to build a wall around the ghetto. Later some 150,000 Jews from other parts of Europe were brought into that area. Then finally the entire section was destroyed, wiped out by bombing after the people had been robbed and ravaged.

As we stood on the crumbled brick and mortar and the rubble some fifteen feet deep, with only the spire of one burned synagogue showing—no other building in that vast area—we were told by the guide that some two hundred thousand bodies, it was estimated, still remained under the rubble of those once great buildings in this section of Warsaw.

We visited some of the concentration camps and the crematoriums where it is estimated, six million of the sons and daughters of Judah lost their lives, reducing their world population from seventeen to eleven million.

DETERMINATION TO RETURN

We were impressed almost to tears as we visited some of these wanderers, these persecuted and driven sons of our Heavenly Father, to find how doggedly they were determined to return to Palestine. Ofttimes, as they would come into relief agencies to get temporary help, we would ask them why they did not settle nearby. Sometimes they were invited to stay. But they had one desire, and that was to return to the land of their fathers.

I recall that a survey was made by UNRRA, United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration, in which they interviewed 3,629 Jews in displaced persons' camps to determine what they would like to do if they were given their freedom to move and locate as they pleased. Of this number, 3,619 indicated that they would like to go back to Palestine. Nine of them expressed a desire to come to the United States, and one to Australia. This desire—which is almost a passion—was so great that it was as strong as life itself.

Of course, much of the movement then was done through the underground and by smuggling. I hold in my hand a short clipping, one of many we took from the papers in London. This one is entitled, "One Hundred Jew Ships Now." It is taken from the London Evening News, November 5, 1946. It is an Associated Press dispatch and reads:

British Naval Intelligence Officers in Jerusalem revealed today that Jewish underground has bought at least one hundred ships, many paid for with U. S. funds, to carry refugees to Palestine from southern European ports.

Crews are promised £10 a head for each refugee smuggled into Palestine.—A.P.

FUTURE EVENTS

Yes, my brethren and sisters, this great drama goes on before our very eyes, in large measure unnoticed by the Christian world. One hardly ever hears reference to the prophecies regarding Judah's return. Yet, the promises are clear that it would be one of the great events of the last days. And, of course, we know from modern revelations and prophecies that much more is yet to occur. Read the fourteenth chapter of Zechariah and the eleventh chapter of Revelations with reference to other great events that are yet to come, affecting directly this chosen people, the House of Judah. Eventually their city will be encompassed by Gentile armies. Yes, during their last great struggle, the Master will make his appearance as the Mount of Olives cleaves in twain for their protection.

Then, no doubt, will be realized the fulfilment of the glorious statement made by the Lord in the Doctrine and Covenants through the Prophet Joseph with reference to Judah, which I read in conclusion:

And then shall the Jews look upon me and say: What are these wounds in thine hands and in thy feet?

Then shall they know that I am the Lord; for I will say unto them: These wounds are the wounds with which I was wounded in the house of my friends. I am he who was lifted up. I am Jesus that was crucified. I am the Son of God.

And then shall they weep because of their iniquities; then shall they lament because they persecuted their king. (D. & C. 45:51-53.)

God help us, my brothers and sisters, to realize the importance of these great and stirring events as signs that the second coming of the Master is approaching rapidly, and may they be the means of emphasizing to us the importance of putting our own houses in order, maintaining the faith, and doing all in our power to help further this glorious work of the latter day, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Ezra Taft Benson of the Council of the Twelve has just concluded speaking. He will be followed by Elder Alma Sonne, one of the Assistants to the Twelve, who has but recently returned from presiding over the European Mission.

ELDER ALMA SONNE

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My brethren and sisters, it seems most proper and fitting that I should follow Elder Ezra Taft Benson as the speaker this morning, for I followed him to Europe, and I followed him as the president of the European Mission, which I consider was a great privilege and certainly a great honor. It was my second mission to Europe. I went there first in the year 1910.

KINGDOMS SHAKEN

At that time, as a missionary in Great Britain I delivered a gospel tract which had been written by President Charles W. Penrose. In this tract, as a conclusion, President Penrose wrote, "The Lord is about to shake terribly the kingdoms of this world. . . . He will break in pieces the nations as a potter's vessel;" and as a warning to the readers he said, "Salvation has come unto you; reject it not, lest ye fall and perish." I have seen some of the scenes described so well by President Benson this morning, and here in this holy place I feel singularly isolated from a world torn asunder by tumult, contention, and misunderstanding. This place is like an oasis in a desert land.

WAR-WEARY WORLD

Europe is faced with uncertainty everywhere, and it seems to me some of its nations are floundering spiritually, economically, and politically. When I traveled through the countries of Europe the first time with President Benson, I saw a war-weary world. The people were sick and tired. Some of them were cold and hungry. The ravages of war had cut deep into their lives. I shall never forget the grim and solemn scenes which met our eyes. President Benson, with his benign and reassuring personality, was an inspiration wherever and whenever he appeared. The people needed to be reassured and strengthened. Worldly possessions had been lost. Homes had been destroyed. Landmarks had disappeared. Hopes and aspirations had been shattered. Food, clothing, and shelter, so essential to humanity's welfare, were scarcely available. Fear and anxiety haunted the lives of the people.

The winter of 1946-47 was the worst in a century. A good meal and a warm room were luxuries. I shall not forget the supreme satisfaction I felt when I saw the welfare supplies which had been shipped from Salt Lake City safe and secure in the warehouse in Geneva, Switzerland. It is a bold undertaking, this welfare program, for the Latter-day Saints are now scattered throughout the world. No Latter-day Saint in Europe then doubted the prophetic inspiration back of the welfare program. Here was life; here was hope for the starving and suffering members of the Church. But proper distribution to those who needed it was a problem. President Benson with characteristic energy and wise supervision had already opened the door, but problems continued to arise. The German relief committees in Berlin, Stuttgart, and other places, did not fully understand our welfare program. Many explanations were needed. The real problem was to reach our own Church members.

RELIEF EXTENDED

Other charitable organizations made a general distribution through agencies which had been set up for that purpose. The Church and its members had been liberal in their contributions, as you know, for that purpose, but the welfare program was intended primarily to assist members of the Church who had suffered reverses and setbacks. I am glad to report to you today that most of them were reached, lives were saved, distress relieved, and the ordinary comforts restored.

Expressions of gratitude came from every quarter. Newspapers and magazines recognized and praised the project and pointed to it as a great Christian endeavor. I would be derelict and ungrateful if I failed to mention the gigantic task which rested upon the general welfare committee of the Church. Their work was well and efficiently done. Shipments reached their destinations without serious losses or delays.

GOD AT THE HELM

I do not believe the Church will ever fail in any great emergency. God will always be at the helm to inspire and direct its leaders.

The pioneers succeeded under such inspiration. They laid the foundation of a great commonwealth and did whatever was necessary to safeguard the work established by Joseph Smith, the Prophet. No failure was anticipated in the work to be done. "No unhallowed hand," said the Prophet, "can stop God's work from progressing."

Said the Lord Jesus, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." (Matt. 24:35.)

MISSIONARY ENTERPRISE

The missionary enterprise of the Church has gone forward under divine inspiration and protection. It has survived bitter persecution, misrepresentation, scurrilous falsehoods waged against it by opponents who would not and could not understand. It has withstood slander, abuse, and mobocracy when the Church was young and its members few. Today it is more firmly established than ever. The barriers are crumbling, and the doors are being opened by an unseen power for the proclamation of the everlasting gospel. It will not fail.

God's purposes are ripening in the earth, and the predictions concerning the last days are being fulfilled. The gospel is being preached without fear or favor wherever religious freedom has been established. The preservation of that freedom rests upon you and me and all free men. The adversary of truth and light is organizing his forces in the world. He is the great enemy of freedom and human rights, both of which are God-given. I have seen the adversary's system in operation in Europe. It stifles all progress and destroys happiness and independence. It makes for slavery and paves the way for sorrow and disappointment. It is the exact opposite of Christ's plan of life and salvation. The two can never be blended.

BOOK OF MORMON

I want to testify that the Book of Mormon is well-nigh indispensable in the great missionary work which is going forward in the world. Its importance cannot be overstated. In some of the missions of Europe, copies of the Book of Mormon have not been available, and the demand for them has been great. The scriptural productions of Joseph Smith, the Prophet, are powerful and irrefutable testimonies to the divinity of his calling.

GOSPEL OF SALVATION

It was my privilege to meet and to be interviewed by many newspaper representatives in Europe during my stay there. One of them, after a lengthy interview, made this statement to me:

God will give the British people a chance. That chance will come from your Church. You can save England; you can save Europe; you have everything. It will be a long, tough job; it will take a generation. I can see this, but I haven't the genius to explain it; I don't know enough. You have done one hundred years of constructive work without a slip and without misrepresentation and you have not found it necessary to lie and deceive as have some other churches.

God's work is going forward in Europe, and it is the gospel of salvation. May we appreciate it, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

This interesting and impressive session will now be concluded by the congregation singing "O Say, What is Truth?" and the benediction will be offered by President William Noble Waite of the South Los Angeles Stake, California, after which this conference will stand adjourned until 2:00 o'clock this afternoon.

The proceedings of the afternoon session will be broadcast over KSL, and by arrangement, over the other stations to which you are now listening.

Any important messages and calls that may have come, and a number have, will be announced at the dismissal of this meeting over the loud speaking system on the grounds. Every one will do well to listen carefully to such announcements.

Singing by the congregation, "O Say, What Is Truth?"

The closing prayer was offered by President William Noble Waite of the South Los Angeles Stake.

Conference adjourned until 2:00 p.m.

SECOND DAY

AFTERNOON MEETING

The fourth session of the Conference convened at 2:00 p.m., Saturday, April 8.

Again the building was crowded to capacity, as was the case at the previous sessions, and, again the Assembly Hall was filled with people who were privileged to see and hear the proceedings in the Tabernacle by means of television.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

This is the fourth session of the One Hundred Twentieth Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle at Temple Square, Salt Lake City. The house is crowded to capacity.

President George Albert Smith is presiding at this meeting. The speaker, President Clark, is conducting the service at his direction.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over KSL in Salt Lake City, and by arrangement through KSL, over the following stations:

In Utah: KSUB at Cedar City, KSVC at Richfield, KJAM at Vernal, KVNU at Logan.

In Idaho: KGEM at Boise, KID at Idaho Falls, KEYY at Pocatello, KBIO at Burley.

In Oregon: KBKR at Baker, KSRV at Ontario.

And by transcription, over KTYL at Mesa, Arizona, and KEXO at Grand Junction, Colorado.

The services will also be televised over the KSL television station, channel 5.

The choir singing for this session will be furnished by the Swiss-German Choir. Elder Heinz Rimmasch, conducting, and Elder Alexander Schreiner at the organ.

We will begin the services by the choir singing "The Heavens Resound."

The opening prayer will be offered by President William A. Strong of the Teton Stake, Idaho.

The choir sang, "Great Is The Lord."

ELDER MARION G. ROMNEY

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

"It is only a question of time, unless people repent of their sins, until war will come, not only war but pestilence will come, until the human family disappears from the world. There is only one way to enjoy peace and happiness in this world,—repent and turn to the Lord. That is the only way."

In these words President Smith introduced the theme of this conference at the opening session last Thursday. This statement went down into my heart like fire, because I did not accept it as the statement of a man but as the word of God through his living prophet to this living generation. I desire to say a few words about this theme. It reminds me of the eloquent statement of Alma.

O that I were an angel, and could have the wish of mine heart, that I might go forth and speak with the trump of God, with a voice to shake the earth, and cry repentance unto every people!

Yea, I would declare unto every soul, as with the voice of thunder, repentance and the plan of redemption that they should repent and come unto our God, that there might not be more sorrow upon all the face of the earth. (Alma 29:1-2.)

Here indeed is a consummation devoutly to be wished.

FIRST PRINCIPLES

In the Prophet's journal under date of March 1, 1842, he made the following entry:

At the request of Mr. John Wentworth, Editor and Proprietor of the Chicago Democrat, I have written the following sketch of the rise, progress, persecution, and faith of the Latter-day Saints. (History of the Church, Vol. IV, p. 535.)

The sketch thus introduced, he concluded with the Articles of Faith, the fourth one of which reads:

We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: (First) Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; (Second) Repentance; (Third) Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; (Fourth) Laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost.

You will note that in the sequence here followed by the Prophet, repentance as a principle of the gospel is preceded by faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. It is clear from the three articles preceding the one I have quoted that to have this faith requires first, belief in God as our Eternal Father, in Jesus Christ as his beloved Son, and in the Holy Ghost; and second, acceptance of the doctrines that men will be held accountable for their own sins, and that through the atonement of Christ they may be saved by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the gospel.

REPENTANCE LEADING TO SALVATION

To one believing these truths and, in the light of them, having faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, repentance means not only "a turning with sorrow from a past sinful course of action"—as it has been defined—but, in addition thereto, that through repentance he may bring himself within the reach of the atoning blood of Jesus Christ, so that thereby he may be cleansed from the effects of his transgressions and obtain forgiveness of them. His repentance is a preparation for baptism by immersion for the remission of his sins and reception of the Holy Ghost.

While turning from a sinful course at any time and for any cause is commendable and desirable, the repentance which "work-eth . . . to salvation," as Paul puts it, is inseparably connected with the other first principles of the gospel.

TRUE REPENTANCE

Many sober and earnest people are recognizing the need for men to repent of their sinful ways and are advocating that they turn to God. This is good as far as it goes, but the only people who can call the inhabitants of the earth to true repentance are the members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The reason this rather sweeping statement is true is because such a call to repentance cannot be made without a divine commission.

For such repentance to be declared under divine commission, as President Smith declared it at the opening of this conference, is by no means a new thing. It was not new in the days of the Prophet. It is as old as this world. In the morning of earth's temporal existence, an angel commissioned by the Lord himself declared repentance unto the first mortal man, saying,

. . . thou shalt repent and call upon God in the name of the Son forevermore . . .

And the Lord God called upon men by the Holy Ghost everywhere and commanded them that they should repent;

And as many as believed in the Son, and repented of their sins, should be saved; and as many as believed not and repented not, should be damned; and the words went forth out of the mouth of God in a firm decree. (Moses 5:8, 14-15.)

NEED OF THE HOUR

From then until now, men have lived upon the earth, and particularly in the land of America, under this firm decree. As it has been in the past, so must it continue to be, for the Lord Almighty has spoken it. It seems to me, therefore, that the most desperate need of this hour is repentance, and that quickly, for it is later than we think. As long ago as 1829 the Lord said:

Behold, the world is ripening in iniquity; and it must needs be that the children of men are stirred up unto repentance. (D. & C. 18:6.)

Time and time again in the past, as men and nations have faced destruction, the Lord has sent his commissioned servants to declare unto them repentance as the way of escape. "Noah called upon the children of men that they should repent," and although "they hearkened not unto his words," he "continued his preaching unto" them, saying,

Believe and repent of your sins and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, . . . and ye shall receive the Holy Ghost, . . . and if ye do not this, the floods will come in upon you; nevertheless they hearkened not. (Moses 8:24.)

Melchizedek, king of Salem, was commissioned by the Lord and declared repentance unto his people. He,

... having exercised mighty faith, and received the office of the high priesthood according to the holy order of God, did preach repentance unto his people. And behold, they did repent; and Melchizedek did establish peace in the land in his days; therefore he was called the prince of peace. (Alma 13:18.)

REPENTANCE IN AMERICA

Upon our own beloved land of America, God has repeatedly commissioned his servants to call the people to repentance that they might escape destruction. The Prophet Ether "... came forth in the days of Coriantumr," king of the Jaredite nation, and at the Lord's direction sought out Coriantumr personally and prophesied unto him

... that, if he would repent, and all his household, the Lord would give unto him his kingdom and spare the people—

Otherwise they should be destroyed, and all his household save it were himself.

... And it came to pass that Coriantumr repented not, neither his household, neither the people; and the wars ceased not. (Ether 13:20-22.)

Fifteen and a half centuries ago, because of their unrighteousness, the remnants of the Nephite race were in a death grapple upon this land with their brethren, the Lamanites. Among them stood the mighty prophet-leader Mormon, to whom the Lord said,

... Cry unto this people—Repent ye, and come unto me, and be ye baptized, and build up again my church, and ye shall be spared.

And I did cry unto this people, but it was in vain; and they did not realize that it was the Lord that had spared them, and granted unto them a chance for repentance. And behold they did harden their hearts against the Lord their God. (Mormon 3:2-3.)

Therefore, they, as well as the Jaredites, were wiped off this land. This was true notwithstanding the glorious promises made in the Book of Mormon, some of which were quoted this morning by President Young. All those promises were conditioned upon repentance.

UNRIGHTEOUSNESS TODAY

The world in which we live today is sick nigh unto death. The disease of which it suffers is not a new one. It is as old as history. Its name is unrighteousness. The cure for it is repentance. The Lord foresaw our present extremity long ago and prescribed the remedy. On November 1, 1831, he said:

... I the Lord, knowing the calamity which should come upon the inhabitants of the earth, called upon my servant Joseph Smith, Jun., and spake unto him from heaven, and gave him commandments;

And also gave commandments to others, that they should proclaim these things unto the world. (D. & C. 1:17-18.)

Two things which the Lord had done in preparing a way of escape are here referred to. First, he had given commandments, and second, he had commissioned men to proclaim them.

One of the commandments was this:

Hearken, O ye people of my church, saith the Lord your God, . . .
Hearken and hear, O ye inhabitants of the earth. Listen, ye elders of my church together, and hear the voice of the Lord; for he calleth upon all men, and he commandeth all men everywhere to repent. (D. & C.
133:1, 16.)

And surely every man must repent or suffer. (D. & C. 19:4.)

And here is the commission:

Hearken, O ye elders of my church, . . . hearken and hear and obey:
Behold, verily I say unto you, I give unto you this first commandment that ye shall go forth in my name, . . .

And ye shall go forth in the power of my Spirit, . . . in my name, lifting up your voices as with the sound of a trump, declaring my word like unto angels of God. (D. & C. 42:1-2, 4, 6.)

And what shall we declare?

And ye shall go forth baptizing with water, saying: Repent ye, repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. (D. & C. 42:7.)

OUR RESPONSIBILITY

We who today bear the priesthood of God are the legal heirs to this great commission. Ours is the responsibility of officially declaring repentance unto all the inhabitants of the earth. None are exempt. We must discharge this responsibility, regardless of the manner in which our message is received. With respect thereto, we are under the same obligation to this generation as was Ezekiel to the house of Israel in his day. You will recall that the Lord said to him,

Son of man, I have made thee a watchman unto the house of Israel: therefore hear the word at my mouth, and give them warning from me.

When I say unto the wicked, thou shalt surely die; and thou givest him not warning, nor speakest to warn the wicked from his wicked way, to save his life; the same wicked man shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thine hand.

Yet if thou warn the wicked, and he turn not from his wickedness, nor from his wicked way, he shall die in his iniquity; but thou hast delivered thy soul. (Ez. 3:17-19.)

I regard this commission to declare the saving principle of repentance as a great blessing. I am grateful to my Father in heaven for it, for there are few things more tormenting to me than to be faced with a distressing situation about which I can do nothing. The commission we bear gives us a positive course to follow in meeting the problems we face. It is a sustaining and comforting feeling to know that the course we are trying to get people to take is the course the Redeemer would have them take if he were here in person.

NO OTHER WAY

To those who contend that the way of repentance is too slow, I can but reply there is no other way. Our prophet has so declared in this conference. If we do not come to ourselves soon and repent, individually and as nations, of our light regard for human life, our unchastity, our lying and deception, our pride and boastfulness, our covetousness, envying, greed, and thirst for power, our drunkenness, our lack of humility, reverence, and prayer, our desecration of the Sabbath day, our lack of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and, in short, of all our unrighteousness, we shall find it is too late, for other proposed remedies to the world's present predicament will prove futile. There are no armaments, no governmental schemes, no international organizations, and no mechanisms for the control of weapons which can preserve an unrighteous people. "Wickedness never was happiness," declared Alma to his wayward son Corianton; and Samuel, the Lamanite prophet, said to an unrighteous generation of his day,

... ye have sought all the days of your lives for that which ye could not obtain; and ye have sought for happiness in doing iniquity, which thing is contrary to the nature of that righteousness which is in our great and Eternal Head. (Helaman 13:38.)

Alma has given us compelling evidence of his conviction that repentance is more effectual than arms in maintaining peace. You will recall that he was the elected chief judge of the Nephite nation. As such he was the governor of the people of Nephi and commander-in-chief of their armies. Seeing many of them dissenting and conniving with the enemy, he, notwithstanding his power to strengthen and command his armies, placed the affairs of state in other hands that he himself might cry repentance unto the dissenters. The reasons for his unusual actions are given in the following quotation:

And now, as the preaching of the word had a great tendency to lead the people to do that which was just—yea, it had had more powerful effect upon the minds of the people than the sword, or anything else, which had happened unto them—therefore Alma thought it was expedient that they should try the virtue of the word of God. (Alma 31:5.)

MESSAGE OF HOPE

Now, my brothers and sisters, there is nothing vindictive in the message of repentance which we bear. It is a message of salvation and hope, and not of condemnation. It is our purpose to declare it to our fellow men in charity and love, but we are in no sense apologetic for it. We know it is of God. We bear it at his command and, we trust, in the power of his spirit.

May the Lord help us to keep in mind the place of repentance in the plan of redemption, the need for it in the lives of men and nations, and our commission to proclaim it. May he help us to make it a daily practice in our own living that, when we do proclaim it, we may effectively hasten the great day envisioned by Alma when there shall be "no more sorrow upon all the face of the earth," I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

ELDER MILTON R. HUNTER

Of the First Council of the Seventy

My dear brethren and sisters, I would like to acknowledge my deep appreciation to my Father in heaven this afternoon for the privilege I have of belonging to the true Church of Jesus Christ along with you good people. I also wish to express to each of you my gratitude for your kindness to us when we come out to your stake conferences. I do humbly ask our Father in heaven to guide what I say this afternoon.

TWO GREAT COMMANDMENTS

When the Son of Man was upon the earth some two thousand years ago teaching the gospel, a certain lawyer came to him and asked a question. He asked: "Master, which is the greatest commandment in the law?" The Savior answered and said: .

... Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind.

This is the first and great commandment.

And the second is like unto it. Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.

On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets.
(Matthew 22:36-40.)

The Son of Man on that occasion declared that the very foundation of all religious life, the very foundation and the heart of the worship of God was love—a love for God and a love for our fellow men. In fact, his whole message throughout his three years of ministry upon this earth was centered in the great law of love.

THE LAW AND THE PROPHETS

The last part of Jesus' statement to the lawyer, "upon these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets," can be explained as follows. In the days of the Savior, the Hebrew scripture was divided into three main divisions. The first division was called the "Torah" or "Law." It was composed of the five books of Moses. The second division was called the "Prophets." It consisted of the teachings of the major and minor prophets and some of the historical books. The third division was called the "Writing." It was composed of the remainder of the Old Testament books as we have them today.

The Law and the Prophets were very highly canonized, or, in other words, accepted as scripture or as the Word of God in the days of the Savior. The Writings were in the process of being canonized at that time. Therefore, when Jesus Christ said, "On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets," he was saying, "On these two commandments hang all the teachings of the Holy Scriptures." In fact, in answer to the lawyer's question, "Which is the greatest commandment in the law?" Jesus quoted, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God . . ." from Deuteronomy 6:5, and, "thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself," from Leviticus 19:18.

COMMANDMENT OF LOVE

In the very beginning, the Only Begotten Son of God gave the commandment of love to Father Adam and has repeatedly revealed throughout the generations that we should love God and that we should love our fellow men. In fact, this dispensation we are living in is the Dispensation of the Fulness of Times, wherein all things are to be restored; therefore, the Lord told the Prophet Joseph Smith

Wherefore, I give unto them a commandment, saying thus: Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy might mind, and strength; and in the name of Jesus Christ thou shalt serve him.

Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. (D. & C. 59:5-6.)

I think that the modern revelation is even more beautifully stated than the one recorded in the New Testament.

CRITERIA OF LOVE

How do we know when we love God with all of our hearts? What criteria do we have by which we can judge? The Savior himself gave us the criteria. He said, "If ye love me, keep my commandments." (John 14:15.) Therefore, only to the extent that we keep the commandments that God has given us do we love the Eternal Father and his Only Begotten Son.

The night before the Savior's crucifixion, he gave his great last known discourse and instructions to his Apostles. Some of the most beautiful sentiments found in the New Testament were recorded by John in his report of what occurred on that occasion. I would like to quote just a few lines from that wonderful discourse.

As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you: continue ye in my love.

If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love; even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in his love.

These things have I spoken unto you, that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full.

This is my commandment, That ye love one another, as I have loved you.

Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends.

Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you.

These things I command you, that ye love one another. (John 15: 9-14, 17.)

The Lord has also re-revealed in modern days the criteria by which we can tell whether we love God or not. He said to the Prophet Joseph Smith—and of course that commandment is to us through the Prophet—

If thou lovest me thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments.
(D. & C. 42:29.)

Notice the phrase, "keep all my commandments." Our promise of exaltation in the presence of God is based on that phrase.

COMMANDMENTS

Now the commandments are very numerous, and we haven't time to discuss them in detail on this occasion. You know them as well as I do. But I would just like to call to mind a few of God's commandments to us. We have the great law of tithing, wherein the Lord has declared that if we do not pay one-tenth of all that we possess to him, we rob God. Among the other great commandments are the law of chastity and the Word of Wisdom. These laws pertain to keeping our bodies clean and pure. There are also the laws and commandments pertaining to honesty, love, charity, patience, kindness, reverence, and numerous others. In fact, the Lord has said that if we receive exaltation in his kingdom, we will do so only on condition that we render obedience to "every word that proceedeth forth from the mouth of God." (Ibid., 84:44.)

I should like to emphasize the fact that today is the day for Latter-day Saints to prepare to meet God by keeping all of his commandments, lest the night cometh wherein we cannot repent. If we do not render obedience now, we might find ourselves at the judgment day in the condition that the lady found herself in a dream, as reported by one of the stake presidents at a conference I attended in Salt Lake City about a year ago. I do not recall the stake, and so I don't know which stake president to give credit to for this story.

STORY OF THE TEAPOT

He reported that there was a certain lady living in his ward who had joined the Church over in Europe when she was a girl; and like many of the European people she had formed the habit of drinking tea. After she joined the Church of Jesus Christ, like quite a few Mormons (I am sorry to say) she continued the habit of drinking tea. She reared a large family. Her children married. Her husband died, and she became a widow. And then she became a temple worker. Day after day she went to the temple, and no doubt the consciousness of the tea-drinking habit she had bore rather heavily on her mind or on her conscience. One night she had a dream. She dreamed that she died and that she passed on into the other world. There she came into the presence of the Savior, the Prophet Joseph Smith, and many other great and good people who had lived on this earth and whose lives had been such that they were now worthy to become celestial beings. Very sweet, serene, and happy were the feelings that she experienced there. In fact, there were no words to describe how beautiful the conditions were there, until she looked down into her hand and saw her old dirty, black teapot. Then her happiness turned to sorrow and shame. She immediately looked all around in the heavenly realm for some place to hide that teapot, but she couldn't find any place. She had to hang on to it. Then she awoke. Cold drops of perspiration were running down her face. She got out of bed, turned the light on, dressed, and went in the other room. There on her stove sat her old dirty teapot. She picked it up, went down to the back of the lot and threw it into the Jordan River, and she said, "There! I am not going to take you to heaven with me."

My brothers and sisters, members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, now is the time for you and me to get rid of all of our old dirty, black teapots. In other words, we should get rid of all our sins. We should repent, as Brother Romney just pointed out in his address, and show God that we love him with all our hearts, with all our mind, and with all our strength.

LOVE OF NEIGHBOR

We shall now devote our attention to the second great commandment, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." I do not know whether each of us has thought of this idea very much or not. A man cannot love God with all of his heart unless he loves all of his fellow men with all of his heart. If a man says that he loves God and does not love his fellow men, according to the teachings of the prophets, that man is a liar. He is not telling the truth. For example, John made this very unusual and wonderful statement:

Beloved, let us love one another; for love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God.

He that loveth not knoweth not God; for God is love.

If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar; for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?

And this commandment have we from him. That he who loveth God love his brother also. (I John 4:7-8, 20-21.)

ANALYZE THE HEART

Now, I would like to ask everyone of us this afternoon to analyze his or her heart for a moment or two and see if we really love our fellow men. If we do love them, let us see how deep our love is for them. The commandment is to love our neighbors as much as we love ourselves. I know that is most difficult to do. The first law of nature is the law of self preservation, and people pretty generally follow that first law. In fact, I think the most important person to almost everybody in this world is himself or herself.

A good Latter-day Saint husband may think he loves his wife with all his heart. He may think he loves her more than he loves himself, but if he happens to express an idea that she doesn't agree with and she voices her disagreement, then his hair immediately stands on end. He builds up all sorts of arguments against her in defending his own position. In fact, he feels a resentment in his heart.

Too many people—and I mean, definitely, too many Latter-day Saints—gloat over the sins of their unfortunate neighbors. In fact, it seems to build them up a little bit to learn that somebody else has made worse mistakes than they. If the telephone rings and the party on the other end of the line tells the story that he has heard about a sin committed the previous night by one of his neighbors, the one who received the telephone call immediately goes over to his next-door neighbor and says, "Did you hear what happened last night?" Then he repeats the account of the unfortunate happening and greatly exaggerates the story. Is that true love? Is that charity? It is not!

True and pure love and charity are found where a mother and father are concerned. In the cases where parents of sinful children are concerned, the parents don't go to the telephone and tell their neighbors, but they go to their private chambers. There they wet their pillows with their tears, and they pray to God that he will save their son or their daughter from sin and from the ways of error into which he or she has fallen.

LETTER OF THE LAW

Ofttimes you and I have met members of our Church who seem to live all the letter of the law. They pay their tithes and offerings, they keep the Word of Wisdom, and they attend Church regularly. In fact, one would think that they were excellent Latter-day Saints. Yet, too many of these people have professional jealousy cankering their hearts. They have envy, strife, malice, and even hatred in their hearts. They fail to treat the ones with whom they associate with love and with charity. They don't express the Golden Rule in the way they treat the ones with whom they work and associate. Yet they claim to love God. John declared that such individuals are liars and that they cannot love God and at the same time hate their fellow men. Now to what extent are we guilty?

LOVE OF ENEMIES

The Savior not only taught that we should love our friends, but he also taught that we should love our enemies. To quote:

And behold it is written also, that thou shalt love thy neighbor and hate thine enemy;

But behold I say unto you, love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them who despitefully use you and persecute you. (III Nephi 12:43-44.)

Is that teaching going too far? Can we really love our enemies? I would answer that if we get that godliness in our hearts, the pure love of Jesus Christ that we should have, we can love our enemies.

Many of the great prophets have demonstrated that they could love their enemies. Jesus Christ demonstrated far beyond the shadow of a doubt that he could love his enemies. For example, a few days prior to his crucifixion, you recall that the Son of God and his Apostles were in Jerusalem. He knew that the Jews were going to betray him and that he was going to be crucified. On that occasion he felt greatly concerned about what was going to happen to the Jews because they had rejected him and the gospel which he had proclaimed. He prophesied regarding the calamities which would come upon his people, and then he lamented as follows:

O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!

Behold, your house is left unto you desolate. (Matthew 23:37-38.)

EXAMPLE OF JESUS

And then Jesus told his Apostles about the great calamities that would come upon his people and upon the remainder of the inhabitants of the earth before his second coming. The scriptures report that the Son of God was touched so deeply on certain occasions because of the sins of the people and the calamities that would befall them that "Jesus wept."

How many of us are so concerned about the sins of the people of our home towns that after we have done all we can to teach them the way of eternal life, we then sit upon a hill overlooking our home town and weep? I am afraid that very few of us do that. We do not have that much charity; we do not have that much feeling; we do not have that much love in our hearts for those who fall into transgression.

I firmly believe that when Jesus Christ was hanging on the cross he showed the greatest expression of love that has ever been shown in history. He was suffering the terrific pain which accompanies crucifixion. The jeering multitude was down below the cross, saying, "If thou be the Son of God, come down from the cross." (Ibid., 27:40.) The ordinary man would have cursed the taunters and revilers, but the Only Begotten Son of God while suffering such excruciating pain and revilings merely cast his eyes toward heaven and prayed,

... Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do. (Luke 23:34.)

This great example of love reminds me of the martyrdom of Stephen. While the Jews were stoning him to death, the scripture reports:

And he kneeled down, and cried with a loud voice, Lord, lay not this sin to their charge. And when he had said this, he fell asleep. (Acts 7:60.)

NEEDED QUALITIES

All Latter-day Saints who work in the Church and hold any Church position must love God; and if we are going to be acceptable to him, we must love our fellow men. In fact, we have received a divine commission in our day. It applies to the General Authorities of the Church, to all the stake presidents, bishops of wards, and to all stake, ward, and branch officers and teachers. This is the word of the Lord:

And no one can assist in this work except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, charity, being temperate in all things, whatsoever shall be entrusted to his care. (D. & C. 12:8.)

The greatest poem that I know of devoted to the subject of love or charity was written by Apostle Paul. It is found in First Corinthians, chapter thirteen. Time will not permit a discussion of that great poem here. Suffice it to say that Paul mentioned a lot of godly attributes that we might possess. And then he summarized by saying that if we possess all of those godly attributes and have not charity, we are nothing. He put charity and love as the greatest of all attributes.

TEACHINGS OF MORMON

I would like to quote from Mormon the great teachings he gave on love and charity. He wrote.

And again, behold I say unto you that he cannot have faith and hope, save he shall be meek, and lowly in heart.

If so, his faith and hope is vain, for none is acceptable before God, save the meek and lowly of heart; and if a man be meek and lowly in heart, and confesses by the power of the Holy Ghost that Jesus is the Christ, he must needs have charity; and if he hath not charity he is nothing; wherefore he must needs have charity.

And charity suffereth long, and is kind, and envieth not, and is not puffed up, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil, and rejoiceth not in iniquity but rejoiceth in the truth, beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things.

Wherefore, my beloved brethren, if ye have not charity, ye are nothing, for charity never faileth. Wherefore, cleave unto charity, which is the greatest of all, for all things must fail—

But charity is the pure love of Christ, and it endureth forever; and whoso is found possessed of it at the last day, it shall be well with him.

Wherefore, my beloved brethren, pray unto the Father with all the energy of heart, that ye may be filled with this love, which he hath bestowed upon all the true followers of his Son, Jesus Christ; that ye may become the sons of God; that when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is; that we may have this hope; that we may be purified even as he is pure. (Moroni 7:43-48.)

In conclusion, my beloved brothers and sisters, I humbly ask our Father in heaven that he will let a rich abundance of his Holy Spirit enter our hearts; that the pure love of Jesus Christ might dwell in our hearts; that we might do away with all envy and strife; that we might be filled with love; that we might really love the Lord our God with all our hearts, might, mind, and strength; that we might really and truly serve God in the name of Jesus Christ and love our neighbors as ourselves. This I ask in the name of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER HAROLD B. LEE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

If I might enjoy the Spirit of the Lord to direct me for a few moments this afternoon, I would like to talk about a subject which has been discussed in all the general conferences of this Church by members of the First Presidency—in every conference, so far as I can recall.

BLESSINGS OF UNITY

I refer to the importance of unity and oneness of the Latter-day Saints.

As I have pondered the importance of this matter, I have recalled some of the blessings we could enjoy if we would be united as a people. If we would be united in paying our fast offerings and observing the law of the fast as fully as the Lord has taught it, and if we were united in carrying out the principles of the welfare program as they have been given to us by our leaders today, we would be free from want and distress and would be able fully to care for our own. Our failure to be united would be to allow our needy to become the pawns of politicians in the public mart.

If we were fully united as a people in our missionary work, we would rapidly hasten the day when the gospel would be preached to all people without and within the boundaries of the organized stakes of Zion. If we are not united, we will lose that which has been the lifeblood and which has fed and stimulated this Church for a generation.

If we were fully united in keeping the law of sacrifice and paying our tithes as we have been schooled today, we would have sufficient to build our temples, our chapels, our schools of learning. If we fail to do that, we will be in the bondage of mortgage and debt.

If we were united as a people in electing honorable men to high places in our civil government, regardless of the political party with which we have affiliation, we would be able to safeguard our communities and to preserve law and order among us. Our failure to be united means that we permit tyranny and oppression and taxation to the extent of virtual confiscation of our own property.

If we are united in supporting our own official newspapers and magazines which are owned and operated by the Church and for Church members, there will always be in this Church a sure voice to the people, but if we fail to be united in giving this support, we permit ourselves to be subject to abuse, slander, and to misrepresentation without any adequate voice of defense.

If we were united in safeguarding our youth from promiscuous associations that foster marriages out of the Church and out of the temples, by having socials and recreations as a united people, as has been the practice from our pioneer days, we would be building all our Latter-day Saint homes on a sure and happy foundation. Our failure to be united in these things will be our failure to receive eternal blessings that otherwise could be ours.

If we were united in safeguarding the Church from false doctrines and error and in standing as watchmen upon the tower as teachers and leaders in watching over the Church, then we would be free from these things that cause many to stumble and fall and lose their faith. If we are not thus united, the wolves among us will be sowing the seeds of discord, disharmony, all tending to the destruction of the flock.

If we were united in our temple work and in our genealogical research work, we would not be satisfied with the present temples only, but we would have sufficient work for temples yet to come, to the unlocking of the doors of opportunity to those beyond who are our own kin, and thus ourselves become saviors on Mount Zion. Our failure to be united will be our failure to perpetuate our family homes in the eternity. So we might multiply the blessings that could come to this people if they were fully united in the purposes of the Lord.

MASTER'S PRAYER

The importance of unity was prayed for by the Master of us all. In that last great prayer—you will recall it—he prayed:

... I come to thee. Holy Father, keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one, as we are. . . .

Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word;

That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. (John 17:11, 20-21.)

The purpose of unity in the Church has been expressed by the Lord both from a positive standpoint as herein expressed, and also in a negative way as given in a revelation at the beginning of this dispensation. The positive purpose of the unity of Saints here is clearly suggested: "that the world may know." May know what? That this is the Church and kingdom of God on the earth to whom Jesus, the Christ, was sent.

"YE ARE NOT MINE"

In the command which he gave in this dispensation, the Master again expressed this same thought from a negative view,

... be one; and if ye are not one, ye are not mine. (D. & C. 38:27.)

If we are not united, we are not his. Here unity is the test of divine ownership as thus expressed. If we would be united in love and fellowship and harmony, this Church would convert the world, who would see in us the shining example of these qualities which evidence that divine ownership. Likewise, if in that Latter-day Saint home the husband and wife are in disharmony, bickering, and divorce is threatened, there is an evidence that one or both are not keeping the commandments of God.

If we, in our wards and our branches, are divided, and there are factions not in harmony, it is but an evidence that there is something wrong. If two persons are at variance, arguing on different points of doctrine, no reasonable, thinking persons would say that both were speaking their different opinions by the Spirit of the Lord.

In the writings of the Apostle Paul to the Ephesian saints, after describing the nature of the Church as it was organized in his day, he said this organization was given for the purpose of the "perfecting of the saints, . . . till we all come in the unity of the faith." When men receive the Spirit of God by living righteously, truth and error begin to disappear.

COMMAND TO "BE ONE"

One of our early Church leaders nearly a hundred years ago made an expression with reference to this important subject in these words:

The command to "Be one" embraces all other commands. There is no law, statute, ordinance, covenant nor blessing, but what was instituted to make the Saints one. This is the ultimate end and aim of the great plan of salvation. For this, Jesus suffered and died; for this, his servants have toiled and labored day and night in our fallen world; for this, all the powers of heaven will be exerted, until Satan shall be overcome, and the earth be redeemed, and all the glorified inhabitants thereof become one. (The Seer, p. 289, 1854.)

If it is so important, then, that this people be a united people, we might well expect that upon this principle the powers of Satan would descend for their greatest attack. We might well expect, also, that if there be those of apostate mind among us, they would be inclined to ridicule and to scorn this principle of oneness and unity as being narrow-minded or as being unprogressive. We would likewise expect that those who are enemies would also seek to fight against that principle.

There were handed to me recently some arguments which were presented before a congressional committee in Washington, D. C., in 1888, by a former mayor of Salt Lake City, in which he said this, about this same matter. "The theocratic tenet of the Mormon Church is a great evil, and opposed to our American institutions. —"What is a theocracy?" (Then he gave his own definition.) "It is government by the priesthood through a direct authority from God. . . . The thing I wish to accomplish is to pass laws which will strike at the foundation of the theocratic system." To put his words plainly, the thing he wished to strike at was the unity of the Latter-day Saints, who believe in a government through a direct revelation from God through his appointed agents.

PLAN FOR UNITY

The Lord has given a plan, a three-fold plan, by which this unity might be fully realized. Unity centers in heaven, even as the Master prayed, "Father, that we might be one." The Saints might become one with the Father and the Son, spiritually begotten by baptism and through the Holy Ghost even unto the renewing of their bodies as the Lord tells us, and thus "... become the sons of Moses and of Aaron. . . . the church and kingdom, and the elect of God," (D. & C. 84:34), and thus become adopted into the holy family, the Church and kingdom of God, the Church of the Firstborn.

Then, besides those ordinances by which we are adopted into that oneness with the Father and the Son, he has given to us principles and ordinances all intended to the perfecting of his Saints, that this same unity might be realized.

Then, finally, the Lord has given this generation another principle, that through his appointed Authorities he would teach his laws and administer his ordinances, and through them he would reveal his will. On the very day this Church was organized, he made this principle clear to the Saints when he said,

Wherefore, meaning the church, thou shalt give heed unto all his words and commandments which he shall give unto you as he receiveth them, walking in all holiness before me;

For his word ye shall receive, as if from mine own mouth, in all patience and faith.

For by doing these things the gates of hell shall not prevail against you; yea, and the Lord God will disperse the powers of darkness from before you, and cause the heavens to shake for your good, and his name's glory. (D. & C. 21:4-6.)

About a year later the Lord expressed that same thing in these words,

What I the Lord have spoken, I have spoken, and I excuse not myself; . . . whether by mine own voice or by the voice of my servants, it is the same. (Ibid., 1:38.)

That is a bold doctrine, those who are not members of the Church and those who are members of the Church who have no faith may think, but I would remind all such that it is also a bold doctrine when we declare that this is the Church of Jesus Christ, the only true Church upon the earth. This could not be the Church of Jesus Christ except for that other defined principle of revelation through the prophets of the Lord.

TEST OF UNITY

May I test your unity as Latter-day Saints? Have you received a witness of the Spirit to your souls testifying that this is the truth; that you know this is the Church and kingdom of God; that you have received by baptism and by the laying on of hands the power of the Holy Ghost by which that unity of testimony might be accomplished? Have you that testimony in your souls?

May I ask you another question? Are you living each day so to improve your lives by living the principles and ordinances of the gospel that you are moving toward that day when you will overcome all things?

Finally, do you believe that these men whom we have sustained in this conference are the men through whom the channels of communication from our Heavenly Father are open? Do you believe—as Enos, the grandson of the great prophet Lehi, declared in his writing when he said he went into the mountain and prayed and “. . . the voice of the Lord came into my mind, again saying, (Enos 1:10)—do you believe that the voice of the Lord comes into the minds of these men? If you do, then you believe what the Lord said that

Whatsoever they shall speak when moved upon by the Holy Ghost shall be scripture, shall be the will of the Lord, shall be the mind of the Lord, shall be the word of the Lord, shall be the voice of the Lord, and the power of God unto salvation. (D. & C. 68:4.)

COUNSEL IN TEMPORAL AFFAIRS

Some there are who are prone to say, “We will follow their counsel in spiritual matters but not in temporal affairs. If they counsel us in other than that which pertains strictly to the spiritual welfare of the people, we will not follow them.” Have any of you ever heard such comments?

Brigham Young tells us that this subject had been discussed early in the history of this Church, and there were some, even the early bishops of the Church, who held out that the Prophet Joseph Smith should not direct them in temporal affairs. He said,

In all ages of the world that we have any knowledge of, when there was a people on the earth whom God acknowledged as his people, he has invariably dictated them in spiritual and in temporal things. This question was agitated year after year in the days of Joseph. The first two bishops in the Church—Edward Partridge was the first, I was well acquainted with him, and Newel K. Whitney was the second—questioned the propriety of Joseph having anything to do with temporal things. Joseph would argue the case with them a little, and tell them how things were, and bring up scripture to show them that it could not be otherwise—that it was impossible for the Lord to dictate people unless he dictated them in temporal affairs. . . .

There were Wm. E. McLellin, John F. Boynton, and Lyman Johnson, who belonged to the Twelve; Frederick G. Williams, second counselor to Joseph, and two-thirds of the High Council, all talking about this, and I went to the Temple and just challenged them to show wherein the Lord ever conferred upon any man in the world the power to dictate in spiritual affairs, that he did not in temporal affairs? They could not do it. (Journal of Discourses, Vol. 18, p. 242-3.)

LOYALTY TO LEADERSHIP

As I have labored among the brethren here and have studied the history of past dispensations, I have become aware that the Lord has given tests all down through time as to this matter of loyalty to the leadership of the Church. I go back into the scriptures and follow along in such stories as David's loyalty when the king was trying to take his life. He wouldn't defile the anointed of the Lord even when he could have taken his life. I have listened to the classic stories in this dispensation about how Brigham Young was tested, how Heber C. Kimball was tested, John Taylor and Willard Richards in Carthage Jail, Zion's Camp that received a great test, and from that number were chosen the first General Authorities in this dispensation. There were others who didn't pass the test of loyalty, and they fell from their places.

I have been in a position since I came into the Council of the Twelve to observe some things among my brethren, and I want to say to you: Every man my junior in the Council of the Twelve, I have seen submitted as though by Providence, to these same tests of loyalty, and I wondered sometimes whether they were going to pass the tests. The reason they are here today is because they did, and our Father has honored them.

I have that same witness about at least two members of the assistants to the Twelve, Brother Marion G. Romney and Brother Alma Sonne, for I saw it, and I know the nature of the test, and I know how they proved themselves to be the sterling men that they are. And so God has honored them, and it is my conviction that every man who will be called to a high place in this Church will have to pass these tests not devised by human hands, by which our Father numbers them as a united group of leaders willing to follow the prophets of the Living God and be loyal and true as witnesses and exemplars of the truths they teach.

BRIGHAM YOUNG'S LOYALTY

Brigham Young in his day was invited into a group of some of those who were trying to argue against that principle of unity. After he learned that they were trying to "depose" as they said, the Prophet Joseph Smith, he stood before them and said something like this: "You cannot destroy the appointment of a prophet of God, but you can cut the thread which binds you to a prophet of God and sink yourselves to hell."

It was that kind of fearlessness which was manifest in him that made him the peerless leader he was to become. It is that same kind of courage, though not always popular, but the kind that has been demanded of every man whom our Father would honor with high places of leadership.

I heard President Smith, and you heard him, four years ago from this stand, after there had been some scurrilous articles written about the Prophet Joseph Smith. He said this, and to me it was the ringing voice of a prophet speaking.

Many have belittled Joseph Smith, but those who have will be forgotten in the remains of Mother Earth, and the odor of that infamy will ever be with them; but honor, majesty, and fidelity to God exemplified by Joseph Smith and attached to his name will never die. (April Conference 1946.)

I paraphrase those words today and make them meaningful to us: "Many there are today among us who would belittle George Albert Smith, and J. Reuben Clark, Jr., and David O. McKay, but those who do will be forgotten in the remains of Mother Earth, and the odor of their infamy will ever remain with them; but honor, majesty, and fidelity to God exemplified by the First Presidency and attached to their names will never die."

God grant us the strength of living to be united with the Saints, to live the principles of the gospel, to listen to these men as the leaders among us directed by our Heavenly Father, all to the end that his full blessings might be upon his Church, I pray humbly, in the name of the Lord, Jesus Christ. Amen.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

The Swiss-German Choir and the congregation will now sing "O Ye Mountains High." At the conclusion of this song we shall hear from President Richard L. Evans, First Council of the Seventy.

Singing by the choir and congregation, "O Ye Mountains High."

ELDER RICHARD L. EVANS

Of the First Council of the Seventy

I recall President Grant's having said many times, "That which we persist in doing becomes easy." I have presented myself many times at this pulpit these past years, and I am not aware that it has become easy—or even any easier.

In all earnestness, if speaking here today to this congregation, and to those outside, is to be less than impossibly difficult, I shall need your help and that of my Father in heaven and I earnestly hope that I may have it.

PRIVILEGE OF REPENTANCE

With Brother [Marion G.] Romney, I have been impressed that the theme of this conference has been repentance. I was much impressed with the statement he read from President Smith's opening message of two days ago; and I remember a phrase from Dr. Merrill's talk of this morning: that we shall either have repentance or slavery.

I remember also a reassuring sentence from President's Smith's talk of two days ago to the effect that every blessing may be ours on condition of repentance and of keeping the commandments of God. I am very grateful for the privilege and the power of repentance, and I think there is evidence that we should all be lost without it.

I don't know what the Lord's eternal timetable is, but I am sure that he is happy to have it modified by the acts of men in the use of their free agency in bringing themselves to repentance. I feel sure that there is no dire prediction of any of his prophets that he would not be happy to have set aside by the repentance of his people.

EXPERIENCE OF JONAH

On this point I have heard two sermons within relatively recent times from the Book of Jonah, both of which have impressed me: one by Dr. G. Homer Durham in which he used the phrase the "Ninevah Cure." The "Ninevah Cure" of course is just plain and simple repentance. The other was by Brother Marion D. Hanks, who serves us so well on Temple Square. He used the phrase the "Road to Tarshish"—which is the road of running from responsibility.

You recall the experience of Jonah, that after trying to run from his responsibility he finally did what the Lord asked him to do and proclaimed that destruction should come upon Ninevah in forty days; and from the king to the lowest of his subjects there was repentance in that great city, and it was not destroyed. But Jonah, being human as well as a prophet, was somewhat disappointed that his prediction of destruction had not been fulfilled. He failed to understand, apparently, that the prediction was dependent upon obedience or disobedience, upon perversity or repentance, and that the Lord is happy to revise his timetable concerning the affairs of men on conditions of repentance.

CURE FOR ILLS OF WORLD

Again I am grateful for the privilege and power of repentance and am convinced that there is nothing wrong with this world (much as there is to worry about) that couldn't be cured by repentance; and I find this hopeful fact—and Brother Romney suggested it also—that regardless of what we may do with the opportunity, it is there. For a man to have a disease for which there is no known cure is quite a different matter from having a disease for which there is a known cure if he will only avail himself of it and pay the price. I am grateful that there is a known cure for the ills of this world. The picture would be one of darkest despair, much darker than any yet painted, if it weren't that there is a plan and a pattern for peace in the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, and that there is the power and privilege of repentance if men will only avail themselves of it.

I say again, I do not know the Lord's timetable, and I think there is ample evidence that it is not for us to know it; "the day or the hour no man knoweth." (Matt. 25:13.) We read in the first chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, before the ascension of the Savior, this word to his Apostles:

It is not for you to know the times or the seasons which the Father has put in his own power. (Acts 1:7.)

There are many things that men are permitted by our Father to change in the use of their free agency. I recall a comment from President Boyer of the British Mission, made a day or two ago when we met with the mission presidents, to the effect that "so long as I have life, I shall fight for the privilege of having enough freedom to make a few mistakes." In the use of our free agency we have made a few and more than a few mistakes. Some of them are costly, and we shouldn't repeat them, and we should avoid making them in the first place, if possible. But the contrary plan was the plan of Lucifer, the plan whereby men would not have been permitted to have freedom to make mistakes, and being able to repent are great privileges which our Father in heaven has given us.

ABRAHAM'S BARGAINING

I do not know what degree of repentance would be required of us to avert some of the things that might be imminent or at least remote possibilities. You recall Abraham's bargaining concerning the destruction of Sodom, how he pleaded that the city would be spared if there were fifty righteous souls, then forty-five, and so on down to ten. I doubt that we shall realize terms as favorable as Abraham was able to secure for Sodom. Apparently he was an astute bargainer, but the ten weren't found, and Sodom wasn't saved. I don't know that ten of a city would be enough to save us today, but I am sure that the degree of our repentance will be taken into consideration. And I earnestly hope and pray that we may give full repentance, and others with us, to the end that our Father in heaven in his mercy and in his patience and in his love for his children, which he has declared, and in whose immortality and eternal life he has stated his earnest interest, will revise his timetables, whatever they may be, according to the degree of our repentance. If he would agree to save a city for ten repentant souls, think what he would do for a whole nation or people who repented!

FAITH IN FUTURE

I recall some five years ago one of the world's eminent philosophers and historians—a British philosopher and historian—making some dire predictions following shortly in the wake of the war

He said, "It is the end," and then went on to elaborate that statement. But it has been five years since then, and I believe that this is a Church that has faith in the future. The statement of President Smith here yesterday is to me evidence of it—the statement that some two hundred or more places of worship have been built by this Church since the philosopher said, "It is the end." There must be many more than this number in the building or in prospect, which is another evidence of our faith in the future. It seems to me that our building program alone, and all our other plans for the future, are evidence of our faith in the future of this Church.

We must have faith in the future regardless of the ultimate eventualities. One of the greatest calamities in this world would be the calamity of sitting down and waiting for calamities. We must not let the things we can't do keep us from doing the things we can do. We must not let remote possibilities or even imminent probabilities keep us from moving forward with all earnestness and all effort.

I should like to say to the young people of this generation that they too must have faith in the future. In spite of all the uncertainties, they must go forward and prepare themselves as best they can for all the problems and opportunities of life. Whatever may come here or hereafter, the future will always be better for those who are best prepared.

No generation has ever lived without facing uncertainty. If those who faced the uncertainties of ten or twenty-five or fifty years ago had sat by and waited for what seemed to them to be imminent calamities, we should not have had the able and ready and well-qualified men that we have today, and that we need and shall need in the next generation.

So I say to these youth of ours: go forth and live your lives with humility, with gratitude, with repentance, keeping the commandments of God and having faith in the future and preparing yourselves for the future, as the Church itself continues its building. There is nothing to lose by having faith in the future, but there is much to lose by not preparing for the future.

I was grateful to hear President Smith say that last year was the year of greatest growth for this Church. We have so many things to be grateful for.

TIME OF THE END

I recall a reported statement, attributed, as I remember it, to President Wilford Woodruff. Some of the brethren of his time are said to have approached him (they had their troubles also) and to have inquired of him as to when he felt the end would be—when would be the coming of the Master? These, I think, are not his exact words, but they convey the spirit of his reported reply: "I would live as if it were to be tomorrow—but I am still planting cherry trees!" I think we may well take this as a page for our own book and live as if the end might be tomorrow—and still plant cherry trees! In worrying about things that are beyond our reach, we should not overlook our opportunities with our own families and friends; in worrying about possible eventualities we should not neglect the things that need to be done here and now, and that are within our reach; the things for which we are immediately responsible; we should not neglect or present opportunities and obligations.

I should like to close with a statement of William Allen White: "I am not afraid of tomorrow, for I have seen yesterday, and I love today."

ASSURANCE OF EVERLASTING LIFE

I am grateful to my Father in heaven for the assurance in my soul that he lives and that he is mindful of his children. I am grateful for his assurance of everlasting life. It has sustained my family these past three months when two sudden deaths have fallen upon us, and we would not have been sustained except for this assurance. And I would leave with you the witness of my soul that God does live, that Jesus is the Christ, that these things to which we are committed here in this conference and in this Church are his work and are of divine origin, and that it is our responsibility to carry them forward.

May his peace be with each of us, and with our children in the perplexing problems that confront them, and give us guidance and give them guidance, I pray in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

BISHOP LeGRAND RICHARDS

Presiding Bishop of the Church

I feel humble, my brothers and sisters, as I stand here today. My heart is full of gratitude to the Lord for my membership in this Church and for my fellowship with the Saints and the brethren. To me, the conference started last Wednesday when we met with these grand mission presidents for two sessions in the temple and heard them tell of the fine work that is being accomplished in the mission fields and the wonderful spirit they have in their work. One who had just been released said, "I find it difficult to become interested in my business." Another of the presidents said, "I prayed that the Lord would let me stay a few months longer, and when my successor arrived and apologized for being late, I said, 'You don't need to apologize. You just answered my prayers.'" It is wonderful how these men can make the sacrifices they make and then feel as they feel. I felt the same when I returned from my first mission. I went into Oregon selling bonds for a company. Every home I entered, I found it difficult to offer them bonds to purchase; I wanted to offer them the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

EARTH CRAMMED WITH HEAVEN

I couldn't help thinking as I sat through these meetings: Isn't it really a pity that it is so hard for truth to get its boots on and to be able to reach the honest in heart of the earth? If they just knew what we have—if their eyes were opened to see and understand! How wonderful it would be for all of our Father's children who really want to do right, if they could know the truth, instead of having to wait, many of them, to get it, possibly, in the eternal worlds.

I thought of the words of Elizabeth Barrett Browning, when she said,

Earth's crammed with heaven,
And every common bush afire with God;
And only he who sees takes off his shoes;
The rest sit round it and pluck blackberries.
—from "Aurora Leigh"

And I thought, if the world could only know how the Lord has crammed the earth with heaven, and how every common bush is afire with God, through the restoration of the gospel. We have heard it referred to here today. "A marvelous work and a wonder," and it is all of that, far beyond the ability of any man or any woman to comprehend. The greatest mission of the Latter-day Saints is to be able to understand and appreciate what the Lord has done, and then make their lives conform thereto. The Lord said, in a revelation to the Prophet Joseph Smith, that "against none is his wrath kindled, save those who confess not his hand in all things." (D. & C. 59:21.) I acknowledge the hand of God in all things. I believe that he rules in the heavens above and that he rules upon this earth. We have heard the brethren today speak of the fulfillment of prophecy, and Peter of Old said,

We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts:

Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation.

For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. (II Peter 1:19-21.)

KINGDOM OF GOD

You heard Brother Sonne this morning read from one of the tracts that Brother Penrose wrote of how the kingdoms of this world would be destroyed. We read in Daniel's interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's dream, in which he states that the kingdoms of this world should become as the chaff of the summer threshing floors; and the wind should carry them away. We have seen them one by one being carried away. But that was not all Daniel saw.

In the more sure word of prophecy which holy men of old gave us under the inspiration and power of the Holy Ghost, he saw that the God in heaven should set up a kingdom in the last days which should never be destroyed, but like a little stone cut out of the mountains without hands, should roll forth until it should become a great mountain and fill the whole earth.

One of our missionary boys preached on that theme down in Florida while I was president of the Southern States Mission, and I think that boy is in this congregation today. At the close of the meeting a minister who was present at that meeting met me at the door—I always went to the door to meet those who had honored us with their presence—and he said, “Mr. Richards, you don’t mean to tell me that you think that kingdom is the Mormon Church, do you?”

I said, “Why not?”

He said, “It couldn’t be.”

“And why couldn’t it?” I said.

He said, “You can’t have a kingdom without a king, and we haven’t any king, and so haven’t a kingdom.”

“Oh,” I said, “my friend, you did not read quite far enough. You just read the seventh chapter of Daniel, and you will see that Daniel saw one like the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven, and unto him was given the kingdom, that all other kingdoms, powers, and dominions should serve and obey him. Now, how can the kingdom be given to him,” I asked, “when he comes in the clouds of heaven, if there is no kingdom here prepared for him? Maybe you would like to know what is going to become of that kingdom. If you will just read it, you will see that Daniel said,

And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him. (Daniel 7:27.)

The Saints of the most High shall take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom for ever, and as if that were not quite long enough, Daniel adds, “even for ever and ever.” (Ibid., 7:18.)

PART OF KINGDOM

Now, brothers and sisters, if you can see heaven in earth, if you have eyes that see, ears that hear, hearts that understand, you know what you are a part of as members of this Church. You are a part of that great kingdom that is being established in the earth.

President John Taylor once made this statement:

We are gathered here for the express purpose of carrying out the purposes of God. The world, however, do not understand it. But I will tell you what they will do, by and by. You will see them flocking to Zion by thousands and tens of thousands, and they will say, “We don’t know anything about your religion, we don’t care much about religious matters, but you are honest and you are honorable and you are upright, and just and you have a good, just, and secure government [speaking of the government of the Church], and we want to put ourselves under your protection for we cannot feel safe anywhere else." (Gospel Kingdom, pp. 71-72.)

IMPRESSIONS OF VISITORS

During the last six months I have had occasion to hear people express themselves as to how they feel about this. We were in the Hotel Utah with one of the greatest economists in the world, and after President Smith had spoken, this man stood up. He was overcome; he had to shed a few tears; then he told us that never in his life had he been in such presence or in such influence. Then he paid us some compliments about our people and said he had felt it on the street and wherever he went.

We had another great national leader here not long ago who made a similar declaration. He said, "I have to come out here in these valleys of the mountains to get inspiration," but he did not want us to tell what he had said because he has to live with those people back in the East, but he said it just the same.

A few weeks ago a lady from Orlando, Florida, came into the office of the Presidency. The receptionist called me and said that this lady would like to know something more about the Church and would I have time to interview her. Well, I had preached in Orlando, Florida, many times, and built a little chapel there, so anyone from Orlando looked good to me. I said, "Send her up." She wanted to know all about the Church. She said, "Mr. Richards, I have traveled all over the United States—I just came from California." (I would tell you what she said about California, but I used to be president of a stake down there, and so my interests there forbid.) But she said, "I don't know what it is, but I feel it everywhere I go. You are different here; you have something different here than I have felt anywhere I have been."

"Well," I said, "that is simple, we have the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ."

STORY OF MINISTER

If we just had eyes that could see, ears that could hear; if we could see heaven crammed into this earth in this great work that God has set his hand to do, and every common bush afire with God—we could understand the story one of the mission presidents told in the report meeting at the temple, of the missionary who called at the home of a minister. This missionary offered to leave a tract, and the minister would not accept it; so, as he left the door he put the tract in the mailbox, and when he came back the next time the minister invited him in. Now, to make the story short, what that man read impressed him, and finally he paid for the publication of a thousand copies of the Book of Mormon. He gave nine hundred of them to the missionaries and kept the other hundred for his family. When the mission president invited him to speak at one of our conferences, he said, "Well, if you call me, I will preach what I have always preached."

The mission president said, "You preach anything you want to as long as you preach the truth."

Then he said, "Hand me your Book of Mormon." He stood up, held up that Book of Mormon before them and said, "Here is the greatest book I have ever read." Then he pledged his loyalty to the Bible, but he said, "I've got something out of this book that I haven't got out of any other book, including the Bible." That was a minister speaking.

If every minister in all the world professedly of the Christian Church could only humble himself enough to put that book to the test, we might have a great army of men all over the world bearing to their faithful people the witness of the great and mighty work the Lord has set his hand to do in this day, the new witness for the Lord Jesus Christ in the earth.

MESSAGE FROM GOD

Speaking of these marvelous things, I heard Brother Ballard make this statement when he visited our mission. He said that one of our greatest national commentators, and he told the name but I will not give it here today as it will serve the purpose without, said he was asked what message could be broadcast to the world that would be considered more valuable than any other message that could possibly be broadcast. After giving the matter some thought and consideration, he decided that to be able to say to the world over the radio that a man who had lived upon the earth and had died had returned again with a message from God would be the greatest message that could be broadcast to the world. Well, that being true, we have the greatest message, for we announce to the world that not only one man, but many men, prophets of the living God who have lived upon the earth have returned again with messages from God; not only messages, but also keys and power in order that the kingdom of God might again be established in the earth as promised by Peter when he said, that the heavens must receive the Christ until the restitution of all things spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began. Do you mean to tell me that if we believe in the words of the holy prophets as I have referred to today, that we have any right to expect the Lord Jesus Christ ever to come in fulfilment of this promise made except there first be a restitution of all things? There isn't time for me to go into the restitution of all things here today. We have built a monument in the state of New York to just such an individual, to Moroni, who lived upon this continent four hundred years following the crucifixion of the Savior and returned again to deliver the plates from which the Book of Mormon was translated to the Prophet Joseph Smith. There stands that majestic monument to his honor, the only one like it in all the world.

Think also of what John the Baptist brought—the Aaronic Priesthood; Peter, James, and John, the Melchizedek Priesthood; the prophets Moses, Elijah, and Elias came with the keys of their dispensations.

HOLY PRIESTHOOD

Then I am reminded of another story one of the mission presidents told in the temple last Wednesday. He took out of his pocket a letter from a minister and read it to us, in which he stated that he never believed that he did not have as much authority as any other man in the world to administer the ordinances of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ until he met the Mormon missionaries and read the Book of Mormon. Now he admitted that he had to accept baptism at the hands of the missionaries of this Church.

We have been told in this conference that we have to have the Priesthood, and I want to tell you that if the world understood and knew the value of the sealing power and ordinances of the Holy Priesthood that God has sent to us in this dispensation, it would revolutionize this whole world.

TEMPLE WORK

I have one more thought I want to leave with you in the next few minutes, and that is about this temple here, and the rest of our temples. When the corner stone of this temple was laid, Brigham Young said something like this,

We are gathered here today upon one of the most momentous occasions that this world has ever known since the foundations thereof were laid, an occasion that has caused the tongues of prophets to speak and their pens to write.

You read the words of Isaiah, where he saw the mountain of the house of the God of Jacob established in the tops of the mountains in these latter days, and he added,

All nations shall flow unto it. And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths. (Isaiah 2:2-3.)

I want to tell you, outside of these holy temples and the sealing ordinances therein, men cannot learn fully of his ways, nor can they walk in his paths.

I have some wonderful testimonies in regard to this matter, but I will only take time to read a few words from a sermon President Woodruff delivered from this pulpit in 1898, as recorded in the conference pamphlet.

I am going to bear my testimony to this assembly, if I never do it again in my life, that those men who laid the foundation of this American government, and signed the Declaration of Independence, were the best spirits the God of heaven could find on the face of the earth. They were choice spirits, not wicked men. General Washington and all the men that labored for the purpose were inspired of the Lord.

Another thing I am going to say here, because I have a right to say it. Every one of those men that signed the Declaration of Independence, with General Washington, called upon me as an Apostle of the Lord Jesus Christ, in the Temple at St. George, two consecutive nights, and demanded at my hands that I should go forth and attend to the ordinances of the House of God for them. (Conference Report 1898, pp. 89, 90.)

I wonder what the ministers of the world would say if they only knew that this were true, and it is true. When these great men who framed the Constitution of our nation came back they were not interested in the future destiny and the development of this great land of America. They came back to request that the ordinances of the house of God be administered for them.

So I say,

Earth's crammed with heaven
And every common bush afire with God;
And only he who sees takes off his shoes.
The rest sit round it and pluck blackberries.

May God help us to see and understand his marvelous work, I pray in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

We will bring this great session of this Conference to a close by the Swiss-German Choir singing, "Daughter of Zion," after which the closing prayer will be offered by President John M. Russon of the Los Angeles Stake, California, and this Conference will stand adjourned until 7:00 o'clock this evening, when in accordance with the custom of the Church, the general meeting of the priesthood of the Church will be held here in the Tabernacle.

Only the priesthood are invited to be present. Persons not holding the priesthood will kindly refrain from attempting to enter the building.

That session will not be broadcast.

The session at 10:00 o'clock tomorrow morning, Sunday, will be broadcast over KSL, Salt Lake City, and by arrangement through KSL over the other stations to which you are listening. That session will also be televised over the KSL television station, channel 5.

Because the Tabernacle Choir broadcast comes from 9:30 to 10:00 o'clock tomorrow morning, those desiring to attend the broadcast must be in their seats by 9:15. As the choir may be rehearsing during the time the audience is gathering, it is necessary to request that the audience come in and take their seats quietly and refrain from making any disturbing noise of any kind during the broadcast.

The Church of the Air broadcast, on which President J. Reuben Clark, Jr., of the First Presidency, will be the speaker, will begin at 8:00 a.m. in this building. Those desiring to attend this broadcast must be in their seats by 7:50 a.m.

The regular session of the Conference will begin at 10:00 a.m.

Any messages that have come for those supposed to be in attendance at this session will be read as usual.

The choir singing for this afternoon session of the Conference has been by the Swiss-German Choir, with Elder Heinz Rimmasch conducting, and Elder Alexander Schreiner at the organ.

I should like to say a word of congratulation and appreciation to this choir. I am sure they come to us with the feeling that they want you to know how much they love the truth and how much they love us. Casual, uncautious remarks are often made about their people which are not justified, and I want to say to them that my heart goes out to them in their tribulation, and I want to say to them that in their singing this afternoon they have preserved the standard and the achievements of their people in the art of music in which they have excelled.

They will now sing "Daughter of Zion," and then President Russon will offer the benediction.

Singing by the choir, "Daughter of Zion."

The benediction was offered by President John M. Russon of the Los Angeles Stake.

Conference adjourned until Sunday morning at 9:30.

CHURCH OF THE AIR

The Church of the Air broadcast was presented Sunday morning, April 9, from 8:30 to 9:30 over radio station KSL and the Columbia Broadcasting System.

The Tabernacle Choir, under the direction of J. Spencer Cornwall, furnished the music for this service, with Dr. Frank W. Asper at the organ. Richard L. Evans was the announcer.

Announcer: The Church of the Air was established by CBS so that clergymen of the major faiths might bring their messages to a nationwide congregation of worshippers. Today's Easter service comes to you through the facilities of station KSL in Salt Lake City, Utah. The speaker will be President J. Reuben Clark, Jr., First Counselor in the First Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. President Clark has titled his address: "He is Risen." . . .

The Choir turns first to the music of the "Messiah" to sing a text from the 15th chapter of First Corinthians: "For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."

Selection by the Choir: "Since by man came death"—Handel—from the "Messiah."

The Choir then sang: "Christ, the Redeemer"—Schubert—arranged by Allen S. Cornwall.

Announcer: We shall now hear on this Church of the Air Service, President J. Reuben Clark, Jr., First Counselor in the First Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. President Clark was formerly United States Ambassador to Mexico, and former Under-secretary of State. He has titled his Easter talk: "He is Risen."

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

On the second morning after the day of the crucifixion, Mary Magdalene, Mary the mother of James, Salome, Joanna, and other women, came early to the tomb where Jesus had been laid on the evening of the crucifixion, "and entering into the sepulchre, they saw a young man sitting on the right side, clothed in a long white garment; and they were affrighted. And he saith unto them, "Be not affrighted: Ye seek Jesus of Nazareth, which was crucified." "He is not here: behold the place where they laid him." "He is risen." "Remember how he spake unto you when he was yet in Galilee." (Mark 16; Luke 24.)

The crafty plan of the fearsome chief priests and Pharisees, to guard the tomb lest his disciples should come and steal him away; the mighty power of Rome witnessed by the Roman watch set to prevent the theft of the body, the sealing of the tomb to make certain no one could enter,—all came to naught. The Christ that died to atone for the Fall of Adam, had risen from the dead to make secure the resurrection of all men from the grave. For had he not said months before, speaking to the Jews in Jerusalem: "I am the good shepherd. . . . I lay down my life for the sheep. . . . Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life, that I might take it again. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This commandment have I received of my Father." (John 10:14-18.)

As he came out from the tomb that early morning, the darkness that had covered the earth since the day Adam fell, rolled back before the divine light of the risen Lord, and then was come to pass the fruition of the divine plan that as in Adam all had died, so in Christ had all been made alive.

APPEARANCES OF RISEN LORD

In the morning of the resurrection he came forth a being of flesh and bone, even as he laid himself down. Though he forbade Mary Magdalene to touch him, the other women who came to the tomb "held him by the feet, and worshipped him." (Matt. 28:9.) Sometime during this first day, he showed himself to Peter, and, in the late afternoon, to the two on their way to Emmaus. "And beginning at Moses and all the prophets, he expounded unto them in all the scriptures the things concerning himself." As he sat at meat with them, "he took bread, and blessed it, and brake, and gave to them." (Luke 24:27, 30.) Their eyes were opened, they knew him, and he vanished from their sight. They returned to Jerusalem, met with the Twelve, except Thomas. The doors were shut. They told of their visit with the risen Lord. Even as they spoke, Jesus stood amongst them. He reproved and calmed their fears. "Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself: handle me, and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have." He asked for food. They gave him and he ate a piece of boiled fish and honeycomb. (Luke 24:39-42.)

Eight days later, the Twelve being again in a room with the doors shut, Thomas now being with them, Jesus again suddenly stood in their midst. He bade Thomas to look at and touch his hands; to thrust his finger into the spear wound in his side, and then, said he, "be not faithless, but believing." (John 20:27.)

On the shores of the sea of Galilee, he appeared to Peter, and Thomas and Nathanael of Cana, to the sons of Zebedee and two others, who had gone fishing. (John 21.)

"After that, he was seen of above five hundred brethren at once," and of James." (I Cor. 15:6-7.)

Eleven of the disciples visited him on a mountain in Galilee, where he had appointed them to come. (Matt. 28:16-20; Mark 16:14-18.)

ASCENSION

Finally, after forty days, he assembled them together in Jerusalem, and then leading them out as far as Bethany, where Mary and Martha and Lazarus lived, and while they still beheld him, "a cloud received him out of their sight." Two men stood before them in white apparel, and said to them: "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."

There is no word in the record that does not bear witness that the actual body that Joseph and Nicodemus had laid in the tomb (John 19: 38-42) had come forth out of it, a resurrected, glorified being, a body of flesh and bone, as he himself said.

Sometime after his resurrection, he came to this continent, set up his Church and did mighty works.

From the beginning of his ministry he had foretold this mighty miracle of death and resurrection. To the multitudes in the temple courts, challenging his first cleansing of the temple and demanding a sign of his authority, Jesus said: "Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up." They thought he spoke of the marbled courts, the holy place, the holy of holies, "but he spake of the temple of his body." (John 2:13-22.)

MESSIAHSHIP AFFIRMED

Declaring to the Jews his relationship to the Father, he said: "When ye have lifted up the Son of man, then shall ye know that I am he, and that I do nothing of myself." (John 8:28.)

To the Jews in the temple, Jesus declared: "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me. This he said, signifying what death he should die." (John 12:32-33.)

Time and again he declared his Messiahship. First by implication when, in the Temple at twelve years with the doctors, "both hearing them, and asking them questions," he asked, on Mary's reproof, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" (Luke 2:46-49.)

To the woman of Samaria who said that when the Messiah came he would tell them the truth, "Jesus saith unto her, I that speak unto thee am he." (John 4:16-26.)

At Caesarea Philippi, Peter, replying to his question: "But whom say ye that I am," declared: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," Jesus blessed him, saying, "Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." (Matt. 16:13-17.)

When the Jews, lifted up in the pride of their hearts, proclaimed Abraham their father, Jesus said: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, Before Abraham was, I am." (John 8:58.)

To the impudent demand of Caiaphas, "Art thou the Christ, the Son of the Blessed?" Jesus replied: "I am: and ye shall see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven." (Mark 14:61-62.)

Thus did Jesus testify again and again to his own Messiahship; thus did those touched by a divine testimony, likewise testify.

THE REDEMPTION

The central point in the great plan framed in the Grand Council of Heaven before the world was formed, was the redemption from the mortal death brought by the Fall, and this mortality was necessary that the spirits of men might be tabernacled in the flesh. (Moses 5:11.) His whole earthly career was pivoted about his atoning sacrifice, his crucifixion and resurrection. He, himself, had proposed the plan. Yet, so tutored, so led, so destined, so knowing, as the hour of his sacrifice drew near, his mortal heart grew fearsome.

In the temple, after saying, "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone: but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit," he added, sensing the approaching sacrifice, "Now is my soul troubled; and what shall I say? Father, save me from this hour: but for this cause came I unto this hour." (John 12:24-27.)

In Gethsemane, he prayed: "Abba, Father, all things are possible unto thee; take away this cup from me," but then, immediately, the divinity in him rising and taking command, he said,

"nevertheless not what I will, but what thou wilt." (Mark 14:36; Matt. 26:42.)

As they met the Judas-led multitude coming to arrest him, Peter cut off the right ear of Malchus. Jesus said unto Peter: "Put up thy sword into the sheath: the cup which my Father hath given me, shall I not drink it?" (John 18:10-11.)

On the cross, in the agony of expiring mortality, he cried aloud to the Father: "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" (Matt. 27:46.)

THE MESSIAH'S PLACE

Of the Messiah's place in the divine economy of God's universe, John declared: "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him; and without him was not any thing made that was made. In him was life; and the life was the light of men. And the light shineth in darkness; and the darkness comprehended it not." (John 1:1-5.)

To the woman of Samaria, of whom Jesus asked a drink of water drawn from the well of Jacob, Jesus said about himself: "If thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is that saith to thee, Give me to drink; thou wouldest have asked of him, and he would have given thee living water . . . whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life." (John 4:10, 14.)

To the multitude, 5,000 strong, which he had fed with the five loaves and two fishes, he declared his place: "I am the bread of life: he that cometh to me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on me shall never thirst." (John 6:26-35)

Again as he taught in the treasury of the temple, he spoke to the Pharisees concerning himself: "I am the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." (John 8:12)

To the people in the temple courts, he declared: "I am come a light into the world, that whosoever believeth on me should not abide in darkness." (John 12:46)

And in the upper chamber on the night of the last supper, discoursing to his disciples, he said: "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me." (John 14:6) He told them of his going away, saying, "Whither I go, thou canst not follow me now; but thou shalt follow me afterwards." (John 13:33, 36.) On the Mount of Olives, he said: "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." (John 17:1-3)

Out near Bethany, at the ascension, as a cloud enfolding him, hid him from sight of his disciples, an angel declared: "This same

Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." (Acts 1:11)

Stephen, before he "fell asleep," battered to death with stones, "being full of the Holy Ghost, looked up steadfastly into heaven, and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God. And said, Behold, I see the heavens opened, and the Son of man standing on the right hand of God." (Acts 7:55-56)

HE IS RISEN

Even as the angel said to the women at the tomb in the early morning of the resurrection:

"He is risen," and "the people which sat in darkness saw great light; and to them which sat in the region and shadow of death light is sprung up." (Matt. 4:16)

"He is risen," leaving with us the word that salvation is in him alone, "for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." (Acts 4:12)

"He is risen," with the glorious promise to us that if we seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, the things of this world will be added. (Matt. 6:33)

"He is risen," trailing death his captive.

"He is risen," the "first-fruits of them that slept." (I. Cor. 15:20)

"He is risen," that all men may likewise rise, each to the station and glory to which his life and works and testimony entitle him, and when we are risen, "shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" (I Cor. 15:54-5)

"He is risen," that as in Adam all died, so in Christ shall all be made alive; for even "the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear shall live," (John 5:25) and hearing, shall be "judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit." (I Pet. 4:5-6)

TESTIMONY OF DIVINITY

For well nigh two full millenniums since he walked and talked with men and from today till time merges into the eternities to come, the divine message vouchsafed to the humble Martha, "cumbered about much serving," (Luke 10:40) shall bring joy to God's children: "I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die. Believest thou this?" (John 11:24-26)

Then from this household drudge came the glorious testimony, unequalled, among the sayings of all others with whom the Christ mingled in Palestine, save alone by the words of the fisherman, Peter: "Yea, Lord: I believe that thou art the Christ, the Son of God, which should come into the world." (John 11:27)

May this testimony, which is also mine, grow in the hearts of all who now have it, and may it come to all who yet seek till they find it, that they may have eternal life, I humbly pray, in the name of him who died that men might live, and who is now risen. Amen.

The Choir sang: "Christ is Risen"—17th century German air, arranged by Deis.

Singing by the Choir, "O My Father."

The Choir also sang "Hosanna"—Leinbach-Pfohl, after which the Organ and humming choir presented "Sweet is the Work."

THIRD DAY

MORNING MEETING

Sunday, April 9, 1950

Preliminary to the commencement of the Sunday morning session of the Conference, which convened at 10:00 a.m., the regular Sunday morning nationwide Tabernacle Choir and Organ broadcast was presented from 9:30 to 10:00 a.m.

The great Tabernacle was crowded to capacity long in advance of the time for presenting this broadcast with people who had assembled to listen to this radio program and the Conference session which was to follow. The Assembly Hall just south of the Tabernacle was filled with people who could not get into the Tabernacle, who listened to and watched the proceedings in the Tabernacle, by means of television. Hundreds, if not thousands of others gathered on the grounds and listened to the services by means of amplifiers that had been installed.

CHOIR AND ORGAN BROADCAST

Preliminary to the commencement of the Sunday morning session of the General Conference, which convened at 10 o'clock a.m., the regular Sunday morning Tabernacle Choir and Organ broadcast was presented from 9:30 to 10:00.

This broadcast, which was presented through the courtesy and facilities of the Columbia Broadcasting System's coast-to-coast network, throughout the United States, was written and announced by Richard L. Evans and originated with Station KSL, Salt Lake City. It was as follows:

(Organ began playing "As the Dew" and on signal the organ and choir broke into "Gently Raise," singing words to end of second line, and humming to end of verse for announcer's background.)

Announcer: Once more we welcome you within these walls with music and the spoken word from the Crossroads of the West.

The Columbia Broadcasting System and its affiliated stations bring you at this hour another presentation from Temple Square in Salt Lake City, with J. Spencer Cornwall conducting the Tabernacle Choir, Frank W. Asper, Tabernacle Organist, and the spoken word by Richard Evans.

The choir first sings a sacred song by Franz Joseph Haydn, with an Easter text taken from the scriptures: "Hereby perceive we the love of God, that He laid down his life for us . . . He died for us . . . that we should live."

(Choir sang, "He Died for Us"—Haydn)

Announcer: Dr. Frank W. Asper turns to an album of devotional organ offerings to present the thoughtful phrases of a "Prayer."

(Organ presented "Prayer"—Asper)

Announcer: The Tabernacle Choir now sings two songs of the Easter season: first, "Easter Joy," from the 15th Century, to be followed by a "Galilean Easter Carol" with these words: "Joy dawned again on Easter day . . . when to their longing eyes restored . . . the Apostles saw their risen Lord."

(Choir sang, "Easter Joy"—Arr. Deis)

Announcer: "And seeing the multitudes, he went up into a mountain: and when . . . his disciples came unto him: . . . he . . . taught them, saying, Blessed are the poor in spirit: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. Blessed are they that mourn: for they shall be comforted. Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth. Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled. Blessed are the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy. Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God." The truth and beauty of the Beatitudes and of all the other ethical and doctrinal teachings of Jesus the Christ would be more than reason enough for His mission among men. But His mission meant much more than moral teaching, and His was much more than a great mortal mind. By his own utterance, and by all other evidence, He was the Son of God, the Savior of mankind—in a manner which admittedly we mortals do not altogether understand—but then there are so many things that are real and undeniable which are beyond the present limits of the minds of men. But this was His mission in mortality: to give unto men a pattern of principles that would lead to peace and progress and and highest happiness here and hereafter—and to die that men might be redeemed from death. To say that we fully understand the necessity for this sacrifice would not be wholly true. But somehow, in the plan and purpose of our Father, it was and is essential to man's eternal march. And somehow, the way to life without limit, the path to eternal progress, was opened up for all men by Him who did for us what we could not do for ourselves. And, so we accept the reality of resurrection with settled assurance; and we accept as part of our Father's plan and purpose . . . the renewal of association with those we love—for "men are, that they might have joy." And to you who have lost those you love, take this comfort to your hearts this Easter day. If there be those who doubt, let them doubt no more. If there be those who mourn, let them be comforted. If there be those who love life, let them prepare to live it—always.

(Without announcement organ presented "In Paradisum"—Dubois)

Announcer: With Frank W. Asper at the organ we have heard a theme fitting to the music and message of this day: "In Paradise" by Dubois.

"And when he had spoken these things . . . he was taken up; and a cloud received him out of their sight. And while they looked steadfastly toward heaven . . . behold, two men stood by them in white apparel; which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go . . ." (Acts 1:9-11)

" . . . I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth." (Job 19:25)

With the earnest conviction of these words from the New and from the Old Testament, the choir recalls a worshipful chorus from Handel's "Messiah": "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain, and hath redeemed us to God . . . Blessing and honour, glory and pow'r, be unto Him, that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever."

(Choir sang "Worthy is the Lamb"—Handel)

(Without announcement organ presented "How Great the Wisdom and the Love"—McIntyre)

Announcer: And now, after the many testimonies which have been given of him, this is the testimony last of all which we give of him: That he lives!—"Christ the Lord is Risen Today."

(Without announcement choir sang "Christ, the Lord, is Risen Today"—Carey)

Announcer: Once more we leave you within the shadows of the everlasting hills. May peace be with you, this day—and always.

This concludes the one thousand and seventy-seventh presentation continuing the 21st year of this traditional broadcast from the Mormon Tabernacle on Temple Square, brought to you by the Columbia Network and its affiliated stations, originating with Radio Station KSL in Salt Lake City.

J. Spencer Cornwall conducted the singing of the Tabernacle Choir. Frank W. Asper was at the organ. The spoken word by Richard Evans.

Immediately following the conclusion of the Tabernacle Choir and Organ Broadcast, the regular session of the Conference commenced.

President David O. McKay:

Though the weather is somewhat cloudy there is sunshine and gladness and reverence in the hearts of thousands here assembled. Twelve beautiful bouquets of Easter lilies adorn the pulpit and the rostrum. The spirit is Easter; the spirit of the risen Lord is present in this vast congregation.

This is the sixth session of the One Hundred Twentieth Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

These services will be broadcast in the Assembly Hall over a loud speaking system and by television.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over KSL, Salt Lake City, and, as heretofore announced, by arrangement through KSL over the following stations:

In Utah: KSUB at Cedar City, KSVC at Richfield, KJAM at Vernal, KVNU at Logan.

In Idaho: KGEM at Boise, KID at Idaho Falls, KEYY at Pocatello, KBIO at Burley.

In Oregon: KBKR at Baker, KSRV at Ontario.

And by transcription over KTYL at Mesa, Arizona, and KEXO at Grand Junction, Colorado.

The session will also be televised over the KSL television station channel 5.

The choir singing will be by the Tabernacle Choir, Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting, Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ.

We shall begin the services by the Tabernacle Choir and the congregation singing "Praise to the Man."

The opening prayer will be offered by President Herbert K. Whitworth of the Idaho Stake.

---

The congregation and choir sang the hymn "Praise To the Man."

The opening prayer was offered by President Herbert K. Whitworth of the Idaho Stake.

President David O. McKay:

The radio audience will be pleased to know, and you should know, that President George Albert Smith is present this morning and presiding at this Easter service.

The Tabernacle Choir will now sing "Easter Morning," after which Elder Matthew Cowley of the Council of the Twelve will speak to us.

Singing by the Tabernacle Choir, "Easter Morning."

ELDER MATTHEW COWLEY

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I think by now we are convinced, brothers and sisters, that the theme of this conference is repentance. We have been called to repentance in sermon and in prayer. For thirteen years I have spent much of my time among people who know how to repent. I have never seen such beautiful repentance in all my experiences as I have seen among the people of the South Pacific.

SPEEDY REPENTANCE

And while I have been thinking about this principle of repentance, there has come to my mind one experience I had during the war years when our young men were going from New Zealand to the war. There came into my office one day two young Maori brothers. They were in uniform. They had volunteered. Natives of New Zealand are not drafted or conscripted in the military service; they have to volunteer. These two young men were about to embark for the Near East and when they came into my office, I detected the odor of liquor. But I was not surprised when they asked for a blessing, for I knew them well; I had lived at the home of their mother on my first mission. I said to them, "Do you deserve a blessing?" They knew what I meant, and they said, "We think we do now; we repented a few minutes ago." That's the speed with which a Polynesian repents.

Under ordinary conditions I think I wouldn't have given them a blessing at that time, but as I looked at them in the uniform of soldiers who had volunteered to give their lives that I might enjoy liberty, religious freedom, and all the other freedoms, the Spirit prompted me to bless them. In my blessing I called them to repentance and told them that the blessings were conditioned entirely upon repentance. I promised them that through their repentance and their righteous examples as soldiers in the theater of war to which they were going, they would return home. And how proud one of those young men was just a year ago when he came to me and said that he was counselor to the president of one of the branches in New Zealand, and that his brother was very active in the Church. From the minute they repented, coming to my office, up Queen Street in Auckland, New Zealand, they had not broken the Word of Wisdom.

DISCERNMENT NEEDED

I think one of the great responsibilities we have, we who hold the priesthood, is the responsibility of acquiring a discernment, a spirit of discernment, so that we may really know when a man has repented.

I was walking along the street in one of our towns in New Zealand one day with my mission president during my first mission.

Sunday, April 9Third Day

I had been staying at the home of one of our Church members, and that's all he was, just a member. He had been a heavy drinker for years, and I had seldom seen him without his pipe in his mouth. The president and I met him on the street. We walked up to him, and the president said, calling him by name, "I want you to get ready to take your wife and go to the temple of God and be sealed to each other." When I went back to New Zealand on my second mission, that man was the president of the best district we had in the New Zealand mission, and how I thrilled when I heard his testimony that from the minute he was asked to repent by the priesthood of God he had never broken the Word of Wisdom. And he not only came to the Hawaiian Temple, but he also came to this temple and received the blessings which God gives to all who properly repent.

UNDERSTANDING POLYNESIANS

I love the spirit of repentance in those people. And I am reminded now that this is the centennial year of the Hawaiian Mission, a mission made great by such missionaries as President George Q. Cannon. President Joseph F. Smith, Lorenzo Snow, and many others. And as I have been laboring among those people, and as it has come to me to judge them even when their membership in the Church was involved, I have always said to myself, "What would Joseph F. Smith have done in this case? What would President George Q. Cannon have done in this particular instance?" I have spent much of my time in finding out or trying to find out what the attitude of those grand and noble men was toward the Polynesian Islanders, and I have yet to hear that President George Q. Cannon or President Joseph F. Smith ever uttered anything but words of love to those people, whether they were active or inactive in the Church. So also my heart has always gone out to them in great love.

They are different from us. They have to be treated differently. We have to understand them, but don't we have to understand ourselves, as well? And in this business of repenting and forgiving men and women of their sins, we must understand one another. We must try to see them as much from their own eyes and get their own viewpoint as we do from our own.

How we need to pray to God for the spirit of discernment! How we need to know that God is love, and that he forgives those who repent!

SPIRIT OF FORGIVENESS

Just yesterday I had copied from one of the sermons of President Joseph F. Smith a few words which he delivered from this pulpit at one of the general conferences. It was on the last day of the conference, and they were his last words to that great assembly. I would like to read them here. I think you will read into these words the spirit of love, of forgiveness, which I know President Smith acquired from his association with those wonderful people in the Polynesian Islands. "Brethren and sisters, we want you to be united." We have heard that theme also in this conference, and many of us need to repent because we are not one; we are not as loyal as we should be.

We hope and pray that you will go from this conference to your homes feeling in your hearts and from the depths of your souls to forgive one another and never from this time forth to bear malice toward another fellow creature. I do not care whether he is a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints or not, whether he is a friend or a foe, whether he is good or bad. It is extremely hurtful for any man holding the priesthood and enjoying the gift of the Holy Ghost to harbor a spirit of envy, or malice, or retaliation, or intolerance toward or against his fellow man. We ought to say in our hearts, "Let God judge between me and thee, but as for me, I will forgive." I want to say to you that Latter-day Saints who harbor a feeling of unforgiveness in their souls are more censurable than the one who has sinned against them. Go home and dismiss envy and hatred from your hearts; dismiss the feeling of unforgiveness; and cultivate in your souls that spirit of Christ which cried out upon the cross, "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do. This is the spirit that Latter-day Saints ought to possess all the day long. The man who has that spirit in his heart and keeps it there will never have any trouble with his neighbor; . . . but he will always be at peace with God. It is a good thing to be at peace with God. (Conference Report, October 1902, pp. 86-87.)

"With malice toward none, with charity for all, with firmness in the right as God gives us to see the right," let us strive, brothers and sisters, to finish this great work we are in, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOHN A. WIDTSOE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My dear brethren and sisters, I am very happy to have this opportunity of mingling my testimony with yours concerning the truth of this great latter-day work.

I always marvel at conference time to see these great throngs assemble in the Tabernacle, and on the grounds surrounding it. Yet I have no real reason to marvel. Truth is always alive and vital. We have the truth. God be thanked for the gift of truth!

EUROPEAN MISSION CENTENNIAL

One hundred years ago at this conference, the brethren then in authority, Brigham Young and those who assisted him, sent out a small army of men into the world to preach the gospel. These were scattered far and wide. Some went into the non-English speaking parts of Europe and there founded missions which are celebrating this year the hundredth anniversary of their beginning.

Rich harvests were gathered. Through the years since that time a stream of men and women, lovers of truth, have flowed from those countries to us here. Even today hundreds and thousands come from those countries to share with us in the blessings of this land and our associations. The fruits that came from the work were further illustrated yesterday, when we had the pleasure and enjoyment of listening to the splendid singing of the Swiss-German Choir. The Church maintains in Salt Lake City and beyond the borders of the city organizations which conduct meetings in several languages. In fact there are seven different language organizations in Salt Lake City. They are maintained to assist these newcomers from foreign lands.

It is not easy, brethren and sisters, for men and women, no matter how much they love the gospel, to come at a mature age, and most of them are mature, into a new land, to learn a new language, and to become used to new customs. But it does not take long for them to adapt themselves to conditions here. They become very valuable citizens, both of the Church and of the land which has adopted them.

Our hearts go out to these brethren and sisters. We want to help them all we can. Their response is tremendously generous. My heart frequently overflows with emotion when I read the letters that come from these newcomers, not only from the foreign speaking countries, but also from England—letters that bear testimony of their gladness in the possession of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, and gladness to be with a group of Saints larger than they can find in their native lands.

THE RESURRECTION

In this conference we have talked a great deal about Jesus Christ and his resurrection. Jesus the Christ is the central figure of the gospel. His resurrection from the grave is an integral part of the Father's plan for man's eternal progression.

We can never say too much about Jesus the Christ and his work. It is always refreshing to hear the old story told, as it was told this morning by President Clark, and the words of Jesus later repeated to us by President Evans. It is always a delight to hear this old sacred story. It is the most important story upon the face of the earth for the blessing of the children of men.

The resurrection is a certainty, not a delusion. That has been told us time and time again in the last few days. I think as modern knowledge has advanced, as men have learned to look more clearly into the mysteries of things, that more than ever before, the resurrection seems logical, rational, and necessary. There are not so many thinking people today as there were yesterday who question the possibility of a resurrection. Multitudes know, thank heaven, that Christ rose from the grave, yet there are many who need our teaching and our help.

FEAR AND UNCERTAINTY

Despite the fact that this certainty of knowledge gives comfort to us all, there is much fear and uncertainty in the hearts of men today. As far as I can remember, in my lifetime there has never been a time when men and women have been so anxious about the future. There is fear of the future in their hearts. Fear is the devil's first and chief tool. With fear he destroys humanity. Men have learned to let loose the forces that hold together the very ground under our feet. Of course, without the steadying power of faith, men are afraid. Sometimes they say the type of chain reaction talked of by physicists may be set into such motion that the whole earth will vanish in a flash. That, of course, is an idle dream. That will not happen. Only when the Lord speaks will the end come.

But uncertainty remains. Men are unhappy. Some people, however, declare that we have too much knowledge; that it would be better for us if we had not quite so much; that if we knew a little less, we would be happier and stronger. That, also, we know is a mistake.

USE OF KNOWLEDGE

God has told us that we should secure to the best of our ability all knowledge. The well of truth will never be drained dry. The problem is not how much knowledge we possess, but how wise we are in using it properly for our own good in accordance with God's commands. Use and misuse lie at the foundation of every good thing that comes to humanity. Therein lies the right of the free agent.

So we can lay aside the doctrine that we have too much knowledge. We do need, however, to secure mastery over ourselves. This lies at the foundation of life in the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. It has been talked about here time and time again. To conquer an army, it was said in olden days, is a very great achievement, but to conquer oneself is greater still. It is the duty of Latter-day Saints to learn little by little to be conquerors of themselves. Self-conquest is the great desire of all Latter-day Saints who understand the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. Under the power of self-conquest knowledge becomes precious to man. The Lord has given us an abundance of truth.

I wonder if in the scriptures given us by the Lord there may not be some fundamental basic solution of the world's difficulties, those that have been discussed so eloquently in this conference.

VISITATION OF MORONI

There is a story in our history, one almost revered, it is so dear to us. Some three years after his first great vision, the Prophet Joseph Smith, a lad about eighteen years of age, lay in his bed pondering upon life and its mysteries, his relationship and duties to God, and also grieving about his mistakes in life. While so meditating, a heavenly, resurrected being appeared before him. His name was Moroni, a well-known name, a well-known figure to Latter-day Saints. We Latter-day Saints do not stop with the fact of the resurrection, for we declare solemnly that in our day men have appeared who have tasted of death, have gone down into the grave, and have come out again resurrected through the almighty power of our Father in heaven. One of these beings stood by the bedside of the young man and told Joseph about his calling, the things he was to do, and the consequences to follow. His duties and obligations, the conditions under which he was to labor, were laid before him.

Moroni quoted liberally from the Bible, much as the quotations stand in King James' version of the scriptures, the Bible in common use at that time, except in one instance. When he used the words of Malachi, he changed one verse of Malachi so completely that it is now looked upon as the first great written revelation of the Lord to the Prophet Joseph Smith through the lips of Moroni. It stands in our book, the Doctrine and Covenants, as Section Two:

Behold, I will reveal unto you the Priesthood, by the hand of Elijah the prophet, before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord.

And he shall plant in the hearts of the children the promises made to the fathers, and the hearts of the children shall turn to their fathers.

If it were not so, the whole earth would be utterly wasted at his coming.

The Lord here teaches how the earth may be wasted. It will not be through one of the atom bombs. If I read this revelation correctly (and it is one of our greatest possessions, through the ministry of the Prophet Joseph Smith), it points out that humanity will win no peace, nor harmony, nor salvation, as we use the word, unless we learn to love one another.

SPIRIT OF BROTHERHOOD

It is a message telling us that in the spirit of brotherhood alone lies the safe future of humankind. That places a heavy responsibility upon us. We are not followers; we are leaders, else we are far astray. We are the ones who must develop and inculcate the spirit of brotherhood in the world. Among us must be the spirit of brotherhood which all the world will notice.

All this has been said by previous speakers, but it is well to repeat it. It is well to call attention to this basic revelation of this dispensation. In it lies the doctrine that unless we have the spirit of brotherhood developed within us, if we remain selfish, self-contained, unwilling to help our fellow men, there will be no salvation. The earth may then be utterly wasted.

The brotherhood of this revelation is more than the brotherhood existing between living people. It is relatively easy to love the living. But there is a higher type of brotherhood enjoined upon us in this revelation, which we must take to heart if the earth is not to be utterly wasted. We must establish a spirit of brotherhood among us and those who have gone before, most of whom we know only as names. The human race is one great family—all children of God. Christ came out of the grave for all of us—those of the past, present, and future. The blessing of the resurrection is for all, not for a handful. There is no aristocracy in heaven except as we obey or disobey the commandments of God.

So the Lord has laid upon us the great duty of universal brotherhood, to save the world, to give to those who have gone before us the opportunities that we enjoy here in life of receiving the blessings that lead to eternal life, and which many failed to receive while on earth. This is one of the greatest responsibilities placed upon man.

REDEMPTION OF THE DEAD

The Prophet Joseph Smith before his death concerned himself greatly with this work. He thought and wrote about it, he spoke about it, he urged upon his people that they forget not the redemption of the dead, for in that redemption lies, as I have said, perhaps altogether, the final solution of the things that vex mankind.

In obedience to this obligation, we as a Church have temples. In the temples alone can work for the dead be done. We are a temple-building and a temple-using people. We began in 1836 and have been building temples ever since. We are a temple-building people for the very purpose of obeying the injunction given to us in Section Two of our Doctrine and Covenants.

My message to you today, following in general the spirit of the resurrection of the Christ, is that we turn our hearts steadily and forcefully towards this duty, the duty of laboring for the dead. We cannot be saved without doing so. The earth cannot continue to its destined end unless we so do. There is much work to be done, for those who have passed on are many. The great number of people that have gone before us who have not heard the gospel have not had the opportunity to partake of the necessary sacraments of the gospel. These we must serve in spirit and in deed. Some will say as I close, "Well, I live far from the temple, I can't do the work required." Well, you can pay someone else to do it. That's not the best way, but it can be done, and I think the Lord will accept it. But there is work we can do at home. There is the field of genealogy; we may keep in correspondence with our genealogical society here in Salt Lake City, one of the greatest and best and finest in the land, in the world, for that matter. Opportunities will come if we seek them. It is marvelous how the troubles of life vanish in the presence of such work, and how the problems of life find their solutions in such work.

The Lord is mighty; he has control of all mysteries. He opens the door whenever it may be needed.

NEED OF TEMPLE WORK

I have felt that as one with you this morning I wanted to say this to you, my brethren and sisters, and call to your attention again the need of work in the temples. We haven't enough temples. We are a million strong, we were told two days ago by the President of our Church. The temples of the Church would not accommodate us if we did our duty in behalf of universal salvation. Let us do our duty for ourselves and for the future of this earth upon which we live and which we hold so dear. And let us remember always that the spiritual forces centering in our temples are more powerful than atom rays or any earthly force discovered by man.

I thank the Lord for his many messages of truth to us and for this great fundamental message. May the Lord give us strength to accept it and obey it. May it find lodgment in our hearts as well as in our deeds and bless us all according to our needs. May this Church of God and of his Son Jesus the Christ continue to grow and prosper, as it will do if we do our work, I pray in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER BRUCE R. McCONKIE

Of the First Council of the Seventy

Joseph Smith was asked: "What are the fundamental principles of your religion?"

He replied:

The fundamental principles of our religion are the testimony of the Apostles and Prophets, concerning Jesus Christ, that He died, was buried, and rose again the third day, and ascended into heaven and all other things which pertain to our religion are only appendages to it. (D.H.C. vol. 3, p. 30.)

ATONEMENT OF CHRIST

The atonement of Christ is the most transcendent and important event that has ever occurred, or ever will occur, in the history of this world. Everything pertaining to life and salvation, all that the Saints have or that they may obtain, center in that most glorious event. Christ came into the world chiefly for the purpose of working out the infinite and eternal atonement.

He said:

... I came into the world to do the will of my Father, because my Father sent me.

And my Father sent me that I might be lifted up upon the cross; ... (III Nephi 27:13-14.)

That was to the Nephites. To the Jews, while in his mortal ministry, he said:

I am the good shepherd: the good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep. ...

... I lay down my life, that I might take it again.

No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This commandment have I received of my Father. (John 10:11, 17, 18.)

FALL OF ADAM

Adam had come into the world; had been the first man, the most noble member, save Jesus only, of the human race; had fallen, as the scriptures recite; and had brought temporal death and spiritual death into the world.

Spiritual death is to be banished from the presence of the Lord. Temporal death is the dissolution of the body and of the spirit. The atonement of Christ came to ransom us from the effects of the fall of Adam. That atonement gives all men temporal life. "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." (I Cor. 15:22.) That atonement offers to all men who will believe and obey the principles of the gospel eternal life or spiritual life again in the presence of the Eternal Father.

GOSPEL IN ITS FULNESS

We Latter-day Saints have the gospel in its fulness and in its perfection. Authorized teachers reveal its doctrines to us; legal administrators are among us to perform the ordinances of salvation. We are on the path to eternal life, and if we endure to the end, we will be saved.

Those in the world who will repent, who will come into the Church, believe the doctrines, and receive the ordinances, will have their sins forgiven. They will be washed clean in the blood of Christ because of the atonement. Those who decline and fail to do this, who will not repent, but who stay outside the reach of mercy, will—in the justice of God—have to pay the penalty for their own sins. They will be required to suffer, even as Christ suffered, which suffering caused himself, "... even God, the greatest of all, to tremble because of pain, and to bleed at every pore, and to suffer both body and spirit, ..." and would that he might not drink the bitter cup. (See D. & C. 19:15-20.)

There is no more important thing in this world, nor will there be, than the single act of the atonement of Christ; and we can be participators in the blessings of it. We can inherit the glories of eternity, and all the rewards that God has promised the Saints, if we will abide the law that he has given us in this day.

To King Benjamin, a righteous and faithful Nephite, an angel of God said this:

For the natural man is an enemy to God, and has been from the fall of Adam, and will be, forever and ever, unless he yields to the enticings of the Holy Spirit, and putteth off the natural man and becometh a saint through the atonement of Christ the Lord, and becometh as a child, submissive, meek, humble, patient, full of love, willing to submit to all things which the Lord seeth fit to inflict upon him, even as a child doth submit to his father. (Mosiah 3:19.)

That we may so do I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Hundreds of years before the Savior walked on the shores of Galilee and was crucified and resurrected, Job declared: "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth." All listening in, and all assembled here, will now have the opportunity to express that truth in his or her own heart, looking introspectively, as you sing with the choir "I Know That My Redeemer Lives."

The Choir and congregation sang the hymn, "I Know That My Redeemer Lives."

ELDER JOSEPH L. WIRTHLINFirst Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric*

My dear brothers and sisters, we have enjoyed a great abundance of the Lord's spirit during this great conference. All of the previous speakers have been richly endowed with it, and I pray it may be the source of my inspiration.

The Lord Jesus Christ declared,

But seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness: and all these things shall be added unto you. (Matt. 6:33.)

SECURITY

This statement of the Savior's involves two objectives to be achieved: first, spiritual security through seeking the kingdom of God and his righteousness; and second, temporal security to be added unto us through our efforts.

The word security has become one of the most used and abused words in the vocabulary of many people. The dictionary defines it as the apprehension of one's well being as to the necessities of life, such as food, clothing, and shelter—a guarantee from want.

In the beginning, when Adam was in the Garden of Eden, he had temporal security. All of the necessities of life were made available by the Lord; but after the fall he was forced into the cold and dreary world with the mandate from the Lord, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread (Gen. 3:19), placing squarely upon his shoulders the responsibility of providing himself with temporal security.

In the minds of holy men there have always been two categories of security, spiritual and temporal. Without the spiritual phase, temporal security could not be achieved. It was a sacred undertaking wherein the blessings of the Lord were needed. Involved in it were holy practices such as prayer, divine principles of faith, thrift, integrity, and endless effort. It demanded supplication to the Lord for his blessings; and at the harvest time the firstlings of the flock and the best of the fields were brought and burnt as offerings of gratitude and thanksgiving to the Lord, representing a great achievement in that a man of his own faith, works, and with the help of the Lord, had provided himself shelter, food, clothing, and the comforts of life, with some marginal reserves to provide for himself and family during periods of illness and in his declining years.

Abraham, beloved of the Lord, had great wealth represented in herds and fields. He had cattle on a thousand hills, and yet with all this wealth he labored diligently for spiritual security. His herds were driven up to the land of Melchizedek, the high priest, where they were tithed, returning to the Lord that which belonged to him.

REJECTION OF THE LORD

After Israel had made the long trek from Egypt to the Promised Land, being ruled by the Lord through his servants, the prophets, for generations, the people arose and cried, give us a king to judge us that we may be like all the nations, that our king may go before us and fight our battles. Samuel, the Prophet, in deep sorrow went to the Lord saying, "They have rejected me." But the Lord said unto Samuel,

. . . Hearken unto the voice of the people in all that they say unto thee: for they have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me, that I should not reign over them.

And he said, this will be the manner of the king that shall reign over you: He will take your sons, and appoint them for himself, for his chariots, and to be his horsemen; and some shall run before his chariots.

And he will take your daughters to be confectionaries, and to be cooks, and to be bakers.

And he will take your fields, and your vineyards, and your olive-yards, even the best of them, and give them to his servants.

And he will take the tenth of your seed, and of your vineyards, and give to his officers, and to his servants.

And he will take your menservants and your maidservants, and your goodliest young men, and your asses, and put them to his work.

He will take the tenth of your sheep: and ye shall be his servants.

And ye shall cry out in that day because of your king which ye shall have chosen you; and the Lord will not hear you in that day. (1 Samuel 8:7, 11, 13-18.)

ISRAEL IN BONDAGE

The battles of the people were not represented only in physical combat with the enemy but also in the struggle for security. Israel had forsaken the Lord; Israel had softened in faith and had been disobedient; Israel was indolent. And they gave up their sons and daughters to the king and his officers. The king took over all of their resources, and the price they paid for a king was their freedom. Under this arrangement the kings of Israel prospered, but the people were downtrodden and found themselves in bondage. The kings forgot the spiritual phase of security; they forgot the Lord. Saul counseled the sorcerer rather than the Lord. David fell from grace because of a grievous sin he committed. Solomon sought after other gods. Dissension rent the kingdom in twain, and a powerful nation took Israel into captivity. This is the history of a nation that rejected the Lord's way of achieving temporal and spiritual security.

HISTORY REPEATS ITSELF

Does history repeat itself? Yes. Today the term security is best defined in the promises of economic kings and politicians in the form of doles, grants, and subsidies made for the purpose of perpetuating themselves in public office, and at the same time depleting the resources of the people and the treasury of the nation. The word security is being used as an implement of political expediency, and the end results will be the loss of freedom, and temporal and spiritual bankruptcy. We have those among us who are calling for an economic king, and the voice of the king replies in promises wherein the individual is guaranteed relief from the mandate given to Adam, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread." Disobedience to this mandate involves the penalty of loss of free agency and individuality, and the dissipation of the resources of the individual. These economic rulers have advocated, and do practice, a vicious procedure called the "leveling down process," which takes from the man who has achieved and distributes to those who are not willing to put forth like effort. Taxation is the means through which this "leveling down process" is implemented. Taxes in the United States during the last decade have increased five hundred percent. If such increases continue, it will mean final confiscation of the property of the people.

CASE OF GREAT BRITAIN

A clear-cut example of the promises of economic kings to the people, with all of the penalties involved, stands out in the case of Great Britain. Great Britain, with fifty years of rule over the seas of the earth, the sun never setting upon her empire, finds herself now in a convulsion of spiritual, political and temporal bankruptcy. She has a king, but he is merely a symbol of her past greatness; but the people, like those of Israel, cried for a new king, an economic king, and the king has responded with the rule of dictatorship, bringing deterioration to the character of the individual, loss of ambition, freedom, individual progress through the right to work when and where he would, and regimentation. The people are forced to heed the call and feel the iron hand of the dictator. Above all, they have lost their free agency. The British people are but mere cogs in the great machine of socialism. The state is paramount; the citizen has been subdued. Their resources have been absorbed, the treasury of the government depleted, and had it not been for the generosity of this great republic, where a few of the fundamentals of freedom, personal initiative, and free enterprise remain, Great Britain would have been but a memory. Just as it was in Israel, so will it be with Great Britain—dissension, division, and communistic captivity.

CONTROLLED ECONOMY

What does this mean to you and to me? We have those among us, too, who over the years have cried for a controlled economy. We have those among us who give succor and support to such a plan, which plan of controlled economy involves the same theories and false philosophies that ruined Israel and are now destroying Great Britain. Economic kings have responded to the call of some people, promising them security against want for their votes. In the attempt to meet the desires of these people, the treasury of this great nation is being depleted, and it covers deficit spending with promissory notes. Expansion of this disastrous policy will deprive American citizens of their God-given freedom, the right to work when and where they will, freedom of speech, freedom of the press—and who knows but what some day the right to worship God according to the dictates of one's conscience may be taken away. It is destroying, and will continue to destroy, the very fundamentals upon which this nation and its people have found prosperity and genuine security. These are not idle words, but the counsel and the words of the Lord as they have been revealed to this nation through prophets and the founding fathers of this great republic. For one hundred and twenty years modern-day Samuels have pleaded with the people to preserve the fundamentals of temporal and spiritual security by being obedient to the gospel, through work, being thrifty and staying out of debt, and above all by remembering the Lord. We have continually been counseled to conserve our resources to provide temporal security during periods of sickness, unemployment, and the days of old age. This people has been taught by the prophets of God that to waste the bounties of the earth is a sin, and surely there is a penalty therefor. The Lord cannot bless an individual or a nation with the bounties of the earth and have that individual or nation deliberately and wantonly waste them, without the law of retribution of want and famine being imposed.

WELFARE PROGRAM

Economic kings have advocated the doctrine that those in distress should be provided for abundantly with no obligations on the part of the recipients, but the Lord has revealed through his prophets a great welfare plan which does not rob individuals in distress of their freedom, personal initiative, and the right to work. In the welfare program the individual is the objective, and through the generosity and cooperative efforts of the membership of the Church, the individual is assured of temporal security, not as a dole or as a gift, but as a bridge to cover the gap of unemployment or illness until the individual can again stand upon his own feet and work out his temporal security. It is required of him that during this period of assistance from the welfare program he shall give freely of his labor, if physically fit, in the production of the things he needs, and out of it all he becomes one of the independent sons of the Lord, having not only received but having also given.

PROMISES KEPT

Modern-day Israel should heed the admonitions of the living oracles of God and close their ears to the teachings of false prophets, remembering always that the Lord has made definite promises to this people, a covenanted people, through his servants, the Apostles and the Prophets. The Lord declared through the Prophet Brigham Young:

If the Latter-day Saints will walk up to their privileges, and exercise faith in the name of Jesus Christ, and live in the enjoyment of the fulness of the Holy Ghost constantly day by day, there is nothing on the face of the earth that they could ask for, that would not be given to them. The Lord is waiting to be very gracious unto this people, and to pour out upon them riches, honor, glory, and power, even, that they may possess all things according to the promises he has made through his Apostles and Prophets. (Discourses of Brigham Young, 1925 edition, page 241; 1943 edition, page 156.)

There may be those of little faith who will cry out that circumstances and situations arise wherein the people cannot help themselves, but again the Prophet Brigham Young declared in the name of the Lord:

When a person is placed in circumstances that he cannot possibly obtain one particle of anything to sustain life, it would then be his privilege to exercise faith in God to feed him, who might cause a raven to pick up a piece of dried meat from some quarter where there was plenty, and drop it over the famishing man. When I cannot feed myself through the means God has placed in my power, it is then time enough for him to exercise his providence in an unusual manner to administer to my wants. But while we can help ourselves, it is our duty to do so. If a Saint of God be locked up in prison, by his enemies, to starve to death, it is then time enough for God to interpose, and feed him. (Ibid., 1925 edition, pp. 240-41; 1943 edition, p. 155.)

THE LORD PROVIDES

The Lord keeps his promises in this day as well as in the days of old Israel. When Israel was making the trek from Egypt to the Promised Land and circumstances arose where there was no food in the camp of Israel, the Lord caused the quail to come into Israel's camp in great abundance providing them with meat, and the next morning manna was on the ground to provide bread. The Lord is the same yesterday, today, and forever, for within the memory of all of us is the story of the pioneers who had planted crops which promised a bounteous harvest, but clouds of crickets flew over the valley, settled upon the crops and commenced to devour them. The hearty pioneers, men and women, went to work with fire and water to destroy the plague; but their efforts were in vain. Then one of the great fundamentals of spiritual security, faith in God and supplication to him for assistance, was implemented by the people. Upon their knees in the fields, in their homes, and in the houses of worship they pleaded for the Lord's help. The answer was readily given in the form of myriads of sea gulls who settled upon the fields destroying the crickets, and the crops were saved.

SECURITY IN GOSPEL

Economic kings cannot answer the prayers of the people, for they are but false prophets. They are comparable to the gods of Baal, whose false prophets forced the people to lay upon the altar of sacrifice their resources and their right to worship the true and Living God. In return the people were rewarded with slavery and subjection. Security, spiritual and temporal, can only be found in the restored gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. Through revelations, both ancient and modern, the Lord's word is infallible, and his promises are kept when predicated upon faith and obedience. The Lord declared through the Prophet Joseph Smith in Section 27, verses 15 to 18, of the Doctrine and Covenants:

Wherefore, lift up your hearts and rejoice, and gird up your loins, and take upon you my whole armor, that ye may be able to withstand the evil day, having done all, that ye may be able to stand.

Stand, therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, having on the breast-plate of righteousness, and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace, which I have sent mine angels to commit unto you;

Taking the shield of faith wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked;

And take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of my Spirit, which I will pour out upon you, and my word which I reveal unto you, and be agreed as touching all things whatsoever ye ask of me, and be faithful until I come, and ye shall be caught up, that where I am ye shall be also. (D. & C. 27:15-18.)

"But seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness: and all of these things shall be added unto you."

May the Lord bless us in the achievement of spiritual and temporal security to the end that we might enjoy a place in his celestial kingdom, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER CLIFFORD E. YOUNG

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

As we go out to the stakes of Zion and the wards of the Church, we feel the warmth and the friendliness of the good people who always makes us so welcome, and as we come into your assemblies, there is a friendliness, and we are made to feel at home. But as we meet here in the Tabernacle with all of you together, it becomes a real challenge, and I sincerely trust that while I stand here I may have an interest in your faith and prayers.

COST OF MISSIONARY SERVICE

The other day at the opening session of conference some rather imposing figures were presented. Among them was the cost of our missionary service, a cost amounting to over four million dollars, which comes from the general funds of the Church. To that should be added the contributions of the families that make possible the boys and girls called to the mission field.

We have nearly five thousand missionaries. The average cost for each missionary a month is about fifty-three dollars. That alone would amount to three million dollars a year. Then add to that the equipment, clothing, and other personal accessories, and railroad fares for the missionaries to reach their fields of labor, which costs are largely borne by the families of the Church, and it would probably amount to another million dollars; so that we have something like four million dollars cost in the sending of our five thousand missionaries to the nations of the earth. I doubt that that figure would cover the entire expense. Then, as has been suggested here the money that these boys could earn were they to remain at home represents another imposing figure.

Brother Sonne remarked the other day that the Bishop of York, who spoke from this pulpit a year or more ago, on his return to England had been quite complimentary to the Church. Among other things he had said that the Mormon Church must be a very wealthy institution to maintain such an impressive missionary service.

The funds for that service come from all the people, rich and poor alike, and if the truth were known, it would be found that most of these funds come from the very humble of the Church—those of very limited means. So this does represent a great contribution on the part of Church members, and it brings home to us what it costs to be a Latter-day Saint.

SACRIFICES OF CONVERTS

But there is another phase to it that transcends all the material costs. I have reference to those who have made great sacrifices in coming into the Church. Brother Widtsoe touched on it briefly this morning when he mentioned the immigrants who come here, many learning a new language, making new adjustments, the conditions altogether different from those they left in the Old Country. Many of them have had to sacrifice their own kindred and loved ones, being told in some instances that they had to choose between this new religion and their own families, and their new-found religion has been their choice. This has been a common experience in this Church from the beginning.

CONVERSION OF GRANDMOTHER

I remember my worthy grandmother, a Quaker, who was converted in Pennsylvania through the coming of some of the missionaries in the days of the Prophet Joseph. My mother at one time had a great decision to make, one that was to try her to the very depths. Grandmother said to her in her typical Quaker style, "Thee will find that it is not always easy to live the truth, but thee will also find that there is joy and peace that comes in thus living." This grandmother and her people, including her mother and seven daughters, had had the restored gospel presented to them by the missionaries, and they accepted it. They found the witness; they believed. The father in that home was to say to them (a witness of the truth had not come to him), "You can either choose this so-called religion or me." The witness had come to them, and with that witness there always comes a responsibility. The Savior said:

And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come. (Matthew 24:14.)

When that witness comes into the human heart, it brings, I repeat, a responsibility—a responsibility that we cannot escape. And this good Quaker grandmother felt that she could not escape it.

She did not believe the Book of Mormon when it was first presented to her. She read it and read it again and she could not get away from it. Finally the witness came, and that's when she made her decision. She had no other choice, and finally she said to her husband, "If that's it, then it must be." So she, with her seven daughters and some of their families, started for Nauvoo.

There was nothing inviting when they arrived in Nauvoo. Nauvoo had been built up and was now a lovely city, but persecution was rampant. The economic conditions of the people were not good; apostasy prevailed; the Prophet was being undermined on every hand; and into this influence came this good family. I wonder sometimes what some of us would do under similar circumstances; and yet they never wavered; they never failed.

President Grant's mother had to face the same problem. She was told that it was either her new-found religion or her inheritance and her family. She chose her religion because she, too, had received the witness.

I have always been thrilled in reading the story of Brother Widtsoe's mother. She may be no different from hundreds of Scandinavian mothers who have come here. They had to make decisions. They had to decide whether it was their relatives, their friends, or this unpopular religion. So I repeat, my brethren and sisters, the foundation of this Church has been laid at a great cost.

BLESSINGS RECEIVED

The cost we pay today is minor—comparable to the great blessings received, it amounts to nothing. The Lord has blessed us abundantly, has given us of his substance that we might use it to build up the Church and kingdom, so that we need have no anxiety about any of these costs. I repeat, they are minor.

But the greatest cost of all is that cost we pay which gives strength and character to our people, a cost that has built a foundation against which the gates of hell cannot prevail.

Now today what does it all mean to us? What did it mean to these good people? I could name many more who made great sacrifices, and we have them today. We have our modern pioneers out in the world who are giving up their all because of the witness they have in their souls. And that will always be. But what does it do? I repeat again what my worthy grandmother said to my mother, that it brings peace and joy to the human heart.

JESUS THE CHRIST

That is why Easter means so much to the Latter-day Saints. It isn't the symbolism, the pageantry, that we are conscious of today. It is the fundamental truth that Jesus is the Christ, that he lives, and that he appeared in this day to the Prophet Joseph.

When I say "in this day," have you ever stopped to think how close that is? There are men sitting on this stand whose fathers knew the man who communed with Jehovah. The man to whom God the Father, and Jesus Christ, the Son, appeared and bore witness again of the reality of the life of Jesus Christ, that the resurrection is true, the literal resurrection as President Clark explained to us this morning in his impressive address. That is how close it is.

STATEMENT OF LOUIS PASTEUR

A consciousness of this truth brings peace to your soul and mine. I read recently a statement by one of the French scientists, Louis Pasteur, who lived about eighty years ago, at a time when skepticism prevailed throughout France. He was trying to prove before the French Academy that the theory of spontaneous generation was not true. When he was chided by his associates for only accepting that which he could prove, he said:

This is not to be taken to mean that, in my beliefs and in the conduct of my life, I only take account of acquired science: if I would, I could not do so, for I should then have to strip myself of a part of myself. There are two men in each one of us: the scientist, he who starts with a clear field and desires to rise to the knowledge of Nature through observation, experimentation, and reasoning, and the man of sentiment, the man of belief, the man who mourns his dead children (he had just lost a son in the Franco-Prussian War), and who cannot, alas, prove that he will see them again, but who believes that he will and lives in that hope, the man who will not die like a vibrio, but who feels that the force that is within him cannot die. The two domains are distinct, and woe to him who tries to let them trespass on each other in the so imperfect state of human knowledge.

He was deeply religious. He had a spiritual concept. Most men of science have that deep concept and a deep humility in their search for truth. He said:

I see everywhere the inevitable expression of the Infinite in the world; through it, the supernatural is at the bottom of every heart. The idea of God is a form of the idea of the Infinite.

In other words, the spiritual is just as real as is the side of a test tube. The spiritual is just as real as the physical. That was the fundamental doctrine of the Prophet Joseph.

And so today, Easter means something to you and me. It is worth while—this great cost. It was worth while to our forebears, my brethren and sisters, and it is worth while to us. I join with you and with my associates in expressing the gratitude of my heart for the peace that has come to my soul and comes every day, in the confidence and the knowledge that I have of the divinity of this great work.

God help us to be true to it, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

That impressive message was given by Elder Clifford E. Young, one of the Assistants to the Twelve.

We shall now hear from Elder Leo J. Muir, formerly president of the Northern States Mission (Elder Muir was not present).

President George Albert Smith commented yesterday upon the presence of so many of our Indian brethren and sisters at these sessions of Conference, and it was he who felt impressed to call one of their number to represent them. We, therefore, call for Elder Chief Blue who is a Catawba Indian from Rock Hill, South Carolina. Brother Blue has been in the Church sixty years. We shall now be favored with some remarks from this good brother.

ELDER CHIEF SAMUEL BLUE

Brethren and sisters, we are told that the Lord moves in mysterious ways, and I bear testimony this is true. It is wonderful to me that I have this privilege to enter this building and attend this conference.

I have been a member of the Church, as you have been told, for sixty-odd years. I am one of the poor Indians down there on the reservation, and as we were told a while ago, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." I surely bear testimony to this.

I was raised up as a poor boy, as I said before, and worked at 25 cents a day I fed my mother, brothers and sisters, and when I was fifteen years old, the missionaries came to my home and I have fed the Elders off my wages. I slept out in the woods to give my bed to the Elders. I have wondered to myself, how would I get through this world, but nevertheless, I seek to do the will of God. I fasted and prayed unto him for a blessing, and we have been told if we seek God, other things will be added unto us, and this is one of the "adds" that have been given to me. I am thankful for those blessings.

I have lived at home with two missionaries in my house. They were boarding in Rock Hill. Their room was costing them fifteen dollars a week. I said: "Elders, come to my home. I have a cabin with a room in it you can use, with two beds in it"; so they have taken the room, they eat at my table, sleep under my roof. They want to pay me wages for staying there. I say: "No. The Lord has provided for me and he is providing for you. I want no pay."

So when I left home the other day, Elder Price, he had a hundred dollars in his pocketbook. He offered me part of it. I said: "No, I don't want it."

"Well," he said, "you made it for me."

I said: "How did I make it?"

"You did not charge me for my bedroom or for food, and by so doing I have been able to accumulate this much which my parents have sent to me."

I said: "If I have done you that much good by the will of God, keep it and use it in your mission."

I know that this gospel is true. I have tasted the blessing and joy of God. I have seen the dead raised; I have seen the sick whom the doctors have given up, through the administration of the Elders they have been restored to life.

My brothers and sisters, beyond a shadow of a doubt I know that this gospel is true. My wife is with me and she is not very well, and I have not been feeling well either. She told me last night, we had better go home.

I said: "Why? I have come here for a good purpose, and if I die here I would just as leave die here as in the world till I have filled the obligation that I am sent here to do.

Now may God bless you, Amen.

President David O. McKay:

You have just had the unusual experience of hearing from one of our Indian members from the Catawba Tribe, Elder Chief Blue. President George Albert Smith will now make a few comments upon that and such other comments as he will wish to make.

PRESIDENT GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

When I was twenty-one years of age, I was sent on a mission to the southern states. I became secretary of the mission, and while there was called to Columbia, South Carolina, because some of our elders had become seriously ill. It was difficult to get word back and forth, so I got on a train and went down there. I found that they were improved and getting along all right.

MISSIONARY EXPERIENCE

When I bade them good-bye, I boarded the train and started home, and we passed a little Indian settlement at the side of the track. I saw evidence that there were quite a number of Indians there, so I reached over and touched the man who was sitting in the seat in front of me, and I said, "Do you know what Indians these are?"

He said, "They are the Catawbas." That is the tribe that Chief Blue represents, who has just spoken to us.

I asked, "Do you know where they come from?"

He said, "Do you mean the Catawbas?"

I replied, "Any Indians."

He said, "Nobody knows where the Indians came from."

"Oh," I said, "yes they do." I was talking then to a man about forty-five or fifty years old, and I was twenty-one.

He questioned, "Well, where did they come from?"

I answered, "They came from Jerusalem six hundred years before the birth of Christ."

"Where did you get that information?" he asked.

I told him, "From the history of the Indians."

"Why," he said, "I didn't know there was any history of the Indians."

I said, "Yes, there is a history of the Indians. It tells all about them." Then he looked at me as much as to say: My, you are trying to put one over on me.

But he said, "Where is this history?"

"Would you like to see one?" I asked. And he said that he certainly would. I reached down under the seat in my little log-cabin grip and took out a Book of Mormon and handed it to him.

He exclaimed, "My goodness, what is this?"

I replied, "That is the history of the ancestry of the American Indian."

He said, "I never heard of it before. May I see it?"

I said, "Yes" and after he had looked at it a few minutes, he turned around to me and asked, "Won't you sell me this book? I don't want to lose the privilege of reading it through."

"Well," I said, "I will be on the train for three hours. You can read it for that long, and it won't cost you anything." I had found that he was getting off farther on, but I had to get off in three hours.

In a little while he turned around again and said, "I don't want to give up this book. I've never seen anything like this before."

I could see that he apparently was a refined and well-educated man. I didn't tell him I really wanted him to read the book, but I said, "Well, I can't sell it to you. It is the only one I have." (I didn't tell him I could get as many more as I wanted.)

He said, "I think you ought to sell it to me."

I replied, "No, I'll tell you what I'll do. You keep it for three weeks, and at the end of that time you send it to me at Chattanooga," and I gave him my card with my address on, secretary of the mission.

So we bade one another good-bye, and in about two weeks he wrote me a letter saying, "I don't want to give this book up. I am sure you can get another, and I will pay you any price you want for it."

Then I had my opportunity. I wrote back, "If you really enjoy the book and have an idea it is truly worth while, accept it with my compliments." I received a letter of thanks back from him.

I speak of that because that was the first time I had ever heard of the Catawba Indians, and there were only a few of them. I understand now from Chief Blue that ninety-seven percent of them are members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

MEETING 15 YEARS LATER

Coming back to this book again— Brother B. H. Roberts and I were sent some fifteen years later down into the southern states to visit the mission. When we arrived at the hotel at Columbia, we registered and went into our room, and soon after a knock came at the door and a colored man said, "There's a man downstairs that wants to see George A. Smith." That was the way I used to write my name, and I wrote it that way before I was married.

I said to Brother Roberts, "What will we do?" and he replied, "Send him up," so the man went back, and pretty soon up came a man and knocked on the door, and we opened it.

He reached out his hand and said, "My, I am glad to see you."

I said, "I am glad if you're glad to see me; I am happy to see you, but who are you?" and he gave me his name.

I asked, "What can I do for you?"

He said, "Don't you remember me?"

I told him, "Remember you? I don't believe I ever saw you before."

He said, "Isn't your name George A. Smith?" and I said, "Yes."

"Well, he replied, "I am sure you're the man. I met George A. Smith years ago as he was doing missionary work here."

I answered, "Oh, that is easily explained, there was another George A. Smith here doing missionary work, too."

"Oh," he said, "it wasn't any other George A. Smith. It was you. Nobody that ever saw that face would forget it."

"Well," I said, "I guess I must be the man."

Then he related this story. He said, "You were on a train, and we passed the Catawba Indian Reservation."

I interrupted, "I remember all about it now." It all came back in an instant.

He said, "I want to tell you something. I read that book, and I was so impressed with it that I made up my mind I would like to take a trip down into Central America and South America, and I took that book with me in my bag when I went down there. As a result of reading it, I knew more about those people than they knew about themselves.

"I lost your address; I didn't know how to find you, and all these years I wanted to see you, and today after you registered downstairs I happened to be looking at the hotel register and I saw your name. That is how I found you.

"I am a representative of the Associated Press for this part of the United States. I understand you are here in the interest of your people."

And I answered, "Yes, Mr. Roberts and I both are here for that purpose."

And he said, "If there is anything I can do for you while you are here, if you want anything put in the press, give it to me and it won't cost you a cent. But," he continued, "I want to tell you one other thing, I have kept your missionaries out of jail; I have got them free from mobs; I have helped them every way I could; but I have never been able to get your address until now."

CHIEF BLUE AND CATAWBA INDIANS

So you may be interested, brethren and sisters, in knowing that I am delighted in seeing Chief Blue here today, representing that tribe of fine Indians. I have seen some of them since. I have met one very fine young woman who is a schoolteacher, and others I have met of that race; in fact, I have some trinkets in my office that were sent to me by members of that tribe.

I am happy to have this good man here who represents one of the tribes that descended from Father Lehi as well as some of the others that are in our audience today. One good man that I am looking at here came to the temple during the week and was sealed to his wife. They are coming into the Church all around, and I am so grateful this morning to be here and hear this man who for sixty years has been a faithful leader among his people and now comes to this general conference and bears testimony to us.

It is a great work that we are identified with. Not the least of our responsibilities is to see that this message is carried to the descendants of Lehi, wherever they are, and give them an opportunity to accept the gospel of Jesus Christ.

ADDITIONAL KNOWLEDGE

How glorious it is to know that we have that information, and we have the knowledge that there were others resurrected, as recorded in the New Testament. And then we have the information in the Book of Mormon of the coming of the Savior to this western hemisphere, and we have the appearance of John the Baptist, and Peter, James, and John, and the Father and the Son to Joseph Smith in these latter days. No other people have what we have. I don't know of any people who ought to be so anxious and willing and grateful to be able to celebrate this day that is recognized in the world as the anniversary of the resurrection of the Redeemer of mankind, and that meant the opening of the grave for all humanity.

I pray the Lord to bless us that we may be worthy because of our lives to keep this testimony, that not only we, but all we can reach may receive that witness and carry it to our brothers and sisters of all races and creeds, and particularly to the descendants of Lehi, until we have done our duty by them. I am sure that when the time comes for the resurrection, that all who are in their tombs and worthy shall be raised from their graves, and this earth shall become the celestial kingdom, and Jesus Christ, our Lord, will be our King and our Lawgiver—that we will rejoice that we have availed ourselves of the truth and applied it in our lives. That is what the gospel teaches us. That is what the gospel offers to us if we will accept it, and I pray that we may be worthy of it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

That impressive message to which you have just listened was given by President George Albert Smith, President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

The Tabernacle Choir will now sing "Hosannah Anthem."

The closing prayer will be offered by President Vern R. Peel of the San Bernardino Stake, California, after which this Conference will stand adjourned until 2:00 o'clock this afternoon. The proceedings of that session will be broadcast over KSL and by arrangement with KSL over the other stations to which you have been listening this morning. The proceedings will also be televised over the KSL television station, channel 5.

The choir music for this session has been furnished by the Tabernacle Choir, with Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting, and Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ.

The Choir will now sing "Hosannah Anthem."

The Choir sang, "Hosannah Anthem."

The benediction was offered by President Vern R. Peel of the San Bernardino Stake.

Conference adjourned until 2:00 p.m.

THIRD DAY AFTERNOON MEETING

The concluding session of the Conference was held Sunday afternoon, April 9, at 2:10.

Once more the Tabernacle and Assembly Hall were filled to capacity with people who had come from the various parts of the Church to enjoy the Conference proceedings. Hundreds of others, who were unable to find accommodation in the Tabernacle and Assembly Hall listened to the services as they were broadcast on the Tabernacle grounds.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

This is the seventh and closing session of the One Hundred Twentieth Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square, Salt Lake City, Utah. It is crowded, and the Assembly Hall is likewise filled and there are many on the grounds outside.

President Smith is present and presiding at this meeting, and he has requested the speaker, President Clark, to conduct the services.

These services will be broadcast in the Assembly Hall over a loud speaking system and by television.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City, and by arrangement through KSL, over the following stations:

In Utah: KSUB at Cedar City, KSVC at Richfield, KJAM at Vernal, KVNU at Logan.

In Idaho: KGEM at Boise, KID at Idaho Falls, KEYY at Pocatello, KBIO at Burley.

In Oregon: KBKR at Baker, KSRV at Ontario.

And by transcription over KTYL at Mesa, Arizona, and KEXO at Grand Junction, Colorado.

It will also be televised over KSL television station, channel 5.

The choir music for this session will be rendered by the Tabernacle Choir, Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting, and Elder Alexander Schreiner at the organ.

We will begin the afternoon services by the Tabernacle Choir singing: "As The Dews From Heaven."

The opening prayer will be offered by President Parley A. Arave of the Blackfoot Stake, Idaho.

The Tabernacle Choir sang the hymn, "As The Dews From Heaven."

President Parley A. Arave of the Blackfoot Stake offered the invocation.

The Choir sang "The Lord Will Comfort Zion."

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

Elder Henry D. Moyle of the Council of the Twelve will be our first speaker this afternoon. He will be followed by President Oscar A. Kirkham of the First Council of Seventy.

ELDER HENRY D. MOYLE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered;

And being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him. (Hebrews 5:8-9.)

Closely allied with this statement of the New Testament is our third Article of Faith.

We believe that through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.

EXALTATION THROUGH OBEDIENCE

Just as surely as our Savior became the author of our eternal salvation, so must we through that same degree of obedience become the authors of our own exaltation. We celebrate this Easter Sabbath with a knowledge that we shall come forth in the morning of the resurrection. We likewise know that we shall be judged according to that which we do in the flesh. We shall not be saved by grace alone. And how grateful I am to my Father in heaven for the restoration of the gospel of Jesus Christ that has taught us the importance of obedience to his will and to his command.

We sometimes feel that we need further light and knowledge from our Father in heaven in order to carry out the duties and the responsibilities of our calling. It is my humble conviction that if we were able to make ourselves entirely submissive to the will of our Heavenly Father, his direction to us would be complete.

Closely allied with the day which we celebrate today was Christ's ascension to heaven. He realized well that he had been the stay and the staff of his disciples during his ministry here upon this earth. It would hardly have been possible for them to carry on in his absence unless another comforter were given to them, and that comforter was indeed promised them, and the disciples of old received it. It is my testimony to you today that every son and daughter of our Father in heaven here upon this earth who lends obedience to the first principles and ordinances of the gospel receives this comforter. The first principles and ordinances of the gospel are: first, faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, repentance; third, baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost.

Just as John of old records:

... The Holy Ghost whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance whatsoever I have said unto you. (John 14:26.)

So he will today. Without that gift and without that power of the Holy Ghost you and I would not be able to become submissive to the will of our Heavenly Father. We would not know what his will is, except by the gift and power of the Holy Ghost. Then when we know what his will is, we must be as clay in the hands of the potter to permit our lives to be molded in the pattern that the Savior of mankind set for us.

SUBMISSION TO GOD'S WILL

I am grateful beyond measure this day to know that I have the privilege of associating with men who have been called of God, to lead and guide Israel in these latter days. I know that as we submit ourselves to the will of our Heavenly Father there comes into our life a consciousness, a peace that passeth all understanding. It is through submission to the will of our Father in heaven that we receive all of the blessings that are essential for our welfare and our happiness and our advancement in his kingdom. Following the resurrection, in which we shall participate, we shall stand before the judgment bar of God with our record before us—one I hope of which we shall be proud, one which will entitle us to associate with those of our loved ones who have gone to the great beyond, and who will be there to welcome us. May we all enjoy the blessings and the privileges which we desire through our obedience to the laws and ordinances of the gospel. If we can become entirely submissive and obedient to the will of our Heavenly Father, our problems will be solved temporally and spiritually. When we are called upon to mourn there will come a comfort and a consolation into our hearts "that passeth all understanding." I stand here before you today to express my thanks and gratitude to my Heavenly Father for this knowledge, this conviction, this witness that has come into my life.

TESTIMONY

The birth and the mission of Jesus Christ is just as real to me as was that of my own earthly father. Christ was born and died for the sins of men. I know his resurrection from the grave was as real as his life, and that before he ascended to heaven he stood before his disciples and gave to them a promise of a comforter which would be sent to them. They received the comforter, and that same comforter has made itself manifest in the lives of thousands and hundreds of thousands of Saints in this the Dispensation of the Fulness of Times. I know that comforter exists today and builds us up and strengthens us and qualifies us for every responsibility and every duty and obligation of life. The power and gift of the Holy Ghost can draw us close together, can make us united, can make us discern the word of the Lord when we hear it from his servants, that we will be immediately obedient and susceptible to his will thus expressed.

REPENTANCE FOR ALL

I want to say that when we hear a sermon on repentance, it is meant for you and me. Sister Choules of the Southern States Mission addressed an audience at Macon, Georgia, at the dedication of the chapel, and in that talk she expressed this beautiful thought: "Wouldn't it be wonderful if we could all sit and listen to a sermon on repentance and not immediately think of our neighbor?" I knew she had in mind such sermons as we have heard in this conference. They were intended for you and me.

May the Lord help us to realize that we need repentance, that we need to be obedient and susceptible to the will of our Heavenly Father; and may he bend us to his will, I pray humbly in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER OSCAR A. KIRKHAM

Of the First Council of the Seventy

I pray that I may enjoy the blessings of the Spirit of the Lord. I am very grateful today that across our good land millions of Americans have wended their way to the great churches, to the hilltops, and to the mountaintops, where they have listened to the word of the Lord. They have been lifted up on this glorious Easter day as you and I have been lifted up.

GRATITUDE FOR AMERICA

I am grateful for America. My path has led me into the companionship of men from nearly every state in the Union. I have in my meditations this day tried to place myself where they might be—fine Christian men! And I am grateful and I have faith in this glorious land. That faith has been built up because of my religious training and the words that have been spoken through the prophets of this land as recorded in the Book of Mormon.

Someone has said recently, and I sincerely believe that it is true, that what America says and does in the next fifty years will mark the destiny of the world. How important is our place among the children of men! And we, of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, the majority of us tucked away in these western hills, having received the word of God—how great is our responsibility and opportunity!

I have faith that great works are not only requested of us through the prophets of today and yesterday, but that they shall also be fulfilled.

POWER OF THE SPIRIT

The great Thomas Edison said of Steinmetz that he had the greatest mind of any American. On his deathbed, Steinmetz, with his students about him, said, "Most of our discoveries have been of the material world, but the discoveries of tomorrow will be of the spirit." I have faith in that. I believe we will witness new powers upon the earth, and they will be of the spirit.

Napoleon said there are two powers in the earth: that of the spirit and that of the sword. Then in a moment of reflection he added, "But the spirit always overcometh the sword."

In the 127th Psalm are these great words of counsel: "Except the Lord build the house, they labour in vain that build it." (Psalm 127:1.) I feel that I am not taking any undue privileges if I may add to those sacred words. Except the Lord build a life, they labor in vain that build it. Except the Lord build the city, they labor in vain that build it. Except the Lord build the state and the nation, they labor in vain that build it.

I would like to read the words of one of our great presidents. (Woodrow Wilson.)

Our civilization cannot survive materially unless it be redeemed spiritually. It can be saved only by becoming permeated with the spirit of Christ. Only thus can discontent be driven out, and all the shadows be lifted from the road ahead.

BRIGHAM YOUNG'S COUNSEL

From this very pulpit Brigham Young counseled with the Saints.

When you go into the field to plow, be sure you take the Lord with you. When you go about your business, be sure the Lord is with you, also in your dealings with men.

And here are his words further,

No man of counsel should sit to judge the people but what should judge in the Lord, that he may righteously and impartially discern between right and wrong, truth and error, light and darkness, justice and injustice. Should any legislature sit without the Lord, if it does, sooner or later it will fall to pieces. No nation ever did live that counselled and transacted its national affairs without the Lord, but sooner or later went to pieces and came to naught. The same is true of all the nations that now live or that ever will live.

UNITED NATIONS

You and I are living in a great time. But in my reading and in my meditations I have been tremendously interested in what fifty-nine nations of this earth are now doing about these great principles of which we speak. When they first met in San Francisco, they said, "No, we cannot have vocal prayers. Here is the Confucianist, here is the Buddhist, here is the Jew, here is the Christian. We must have no certain prayers." They started about their business, and soon they found that something greater than themselves must come among them if they accomplished that which was in their hearts to do. They agreed on one minute a day of silent personal devotion. And then time went on, and if you have recently been to New York City, and gone down 42nd Street to the East River, you will see where blocks of buildings have been torn down. Through the leadership of a great Christian American institution, the Rockefeller Foundation, a glorious gift has been made to these fifty-nine nations and to those who may follow later. They have built a great building; it is now nearing completion. And in the center of it is a chapel to prayer. There are no pulpits, no stained windows, merely a granite slab that marks the great sacrifice of millions. But above it, a shaft of light falls from the heavens, representing that eternal power and promise which will strengthen the hearts of men and give them faith in the great cause of peace.

Yes, except the Lord build a house, they labor in vain that build it. And when we think of the great purposes of our Heavenly Father in the destinies of men and nations and our humble part, we must be patient, we must have faith. God grant to us that working faith that you and I can participate in daily.

Let every man and woman in this assembly feel, "I am a missionary—I'm a part of that great league that is working for peace and happiness of all men throughout the world." That neighbor that lives nearby—speak to him. Don't be afraid. Courageously go, carry to him the word of God. The Lord will sanctify your words and open the hearts of men. You are the messenger of truth and happiness.

WORK FOR BROTHERHOOD

Let us work for the brotherhood of man. I was happy to receive a report from one of our seventies quorums in Utah County. On the highway one day an automobile ran over a fine boy and killed him. The father and mother were broken-hearted. But the next morning twenty-one men were on the porch. Twenty-one men were extending love and comfort—showing real brotherhood in offering their services to bless that home.

I walked down the street of a small village in Maui one day with a Hawaiian woman, one of the presidency of the Relief Society. As we walked along, she said, "You see that building over there? Well, I have a very dear friend, a Chinese woman, who lives there. I went to visit her when we were building the temple at Laie. I asked her if she would like to contribute to the building of the temple. And although not a member of the Church, she said, 'Oh, yes, I believe in temples; I'd love to assist.' We chatted for a few minutes and then left her. Eight months later I was coming down this way again, and I thought, 'Why, I haven't been to see my Chinese friend.' So I went over and said, 'Have you forgotten our conversation?' She said, 'No, I've been waiting for you to come. Have you a purse or something to put the money in?' I took out of my bag a small black purse, and she said, 'Oh, I'm afraid that will not hold what I have saved for you.' She went into another room and brought back a bowl containing coins and other money. She said, 'If you'll kindly open your apron.' I opened it, and the Chinese woman poured the money into my lap. I said to her, 'Is this all for the temple? Do you mean for me to take it all?' 'Oh, yes,' she said, 'you may have the money. I have the blessing.'"

May God help us to know when we turn our hearts in love toward mankind that the resurrection then is happening to us, the gift of God is with us—the greatest gift bestowed upon mankind. The Lord is then building the house.

For these things I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER MARK E. PETERSEN

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

As I have listened to these beautiful sermons on repentance, I have thought over and over again about one of the commandments given by the Savior in the Sermon on the Mount. In it he said,

Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect. (Matthew 5:48.)

PERFECTING OF THE SAINTS

Paul tells us that the Church organization was given to us, among other reasons, for the perfecting of the Saints. In spite of this commandment, and in spite of this statement of Paul, there are some people who believe that it is impossible for us to become perfect. Perfection is not for this life, they say, and so why try?

I would like to say that I believe with all my heart that if the Lord had any idea that we could not begin in mortality on the march toward perfection, he would never have given us that commandment; neither would he have given us a Church organization for the perfecting of the Saints.

100% PERFECT

I believe that in many ways, here and now in mortality, we can begin to perfect ourselves. A certain degree of perfection is attainable in this life. I believe that we can be one hundred percent perfect, for instance, in abstaining from the use of tea and coffee. We can be one hundred percent perfect in abstaining from liquor and tobacco. We can be one hundred percent perfect in paying a full and honest tithing. We can be one hundred percent perfect in abstaining from eating two meals on fast day and giving to the bishop as fast offering the value of those two meals from which we abstain.

We can be one hundred percent perfect in keeping the commandment which says that we shall not profane the name of God. We can be perfect in keeping the commandment which says, "Thou shalt not commit adultery." (Ex. 20:14.) We can be perfect in keeping the commandment which says, "Thou shalt not steal." (Ibid., 15.) We can become perfect in keeping various others of the commandments that the Lord has given us.

I am confident that one of the great desires of the Lord our God is that we shall keep that great commandment which says, "Be ye therefore perfect," (Mathew 5:48.) and that we may do so is my humble prayer in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

On the program at this point the Tabernacle Choir and congregation will sing "For The Strength Of The Hills," after which we will hear from Elder Joseph Fielding Smith, of the Council of the Twelve.

Singing by the Choir and congregation, "For The Strength Of The Hills."

ELDER JOSEPH FIELDING SMITH

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

For a number of years on the editorial page of The Deseret News this has appeared:

We stand for the Constitution of the United States with its three departments of government as therein set forth, each one fully independent in its field.

THE CONSTITUTION

I thought it would not be amiss or out of order to say something about the Constitution, to give a little history of it perhaps briefly; for I am convinced that the people generally of the United States have not studied it. Many of them have never read it, and some know nothing concerning what it is all about.

At the close of the Revolution the several states of this American government became independent of Great Britain, but they were confronted with dangers of disintegration, or falling apart. They did not have a stable form of government. Some of the wiser statesmen among the patriots saw this danger and attempted to divert it. George Washington, in a circular letter to the state governors, wrote in June 1783, saying:

It is yet to be decided whether the revolution must ultimately be considered as a blessing or a curse.

This is the moment to establish or ruin [the colonies'] national character forever. There should be lodged somewhere a supreme power to regulate and govern the general concerns of the confederated republic, without which the Union cannot be of long duration.

CRITICAL PERIOD

John Fisk, the historian, in treating of this period says that the period between 1783 and 1789 was the most critical in the history of the United States. John Fisk was right. That was a critical period. We are today facing another critical period, one which evidently the majority of the citizens of this country fail to realize exists, but nevertheless that is the situation.

At the time the war ended, as well as during the period of the Revolution, the states were joined by a very loose confederation. The war had held them together. After the war each state looked upon itself practically as an independent government. They were a number of small nations that had entered into an agreement to live together and act in concert in relation to their common welfare. The idea prevailed that this federation could be severed at any time. Each state reserved the right to withdraw at will from the union thus far created. From July 4, 1776, to March 1, 1781, when the confederation was adopted, the United States was governed by the Continental Congress under the "Articles of Confederation and Perpetual Union between the States." This union had no president, no supreme court, and consisted of one house of congress made up of delegates elected by the legislatures of the states, and the jurisdiction was greatly limited. There were so many defects and restrictions in this confederation that the wise men of the nation, like Washington, readily perceived that something more nearly perfect, more powerful and binding upon the colonies was essential.

CONVENTION IN PHILADELPHIA

It was with this object in view that in May 1787 a convention of delegates from all the states except Rhode Island met in Philadelphia. The number of delegates was fifty-five, but only thirty-nine of them signed the Constitution after it was framed. Most of these delegates were men in the prime of life, few of them were aged. Benjamin Franklin, the dean of the Convention was in his eighty-second year, but it is said of him that he was very active and alert. I think the names of these thirty-nine who signed the Constitution are worthy of our remembrance, and I am going to take the time to name them. They were:

George Washington, President and Deputy from Virginia

John Langdon and Nicholas Gilman, New Hampshire

Nathaniel Gorham and Rufus King, Massachusetts

William Samuel Johnson and Roger Sherman, Connecticut

Alexander Hamilton, New York

William Livingston, David Brearley, William Paterson, and Jonathan Dayton, New Jersey

George Read, Gunning Bedford, Jr., John Dickson, Richard Bassett, and Jacob Broom, Delaware

James McHenry, Daniel of St. Thomas Jenefer, and Daniel Carroll, Maryland

John Blair, James Madison, Jr., and George Washington, Virginia

William Blount, Richard Dobbs Spaight, and Hugh Williamson, North Carolina

Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Mifflin, Robert Morris, George Clymer, Thomas Fitzsimmons, Jared Ingersoll, James Wilson, and Gouverneur Morris, Pennsylvania

John Rutledge, Charles Cotesworth Pinckney, Charles Pinckney, and Pierce Butler, South Carolina

William Few and Abraham Baldwin, Georgia*

These delegates, after a stormy period of nearly four months in which some of the delegates almost despaired of ever coming to a peaceful agreement, brought forth the Constitution of the United States. As you have heard, some of the delegates refused

The following delegates were absent at the time of signing: Caleb Strong, Massachusetts; Oliver Elsworth, Connecticut; Robert Yates and John Lansing, New York; William Churchill Houston, New Jersey; John Francis Mercer and Luther Martin, Maryland; George Wythe and James McClurg, Virginia; Alexander Martin and William Richardson Davie, North Carolina; William Pierce and William Houston, Georgia.

to sign; some absented themselves at the time of signing. After the document was prepared and approved came the struggle for ratification. Washington, Franklin, Madison, Hamilton, and Marshall, we understand, took the leading part in drafting the Constitution, and after it was adopted by the convention, Madison and Hamilton used their untiring efforts to have it ratified by the various states. Some of the states ratified at an early date; others delayed. Rhode Island and North Carolina delayed for some months but finally joined with their sister states in ratification.

The Constitution went into operation March 4, 1789, and thus became the vital and basic law of the United States. George Washington was elected President of the United States April 6, 1789, and was inaugurated on the thirtieth day of that same month.

WE THE PEOPLE

Now in this statement from The Deseret News we read: "We stand for the Constitution of the United States with its three departments of government as therein set forth, each one fully independent in its own field." I hope that every member of the Church subscribes to that declaration—also to The Deseret News. The preamble to the Constitution does not begin, "I, the king"; nor does it begin, "I, the President of the United States." It reads:

We the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

It is "We the people."

It was understood that the people would govern; of course, it would have to be by representation, but the control of government would be in the hands of the people. As we read in the Book of Mormon, when the righteous rule, everything is well. King Mosiah gave up his throne with the idea that the people would have a republic, and he called attention to the dangers of a kingdom and a centralized government and the dangers that would arise should the wicked rule. The Lord has taught us to choose wise men and just men, and that was the understanding on the part of these men who formed the Constitution of the United States.

THREE GOVERNMENTAL DEPARTMENTS

The three forms of government spoken of in the strip and referring to our government are: the legislative, the judicial, and the executive. Channing, in A Students' History of the United States, has this to say of these three branches in our government:

Each is given power to defend itself against the encroachments of the other two, and each acts as a check on the others. The Constitution framers had good reason to attempt the accomplishment of this difficult purpose; in the old colonial days, which most of them remembered, the governor of the royal provinces had exercised all three functions, greatly to the dissatisfaction of the colonists; and the legislative body of Great Britain had held the supreme power. To avoid establishing a government which would develop into either of these forms, the framers of the Constitution sought to give each department its due share of power, and prevent any one department from making itself supreme. For instance, the executive power is vested in the President; but he also exercises important legislative functions in his veto, and judicial power in his right to pardon. The legislative power is lodged in Congress, but the Senate acts as an advisory council to the President—without its consent no important appointment can be made and no treaty ratified. The judicial power is entrusted to the Supreme Court and inferior courts; but, as no law can be enforced which the Supreme Court declares to be unconstitutional, the Supreme Court, in fact, exercises supreme legislative functions. Finally, the House of Representatives, by means of its initiative in taxation, exercises a most effectual control over the executive department.

The legislative power is confined to certain subjects enumerated in the Constitution and is further restricted by the first ten amendments, especially by the tenth, which declares that "the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people." The Supreme Court is the authorized interpreter of the fundamental law, and has construed the Constitution in the broadest possible way; following these decisions Congress has exercised powers, many of which were probably never dreamed of by the framers of that instrument or by the members of the ratifying conventions, whose votes gave it the force of law. Acts of Congress are "the supreme law of the land," unless the Supreme Court declares them unconstitutional, and hence null and void (Channing, Ibid., pp. 240-241.)

The people should, with jealous care, guard against the time ever coming when any one of these three branches may surrender its rights to any other or be swallowed up and overcome by some other branch of the government. Today there are many who advocate the destruction of these safeguards given us by the framers of the Constitution who were men inspired to make this document as near to the fundamental doctrines of the kingdom of God, as it was possible under the circumstances for it to be. (The Progress of Man, p. 297.)

The Constitution proclaims the following:

This Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the Constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding.

The senators and representatives before mentioned, and the members of the several state legislatures, and all executive and judicial officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by oath or affirmation, to support this Constitution; but no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States.

CONSTITUTION DESERVES VENERATION

There is much more that could be said, and I wish to read another statement. The English statesman, James Bryce, in his excellent work, The American Commonwealth, has said:

The Constitution of 1789 deserves the veneration with which the Americans have been accustomed to regard it. It is true that many criticisms have been passed upon its arrangement, upon its omissions, upon its artificial character of some of the institutions it creates, . . . Yet after all deductions it ranks above every other constitution for the intrinsic excellence of its scheme, its adaptation to the circumstances of the people, the simplicity, brevity, and precision of its language, its judicious mixture of definiteness in principle with elasticity in detail. (The American Commonwealth, vol. I, p. 25.)

What is the stand that is taken by the Church in regard to this great document? We have the word of the Lord:

And now, verily I say unto you concerning the laws of the land, it is my will that my people should observe to do all things whatsoever I command them.

And that law of the land which is constitutional, supporting that principle of freedom in maintaining rights and privileges, belongs to all mankind, and is justifiable before me.

Therefore, I, the Lord, justify you, and your brethren of my church, in befriending that law which is the constitutional law of the land;

And as pertaining to law of man, whatsoever is more or less than this, cometh of evil. (D. & C. 98:4-7.)

In Section 101, the Lord has said:

According to the laws and constitution of the people, which I have suffered to be established, and should be maintained for the rights and protection of all flesh, according to just and holy principles:

That every man may act in doctrine and principle pertaining to futurity, according to the moral agency which I have given unto him, that every man may be accountable for his own sins in the day of judgment.

Therefore, it is not right that any man should be in bondage one to another.

And for this purpose have I established the Constitution of this land, by the hands of wise men whom I raised up unto this very purpose, and redeemed the land by the shedding of blood. (Ibid., 101:77-80.)

Here is a statement that this document should be maintained, that every man may act in doctrine and principle pertaining to futurity, according to the moral agency which the Lord has given him, that every man may be accountable for his own sins in the day of judgment.

STATEMENTS OF JOSEPH SMITH

If I may be permitted, I would like to quote the words of the Prophet Joseph Smith on this subject:

The Constitution of the United States is a glorious standard. It is founded in the wisdom of God. It is a heavenly banner; it is to all those who are privileged with the sweets of its liberty, like the cooling shades and refreshing waters of a great rock in a thirsty and weary land. It is like a great tree under whose branches men from every clime can be shielded from the burning rays of the sun. . . .

We say that God is true; that the Constitution of the United States is true; that the Bible is true; that the Book of Mormon is true; that the Book of Covenants is true; and that Christ is true. (History of the Church 3:304.)

It is one of the first principles of my life and one that I have cultivated from my childhood, having been taught it by my father, to allow everyone the liberty of conscience. I am the greatest advocate of the Constitution of the United States there is on earth. In my feelings I am always ready to die for the protection of the weak and the oppressed in their just rights. (Ibid., 6:56-57.)

I must not take more time but to add this: The statement has been made that the Prophet said the time would come when this Constitution would hang as by a thread, and this is true. There has been some confusion, however, as to just what he said following this. I think that Elder Orson Hyde has given us a correct interpretation wherein he says that the Prophet said the Constitution would be in danger. Said Orson Hyde:

I believe he said something like this—that the time would come when the Constitution and the country would be in danger of an overthrow; and said he: "If the Constitution be saved at all, it will be by the Elders of this Church." I believe this is about the language, as nearly as I can recollect it. (Journal of Discourses, 6:152.)

Now I tell you it is time the people of the United States were waking up with the understanding that if they don't save the Constitution from the dangers that threaten it, we will have a change of government.

The Lord bless you in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER A. RICHARD PETERSON

Former President of the Norwegian Mission

I am delighted, my brethren and sisters, to have the privilege of assembling here on this glorious, hallowed Sabbath day, to commemorate the resurrection of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ, and this is as real to me as life itself. I only wish that the world could understand the great mission of our Redeemer, when he gave his life for the sons and daughters of God.

I have been thrilled during the sessions of this conference, to be home and to listen to the wonderful testimonies that have been borne and the counsel and advice that have been given. After spending four years in a war-torn country, it is indeed good to be home.

I would like to say that I have stood in the homes and in the offices of the government of Norway, and been belittled, but I was happy because I was in the service of God. They refused us the privilege of staying in Norway and for eighteen months, Sister Peterson and I were living there without permission. I finally told them, when they said: "We'll give you a few hours now," "How can I leave when I have been called by a prophet of God. The only way I will go out of Norway, unless I receive a release from the Presidency of the Church, is if you come down and move us out. Then of course we will have to go.

They did not come and move us out, but we were up against a stone wall for these many months. We were not able to do anything and we were also denied the rationing cards, and if it had not been for the wonderful saints of Norway, bringing to us food that we needed, that we could not get because we were denied these rationing points, we would have been without food.

I thank God that the way was opened up that we did get permission to stay. And then the missionaries came in great numbers.

I want to bring greetings to you from your wonderful sons and daughters in far-away Norway. The work of the Lord is going on now. We were hampered at first, but we have opened up three new districts and many, many branches of the Church, and the message of the Redeemer is being preached from the southern part of Norway to the northern part, and in the far north where it is impossible to get a place to baptize the people, they are chopping holes in the ice and baptizing them in the cold winter.

I appreciate the privilege I have had of going into the world and preaching the gospel. There is nothing that has been greater in my life than to bring this gospel to many souls, and to teach these young men whom the Lord has called, who come into the mission field with stammering tongues and in a foreign tongue preach the gospel, and instil into the hearts of the people a testimony of this restored gospel.

I am grateful for my membership in the Church. I am grateful for the mother who gave me life, mother of fourteen children, who sent me and kept me as a widowed mother on my first mission.

President George Albert Smith set me apart in 1905, and he said these words, among others: "We send you forth as a lamb among wolves." And two weeks after we had arrived in the mission field, a mob came throwing stones through the windows and I thought, why should I be that lamb. I was frightened.

But he said also this: "I promise you, in the name of the Lord, that if you will testify that Joseph Smith is a prophet of the living God your tongue shall be loosened and you will be able to preach in plainness the Gospel of Jesus Christ in that land where so many of God's chosen people have gathered."

I have received great treasures of knowledge on this mission as well as others, even hidden treasures, and I bear witness that I no longer need to see heavenly visions to know that Jesus is the Christ and that Joseph Smith is a prophet of the living God.

I am grateful that this testimony that has been given me. I am grateful for the wonderful experience that I have had, and I thank the First Presidency for the confidence they have had in me in sending me over to Norway where I have spent thirteen years, and this is the fourth mission I have returned from.

I was thrilled the other day in the Temple when I heard the prophet of God, and it seems to me that he was magnified before that audience when he stood and told us, the leaders of this Church, those who stand at the helm, those who are at the headgates, that we should repent and see to it that we were honoring the holy priesthood. If not, sorrow would come unto us, and when the judgments of God should pass over, how could we expect to be delivered or receive the blessings. Has not the Lord said, go into your closets and close the door while the wrath of God shall go over the earth. Has he not told us why we should gather into this country. How can you stop the emigration. I tell you it is no easy thing to stop the emigration when these souls have received the spirit of the gathering, and here they come flocking to the valleys of the mountains. I say, bless you, brethren and sisters, who have been so kind in helping these poor people when they come over here.

I want to say that I sustain all that the Presidency and the brethren have said. I sustain them a hundred percent and if they need me, even though I have just returned, I will be ready to go any time, if I get the call.

I want to be faithful unto the last. Like the old sister, a sweet old soul who had been in the Church for over forty years, I called her up to speak and bear her testimony—she was over a hundred years old—and after she had sung a song to us, she said, "Oh, I hope and pray that I may remain faithful unto the end."

What a glorious wish, and so I say, how necessary it is for each and every one of us to have with us, or for our companion, the Holy Ghost, and I promise you you will never go wrong, or that you will never say one word against the servants of our Heavenly Father who have been called and sustained.

May the Lord bless us. My testimony has grown and I am grateful for this testimony, and may the Lord bless us and help us all, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen

ELDER STEPHEN L RICHARDS

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I believe in the gifts of the gospel. I believe they will come to those who live and strive for them. I believe that the gifts of the gospel comprehend more and wider powers and attributes than those specifically mentioned in our Articles of Faith, namely: "... the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc." (Article 7.) I believe that these listed gifts and others of comparable seemingly supernatural nature have come to men and women of faith, and I believe that they will continue to come from time to time as conditions and circumstances warrant. I place no limitation on the power of the Lord to manifest himself through his children and his chosen servants, however miraculous many may think the manifestation to be. I do place one limitation on those who exercise such powers—that they be very sure the inspiration is from the right source.

GIFTS OF THE GOSPEL

There are gifts of the gospel which are not usually thought of as being miraculous or supernatural. They would commonly be spoken of as mere attributes of character, but I believe they have spiritual foundation. This conclusion seems to be borne out by the scriptures. The Apostle Paul tells his brethren:

Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit.

And there are differences of administrations, but the same Lord.

And there are diversities of operations, . . .

But all these worketh that one and the selfsame Spirit dividing to every man severally as he will. (I Cor. 12:4-6, 11.)

Modern revelation emphasizes this diversity:

To some it is given by the Holy Ghost to know that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, . . .

To others it is given to believe on their words. (D. & C. 46:13-14.)

The Book of Mormon, as usual, brings further clarification:

To one is given by the Spirit of God, that he may teach the word of wisdom;

And to another that he may teach the word of knowledge . . .

And to another, exceeding great faith; and to another, the gifts of healing,

. . . to another, that he may work mighty miracles;

. . . to another, that he may prophesy;

. . . to another, the beholding of angels and ministering spirits;

. . . to another, all kinds of tongues;

. . . to another, the interpretation of languages and of divers kinds of tongues. (Moroni 10:9-16.)

While this wide diversity of gifts mentioned in the scriptures may bring to our Father's children greatly varying talents and capacities, I feel sure that there are some highly important gifts of the gospel, which it is intended that all men of faith shall enjoy at least to some extent. It is to these precious gifts, available to all the Church and to many good men and women outside the Church, that I would direct attention.

GIFT OF DISCERNMENT

First, I mention the gift of discernment, embodying the power to discriminate, which has been spoken of in our hearing before, particularly as between right and wrong. I believe that this gift when highly developed arises largely out of an acute sensitivity to impressions—spiritual impressions, if you will—to read under the surface as it were, to detect hidden evil, and more importantly to find the good that may be concealed. The highest type of discernment is that which perceives in others and uncovers for them their better natures, the good inherent within them. It's the gift every missionary needs when he takes the gospel to the people of the world. He must make an appraisal of every personality whom he meets. He must be able to discern the hidden spark that may be lighted for truth. The gift of discernment will save him from mistakes and embarrassment, and it will never fail to inspire confidence in the one who is rightly appraised.

The gift of discernment is essential to the leadership of the Church. I never ordain a bishop or set apart a president of a stake without invoking upon him this divine blessing, that he may read the lives and hearts of his people and call forth the best within them. The gift and power of discernment in this world of contention between the forces of good and the power of evil is essential equipment for every son and daughter of God. There could be no such mass dissensions as endanger the security of the world, if its populations possessed this great gift in larger degree. People are generally so gullible one is sometimes led to wonder whether the great Lincoln was right, after all, in the conclusion of his memorable statement, "You can't fool all the people all the time." One does feel at times, however, a sense of pity and sympathy for some of the peoples of the world whose education, information, and exposure to higher ideals and exalted concepts have been so arbitrarily and ruthlessly restricted.

There is a class of people now grown sizable in the world who should possess this great gift in large degree. They know how the gift is attained. They have been educated in its spiritual foundations. They have been blessed with the counsels which foster it. They know how to order their lives to procure it. You know who they are, my brethren and sisters. Every member in the restored Church of Christ could have this gift if he willed to do so. He could not be deceived with the sophistries of the world. He could not be led astray by pseudo-prophets and subversive cults. Even the inexperienced would recognize false teachings, in a measure at least. With this gift they would be able to detect something of the disloyal, rebellious, and sinister influences which not infrequently prompt those who seemingly take pride in the destruction of youthful faith and loyalties. Discerning parents will do well to guard their children against such influences and such personalities and teachings before irreparable damage is done. The true gift of discernment is often premonitory. A sense of danger should be heeded to be of value. We give thanks for a set of providential circumstances which avert an accident. We ought to be grateful every day of our lives for this sense which keeps alive a conscience which constantly alerts us to the dangers inherent in wrongdoers and sin.

GIFT OF WISDOM

The next gift of the gospel which I present is that of wisdom. Wisdom cannot be disassociated from discernment, but it involves some other factors, and its applications are rather more specific. Wisdom is sometimes defined as sound judgment and a high degree of knowledge. I define wisdom as being the beneficent application of knowledge in decision. I think of wisdom not in the abstract but as functional. Life is largely made up of choices and determinations, and I can think of no wisdom that does not contemplate the good of man and society. Wisdom is true understanding, and we are told in Proverbs that

She is more precious than rubies: and all the things thou canst desire are not to be compared unto her.

Length of days is in her right hand; and in her left hand riches and honour.

Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace. . . .

Happy is the man that findeth wisdom. (Proverbs 3:15-17, 13.)

I do not believe that true wisdom can be acquired or exercised in living without a sound fundamental knowledge of the truth about life and living. The cry of the world is for wisdom and wise men. This is so particularly in the field of human relations. Why are they not found? It is because men are so blinded to the truth. Nearly one-half of the world are steeled against it, and the other half not too well-fortified in past and present performance to promote it. We have had for centuries a formula for peace. Wisdom for composition of the world's troubles is available, but the minds and hearts of men are not prepared to receive it. It is the mission of the Church of Christ to teach them how. We need wisdom in so doing, and we need to maintain our divinely appointed society in the wisdom which comes from God.

The really vital things in life are relatively few, my brethren and sisters—the body, family, property, and relationship to man and God. You may have wisdom about health, housing, marriage, children, economics, education, and even government if you truly seek it and live for it. The fundamental knowledge which the Church brings to you will bring you understanding. Your testimony, your spirit, and your service will direct the application of your knowledge; that is wisdom. Every man needs it a hundred times a day. Every woman needs it. Every youth needs it. The foolish and the wise are the antipodes of mankind as are the two poles of the earth. The foolish build on the sand; the wise on the rock. The one perishes; the other endures. Thank God for the gift of wisdom.

GIFT OF COMFORT

I shall have time to mention but one more gift of the gospel—that of comfort. I speak of comfort in the spiritual and scriptural sense bringing consolation, peace of mind and soul, resignation, tranquility, and serenity in times of bereavement, suffering, fear, doubt, and uncertainty. Very few are without some kind of trouble, and many think their own troubles most severe. I remember years ago on one of my first visits to the beautiful memorial church at Stanford University reading an inscription engraved in stone on one of the walls. In substance it was as follows: If every person in the world should wrap his troubles in a bag and then throw it in a heap with all the packages of troubles of all the people, and if each were then told that he could go to the heap and select the package of troubles which he would bear, each would go to the pile and bring back his own package. So it may well be in the providence of things that each should have troubles of a kind suited to his capacity and experience in life. However this may be, we all need comfort and perhaps the self-sufficient ones who do not recognize the need really require it more than any others.

Physical pain is torturing, hard to endure. I am a witness to the fact that it may be assuaged by spiritual blessing and comfort. Thousands there are who testify as to the efficacy of prayer and the healing and the comfort of the priesthood, but even the torture of pain is not more excruciating than the humiliation and stigma of disgrace or the consciousness of guilt. Thank the Lord for the gift of repentance which has been so beautifully portrayed, to the transgressor, but it often happens that even the greater sorrow comes to the innocent. A wayward child brings tragedy to a family, shattering a reputation and good name it may have taken generations to build. A drunken or otherwise perverted husband or wife smashes a good home. A rebellious son or daughter stabs a knife into the hearts of loving parents as he or she discards the loyalties of a lifetime. These are cases for comfort beyond the merely human touch that call for deep understanding, for spiritual fortification, for a resignation that is divine.

And then there are the lonely. They who have been bereft of the companionship of loved ones, sometimes left all alone without kin about them. I was reading the other day that there are more than six million widows in the United States, many of them being widowed at as early an age as forty with an expectancy approximating thirty years of life without their mates. Some are without the companionship of children. In the immediate circle of my own friends and associates, many sad partings have come. Decades of loving and most beautiful association have been sadly interrupted just at a time when it seemed to mortal ken the ripest and richest years of holy wedlock were in the offing. I know many a friend who needs comfort. I am deeply grateful that for the most part my immediate friends have this consolation of the spirit. They are buoyed up by an unfaltering trust that the sad separations are but temporary. They give themselves and their great service to the master to requite in part at least that which he gives to them—comfort and peace to the soul.

RICH BLESSINGS

I am aware that in the Christian world and perhaps outside of it as well, there are countless thousands of our Father's children who are the beneficiaries of the gifts of the gospel. There are many of all faiths and conditions of life who love the Lord; and in return for this love and obedience to his commandments, he blesses them with his spirit. I am grateful indeed that it is so; but, my dear brethren and sisters, with the superior knowledge which the Lord has brought to us, with a more perfect understanding of his holy gospel, with the gift of the Holy Ghost, how much more should we so favored enjoy its precious gifts! If others of our Father's children throughout the world observe these manifestations of his special blessings to his chosen people, they will be led to investigate and seek the truth.

It seems to me as we near the conclusion of this great conference with its uplifting and inspiring teachings and testimonies, we could do no better thing than to highly resolve that henceforth and always our loyalty, our lives, and our love shall be such that our Father may pour out his rich blessings upon us in the gifts of the eternal gospel with discernment, wisdom and comfort to all. I know that he lives. I know that he will reward the faithful. I pray that in his mercy he will bring light and truth to all the world, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

First Counselor in the First Presidency

I had hoped and supposed that my many speeches before the various groups at this conference would relieve me from saying anything more, particularly I had thought that this morning's sermon would count as something said here. But President Smith has asked that I say a word or two. I shall not detain you long because we must have President Smith close this conference.

REPENTANCE

So many things have been said, so much good has been told us, that it would be folly to try to summarize or repeat, but I think that most of us will leave this conference with two matters principally in mind—that of repentance and its reciprocal, forgiveness. The call has been made: Repent, for the hour of his judgment is nigh.

The Lord has said,

By this ye may know if a man repenteth of his sins—behold, he will confess them and forsake them. (D. & C. 58:43.)

I would like to point out that to me there is a great difference between confession and admission, after transgression is proved. I doubt much the efficacy of an admission as a confession.

FORGIVENESS

In the ancient days, men made sacrifice that they might be forgiven. Today we are told that we must bring to the Lord for our forgiveness a humble heart and a contrite spirit. As to forgiveness, the Lord has said,

I, the Lord will forgive whom I will forgive, but of you it is required to forgive all men. (Ibid., 64:10.)

which means, as I understand it, that where there is repentance, we shall forgive and receive into fellowship the repentant transgressor, leaving to God the final disposition of the sin.

TESTIMONY TO RISEN CHRIST

This is Easter, and I have already borne my testimony to the risen Christ but I do want to read from the 76th Section the verses we all know, part of which was quoted by Brother Evans this morning. This was the great vision that came to Joseph and Sidney in 1832:

And now, after the many testimonies which have been given of him, this is the testimony, last of all, which we give of him: That he lives!

For we saw him, even on the right hand of God; and we heard the voice bearing record that he is the Only Begotten of the Father—

That by him, and through him, and of him, the worlds are and were created, and the inhabitants thereof are begotten sons and daughters unto God. (Ibid., 76:22-24.)

I renew the bearing of my testimony that Jesus is the Christ, the Redeemer of the world, the first fruits of the resurrection, the Only Begotten of the Father.

And I cannot but remember that glorious message that came out of the chamber on that night most memorable perhaps in all the history of the world, the night before the crucifixion, when he had his disciples together and gave them his great final discourse:

Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid. (John 14:27.)

That message to the disciples in the chamber is a message that comes to all of God's children, that peace be with us always, and may we live so that we may rightfully ask therefor, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus. Amen.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

President George Albert Smith, President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, the Presiding High Priest of the Church, the prophet, seer and revelator, ordained and set apart thereto by those having authority will now close this conference with his final instruction.

PRESIDENT GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

I am very grateful that I have been able to attend the sessions of this conference; thankful that I have had the companionship of this great group, most of them in this building. I want to take this occasion to express my appreciation and invoke the blessings of the Lord upon these men, women, and children who have stood during these long two hours of meeting, with no place to sit but have stood here in the house of the Lord to be edified by those who have done the speaking. I am sure you will receive your blessings, and I am sure they will be sufficient to compensate you for any weariness that may have come to you as a result of this experience.

SECURITY ON LORD'S SIDE

The gospel of Jesus Christ is the only means by which we may hope to find a place in the celestial kingdom. Sometimes we feel that we are sure of it because we have membership in the Church. I take this occasion to call to the attention of the older members of the Church, who have lived a part of their lives and feel quite secure, the fact that nobody is secure unless he is on the Lord's side of the line.

All temptation and evil are on the devil's side. If I had time, I could tell you of an experience of a man who was magnified and was a great preacher of the gospel, and because of his failure to stay on the Lord's side of the line, he went into the dark and died a bitter apostate.

None of us are secure except we keep the commandments of our Heavenly Father. The pathway of righteousness is the highway of happiness. There is no other way to happiness.

PURPOSE OF LIFE

Today the people all over the world are talking about the same subject we have been speaking of, the resurrection. When we think of the resurrection of our Redeemer, I am reminded that the purpose of his life was to prepare us all, to make a path that we could all walk, that would bring us eternal happiness in his presence as well as in the presence of one another. He gave his life and testified by the shedding of his blood that he was a Son of God, and then as we have had it called to our attention, his appearance since that time has demonstrated beyond any possible doubt that he was what he claimed to be.

The Church is organized, and the missionaries go out in all the world to share the gospel, not to give some new truth, but to share the truth that the Lord has already revealed.

When he was asked to pray—I am reminded of a part of that prayer—he said,

... Our Father which art in heaven. Hallowed be thy name.
Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven.
(Matt. 6:9-10.)

UNIVERSAL RESURRECTION

That is the purpose of the gospel, and today we are thinking of what a marvelous thing it was when the Savior was resurrected, when he took up his immortal body to live forever.

But he wanted this earth to become a heaven, and that is what the gospel is intended to do, to teach people so that it will become a heaven. What a wonderful condition it would be! We rejoice because of the resurrection, and he held out to us that it would be a universal resurrection, and that this earth would be redeemed, and the people who dwell here would live in happiness forever.

Brethren and sisters, we ought to be grateful for our blessings. We ought to be thankful for the companionship of such men and women as we have. We ought to feel a desire to do all that we can to set an example, that others, seeing our upright lives may be constrained to keep the commandments of God.

We are coming to the close of a most interesting and instructive conference. As I look at these beautiful flowers that came from the Berkeley Stake, I want to take occasion again to thank the people who sent them, for I don't know of any place where flowers are more appropriate than in the house of the Lord. And these beautiful lilies that we have, have made this house a beauty spot that it would not have been but for them.

HOUSES IN ORDER

Brethren and sisters, let us go to our homes. If our houses are not in order, let us set them in order. Let us renew our determination to honor God and keep his commandments, to love one another, to make our homes the abiding place of peace. Each of us can contribute to that in the homes in which we live.

It will not be long until calamities will overtake the human family unless there is speedy repentance. It will not be long before those who are scattered over the face of the earth by millions will die like flies because of what will come.

Our Heavenly Father has told us how it can be avoided, and that is our mission, in part, to go into the world and explain to people how it may be avoided, and that people need not be unhappy as they are everywhere but that happiness may be in their lives—because when the Spirit of God burns in your soul, you cannot be otherwise than happy.

GRATITUDE FOR SUPPORT

I take this occasion to thank the brethren who are giving all their time to developing and building the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. I want to thank these men who stand by my side, who are so willing to support me in the responsibilities that are tremendous for one man to carry—my counselors, and the members of the Quorum of the Twelve and their assistants, and the First Council of the Seventy, the Presiding Bishopric, and the Patriarch.

I want to add to that the stake presidencies, the bishops of wards, the presidents of missions, and the presidencies and general boards of all the auxiliary organizations. I am grateful for the things that they are doing, because they are trying to bring this world into a condition that will be heaven. The Lord has said it could be if we will do our part.

BLESSING

In conclusion I desire to leave the blessing of our Heavenly Father with you all, that you may go to your homes renewed, refreshed, and invigorated, determined to carry on and to do all you can to make this earth heaven.

I bless you that you may have joy in this, that you may go to your homes in peace and in safety, and that you may carry with you that spirit which our Heavenly Father has bestowed upon us here so generously, and that we may look forward to the time when we may meet again in the name of the Lord, with assurance that a blessing will follow, because he has said it always would, even if two or three meet in his name.

Remember, we all have responsibilities. We may not be called to some definite duty, but in every neighborhood there is opportunity for each of us to radiate a spirit of peace and love and happiness to the end that people may understand the gospel and be gathered into the fold.

TESTIMONY

To some it may sound selfish to hear us say, "This is the only true Church." But we are only repeating what the Savior said, and he knows. It is the Church that he recognizes, and it bears his name. We do not say that in unkindness to our brothers and sisters, and they are our brothers and sisters, in other churches, or in no church, but we say it with the hope that they may feel the love that is in our hearts when we reach out to them with the desire that the happiness that has been ours may be theirs and may continue, not only now, but also throughout the ages of eternity.

God lives. Jesus is the Christ. Joseph Smith was a prophet of the Lord, and the gospel as it was restored through him is the power of God unto salvation to all those who would accept it and apply it in their lives. I bear this testimony in love and in kindness, and with my blessings as a servant of the Lord upon all of you, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

We have just listened to President George Albert Smith.

The Tabernacle Choir will now sing the "Hallelujah Chorus," and the closing prayer will be offered by President J. Willard Marriott of the Washington Stake, Washington, D.C., after which this Conference will stand adjourned sine die.

The conference of the Deseret Sunday School Union will convene in this building tonight at 7:00 o'clock. All are invited to attend, and all Sunday School workers are urged to attend.

The messages that have been received for individuals supposed to be in attendance at this Conference will be broadcast over the grounds as usual after the close of this meeting.

The choir music today has been furnished by the Tabernacle

Choir, with Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting, Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ this morning, and Elder Alexander Schreiner at the organ this afternoon.

I am sure the Tabernacle Choir will permit me to extend to them again the thanks and gratitude which all of us feel in our hearts for the great service which they are rendering to the Church. They are one of the great missionary instrumentalities of the Church. Their music grows more beautiful with the years. God bless them always.

Singing by the Choir, "Hallelujah Chorus."

President J. Willard Marriott of the Washington Stake offered the benediction.

Conference adjourned sine die.

GENERAL PRIESTHOOD MEETING

The General Priesthood meeting of the Church was held in the Tabernacle Saturday evening, April 8, at 7:00.

President George Albert Smith was present and presided.

The choral music for this meeting was furnished by the Deseret Stake Male Chorus, Elder Ladd R. Cropper conducting, Elder Alexander Schreiner at the organ.

The Tabernacle and the Assembly Hall to the south of the Tabernacle were crowded to capacity, every available space being occupied. The services were not broadcast, except that the brethren assembled in the Assembly Hall were able to see and hear the proceedings as they were televised from the Tabernacle.

As an opening number the Deseret Stake Male Chorus sang: "All In The April Evening."

President L. Harold Wright of the Maricopa Stake offered the opening prayer.

The Chorus sang the hymn: "I Need Thee Every Hour."

PRESIDENT GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

I hesitate to suggest that you crowd together and make more room for the people standing, but if there is a space anywhere that you can move into, let us give everybody a seat that we possibly can.

Now we are met tonight in this historic building, just as we have met many times, but we have never before had as many people here at Priesthood Meeting as we have now.

This is during the period of time that is celebrated by the world as a part of the time when the Saviour was in the tomb. Tomorrow will be Easter and the services in many parts of the Christian world will be directed to emphasize that fact. And yet, very few people in the world realize what it means. They talk about it and sing about it, but not very many people know what Easter really means.

Now tonight we shall visit together a little in regard to matters that the priesthood are concerned about, and our first speaker will be the Historian of the Church, Elder Joseph Fielding Smith, who will have some information that I am sure some of you will be very happy to obtain, and by learning of it will be able to help the Historian's Office with its work.

ELDER JOSEPH FIELDING SMITH

of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I wish to address my remarks particularly to the bishops and the presidents of stakes, and yet we are all concerned with the records of the Church.

KEEPING OF RECORDS

In the days of Adam, one of the first things the Lord did was to call upon him and others following him to keep records. You will read of that in the Pearl of Great Price.

In Section twenty, which was given at the time of the organization of the Church, and in the next Section, Section twenty-one, of the Doctrine and Covenants, you will find written instructions in regard to the keeping of records in the Church. What would we do, what condition would we be in if records had not been kept in days of old? We would not have our Bible; we would not have our Book of Mormon; and in our own day we would not have the Doctrine and Covenants, nor the Pearl of Great Price. You all know how valuable these books are, and the Lord preserved them that they might be a benefit to us in learning of His ways and in the keeping of His commandments.

WARD AND STAKE RECORDS

Now the Church has given instructions that records be kept in every ward and in every stake of Zion. We send out the blanks with definite instruction printed upon them as to the nature of the information which is to be gathered. We try to make it easy for the clerks. And I want to say that it is just as important, ordinarily so at least, to have a good, efficient clerk, as it is to have a good, efficient president of a stake, one who has the desire and the ability to keep the records.

These records should be kept in duplicate and one copy sent in quarterly to the Historian's Office and one filed in the stake. Records should be kept in the wards. The stake clerk should keep a record of all events, taking from the ward records the material that is essential to place in the record of the stake.

All recorders know, or should know, the nature of the recording that they ought to make.

HISTORICAL REPORTS

Now we have had a great deal of difficulty in getting these historical reports. Sixty-three stakes and two missions failed to send in reports for 1947 and 1948 and 1949. We have some stakes and some missions that have not reported for much longer periods of time, and yet these are quarterly reports. We are under the necessity constantly of sending out letters asking for these historical records to be sent in to us so that they may be filed and preserved according to the commandments of the Lord.

COMPLETENESS AND ACCURACY

I would like to call attention also, to the fact that, notwithstanding the information we ask for, that many of these reports are not complete. Every name should be written in full. Clerks should be appointed, or historians, in the wards and stakes who can write legibly so that their records can be read.

Some of them evidently do not read the instructions that are on these blanks. Many valuable matters pertaining to the records are not included. We would like to call your attention to this. We have been after you and some of you know that we are after you because we are writing constantly, and some of the stakes have been busy and they have gone to work and have complied, although they have had to go back years to do it.

UP-TO-DATE RECORDS

Too many mistakes are made because information is not written at the time. Everything should be recorded as nearly at the time of the event as it is possible for it to be. I know from my own experience that I cannot trust to my memory, and when things are neglected for any length of time mistakes are bound to enter into the records, in regard to certain incidents and as to the time when matters have been performed.

Now brethren, will you look into these matters in your stakes and see that this record is kept up to date? This is the way we are keeping the record of the Church. It is most valuable; it is absolutely necessary, and we ask you for your help, for your support in these matters, that we may have our records up to date, kept neatly, written in permanent ink, or upon the typewriter with a permanent ribbon, and in a manner that it can be preserved eternally.

I thank you for the opportunity of presenting this matter to you. May the Lord bless you all, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

PRESIDENT DAVID O. McKAY

Second Counselor in the First Presidency

As Elder Mark Petersen and President S. Dilworth Young and I were walking at a good clip this evening to get into our seats by seven o'clock, and encountered crowds of men outside the Tabernacle, and as we entered the west door, saw this building crowded to capacity, I had a re-affirmation of the strength of the priesthood. It is a fact, as you know, that if you have a moving body, and you increase the speed, the greater is the momentum. Add weight to that body and increase speed the momentum is still greater. That is what is occurring in this Church, a great body of priesthood, moving with an acceleration never before known to the Church. Brethren, there is nothing that can stop the progress of Truth, excepting only our weaknesses or failure to do our duty.

The older I grow the more thrilled and more grateful am I for the Church of Jesus Christ, and the more impressed I am with the importance of declaring this truth to the world.

PROGRESS IN MISSIONS

That leads me to the thought about which I am requested to speak tonight. What I have said about the momentum of this body of priesthood is applicable to our great missionary force. Never before have we had so many representatives in the field preaching the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and never before in the history of the world, I think, was that message more needed.

Over eight thousand missionaries, choice men and women, now laboring at home and abroad. They have the love of the truth in their hearts. I am glad to report to you that 1949 has, perhaps, been one of our most successful years. In material improvement we show great progress. Many of you spent your first years in foreign fields, met in undesirable halls—we all have—and we know the need and importance of having suitable meeting places. You will be glad to learn tonight that during last year we had in the missions one hundred and thirty-seven new building projects. Besides these are remodeling projects, thirty-eight; and other projects, including buying of lots, furnishings, etc., nine; or a total of one hundred and seventy-two building projects during 1949. The people are grateful for this surge forward to get suitable meeting places for those who are seeking the truth.

TAHITIAN MISSION

You have read in the paper about the completion of the edifice down in Papeete, Tahiti, the first mission opened by the Church among the Polynesians.

For years they have been in need of a means of transportation to go from island to island out there. What you Tahitian missionaries have endured during the past fifty years, or more, very few of us can realize. The Lord bless you for having endured it.

Well, the president of the mission and the elders and the saints will not be wholly dependent upon sailing schooners which sometimes get caught in a calm, and elders and saints remain on deck for hours and days and sometimes even weeks. An excellent schooner, or yacht, was recently purchased and a little over two weeks ago they left Wilmington Harbor, and after a successful voyage of three weeks on the Pacific, they arrived at Papeete in safety. You will be pleased to learn that that schooner was piloted, by one of the best captains in the United States. He is qualified to run any steamer, on any ocean in the world, and that man—not a member of the Church—Captain Kenny, volunteered his services to take the schooner to Papeete, without any monetary consideration.

If you could hear Elder Stephen L. Richards and Brother E. Bentley Mitchell, former president of the Tahitian Mission, tell how the way opened up for them to get that schooner, at less cost than the auxiliary engine that is in it, you would appreciate how the Lord is helping forward this missionary work. And you will all be happy to learn that Elder Richards received a cable from Captain Kenny day before yesterday, that they had landed on one of the islands in the Marquesas Group. It read: "After fifteen days on the ocean, we are all well and happy."

GREATER MISSIONARY ACTIVITY

So much for a glimpse at the progress that the missions are making in buildings and other physical aspects. The real progress, however, is in the increase in activity of the missionaries. One or two missions are yet a little lax, but most of the missions are getting the best service possible out of the missionaries, and the more the missionaries work, the more devoted they are, the greater their testimony of the divinity of this work.

More baptisms are reported, also greater sales of the Book of Mormon. The distribution of the Book of Mormon has exceeded that of any other year. Offers from non-members to aid have exceeded, so far as the brethren know, any other year. So, all in all, we can all feel happy and grateful tonight that the way is being opened for the spreading of truth.

CZECHOSLOVAKIAN MISSION

There is only one sorrowful phase and that is in Czechoslovakia, but brethren, every member of this Church should take a lesson from what has occurred in that communisticly dominated land, and if you do not, then you are not using the intelligence and the inspiration to which you are entitled.

Communism is anti-Christ. We have heard that some of our members suspect that stories which come out of Russia are exaggerated. Do not be deceived. No matter what the effect may be, I am going to tell you three things about communism which are facts. This was just hinted at six months ago. One of our brethren, loyal and true, presiding over a branch, held the priesthood just as you and I, had a testimony just as you and I, a prosperous businessman, true to his wife and has a lovely family. Brother Benson has met him and knows him.

They held a well-attended conference, Brother Toronto being present, and had a spiritual feast. A night or two later officers entered his home and arrested him. Asked for the charge, he was answered indignantly,

"Never mind the charge. Come with us."

"I ask to be heard," said the arrested man.

"You have already been heard and tried."

That is not an exaggeration. That is a fact.

And he was taken that night without even having been given a hearing and put into a concentration camp, his wife not knowing where.

Now you weigh the significance of that.

Second. You know all about the imprisonment of two elders, each put in a cell by himself with no communication. The President of the Mission could not communicate with them. The U. S. Consul could not. And there they remained, charged with what? They did not know, and day after day wondered what would happen to them. They had not violated any law. You and I know they had not. They were on their way to visit one of the Saints who needed comfort. She was up near the Polish border. Perhaps unwittingly they entered a forbidden area, but they did not do it intentionally. Well, they came out all right. They had to leave the country.

The third point followed the expulsion from that country of President Toronto and all the elders. You read it in the public press, that the Mormon missionaries were government spies. You and I know that is false, of course, and any government or any group of men who would publish it, do so in ignorance or with maliciousness.

Well, pray for those Saints over there, and we shall leave the rest to the Lord, and do all we can to comfort and bless them, and the people in every other country. They are God's children and they are longing for the Gospel.

I referred to the improvement, the accelerated force now manifested by our missions. Our mission presidents are doing excellent work. It is an inspiration to sit in their presence. You could listen for hours to their narrating manifestations of the Lord, resulting from the strength and activity of the elders. Now, brethren, will you please cooperate with them in making more effective the missionary cause.

STANDARDS FOR CALLING MISSIONARIES

There are certain standards by which we should be guided in calling our missionaries. First, call no young man or young woman, for the purpose of saving him or her. The young man is getting wayward and you think a mission would do him good. It would. But that is not why you are sending him out. Choose the young men and young women who are worthy to represent the Church, see that they are sufficiently mature, and, above all, that they have character.

AGE REQUIREMENTS

Now in regard to maturity, we have an age, twenty years for the young men, twenty-three for the young women, and recently, because of the call of mission presidents, we have said you may call young women who are twenty-one. But that is just in order to fill up the ranks that such a call is made. But now many are asking that we send young girls eighteen or nineteen. Please do not hurt their feelings. Just sit down and talk to them and say: "You work here at home. Prove yourself to be worthy, and as soon as they need you, we will recommend you and you will be called."

Some of you say, "Well, you have called young men at nineteen and now it hurts their feelings if we do not call their companions."

Now in every case if you will analyze it you will find that those young men have not left for their missions until near their twentieth birthday, or more. Please cooperate with us in that.

PHYSICALLY HANDICAPPED

Again there is the problem of the physically handicapped, of course you would like them to go, but think how they will interfere with their companions. Elders should go two by two and so should sisters, and no one of them should be hampered in his or her activity with somebody who is just not equal to the responsibility of missionary work.

Some of them are able to pass the physical examination all right, but when they get out under the strain of missionary work—and I tell you it is a strain—they soon break and then the mission president has a responsibility which diverts his attention from his regular duties, and missionary work is retarded.

IMPORTANCE OF CHARACTER

But the most important standard is character. Let each one whom you interview sense the fact that he is going out as a representative. Some of the brethren have urged that each ward should have in the mission field a certain percentage of the ward membership. That is not an ideal. If you have no one who is worthy and financially able to represent the Church, do not send anybody out, but sit down with these young men and young women and say, "If you accept this call willingly, you go out as a trusted representative of the Church and of the Lord Jesus Christ." And to be trusted, young men, is a greater compliment than to be loved, and you cannot violate that trust. You are obligated to keep that trust between now and the time you go to the missionary home. Maintain the Church standards with your companions who will want to give you a farewell party. We have heard of some missionaries who have been called who have joined in with their fraternity friends in actions that reflected discredit upon themselves and upon the missionary cause.

Tell the young man, "From now on, from this very moment, you are a trusted representative of this ward, of your parents and of the Lord Jesus Christ."

CARE NEEDED

Brethren, let us be more careful. These missionary presidents are calling for recruits. Why, today, where we thought five missionaries in a certain area would be sufficient, the president of the mission said, "send us twenty more."

There are some other points, but I will not take the time. I have spoken about their representing the Church. So do you and so do I. I would like to say in conclusion what that means tonight.

GLOOM AT CRUCIFIXION

President Smith appropriately referred to the fact that tomorrow is Easter. This is not just an anniversary, I mean as to the date. Easter varies from one date to another as you know. But I am not so sure that April is not a commemorative month, not only for the resurrection but for the birth of our Lord. And so I like to think that about two thousand years ago tonight, there were some pretty gloomy apostles. Peter was heavy-hearted; John was grieving; as was Mary, Christ's Mother. The other apostles had fled. Judas had realized what a crime he had committed. What a gloomy night!

Next morning Christ arose, and we are celebrating that event in the Christian world. That being true, this event establishes the immortality of the soul, the existence of loved ones who are on the other side, their personality persisting. They are as real in that spiritual realm as Christ's spirit when He preached to the spirits in prison.

RESURRECTION OF CHRIST

I wonder if the Christian world will take as evidence the testimony of those gloomy apostles, nineteen hundred and fifty years ago tonight, for it is an evidence of the divinity of Christ's resurrection from the grave. Let me read the following:

"When Christ was crucified the apostles' hopes had all but died. That His death was a reality to the disciples was shown in their intense grief in the statement of Thomas, in the moral perplexity of Peter and in the evident preparations for a permanent burial of their Master. Notwithstanding the often repeated assurance of Christ that he would return to them after death, the apostles seemed not to have accepted, or at least not comprehended Christ's statement as a literal fact. At the crucifixion they were frightened and discouraged. They were left alone and they seemed confused, helpless, panic-stricken. Only John stood by the cross.

"Not with timidity, not with feelings of doubt and gloom and discouragement is a skeptical world made to believe. Such wavering, despairing minds as the apostles possessed on the day of the crucifixion could never have stirred people to accept an unpopular belief, and to die martyrs to the cause.

"What was it that suddenly changed these disciples to confident, fearless, heroic preachers of the gospel of Jesus Christ? It was the revelation that Christ had risen from the grave. His promises had been kept; His Messianic mission fulfilled, 'The final and absolute scene of genuineness had been put on all His claims, and the indelible stamp of a divine authority upon all His teachings. The gloom of death had been banished by the glorious light of the presence of their risen, glorified Lord and Savior.'"

REPRESENTATIVES OF THE RISEN LORD

I said these missionaries are representatives of the Lord Jesus Christ, and so is every man within the sound of my voice. To be the representative of the risen Lord is the greatest honor that can come to man.

I think it was J. A. Francis, who wrote in the Los Angeles Examiner, in his tribute to Christ, as follows: "I am far within the mark when I say that all the armies that ever marched and all the navies that were ever built, and all the parliaments that ever sat, and all the kings that ever reigned, put together have not affected the life of man upon this earth as powerfully as has this one, solitary life."

And yet if we face the facts tonight on the eve of his resurrection, the anniversary of his resurrection, we know that there are many so-called Christians who do not believe in the literal resurrection, and upon your shoulders and the shoulders of ten thousand others in this Church rests the responsibility of declaring to the world his divine Son-ship, his literal resurrection from the grave, and his appearance in person in the presence of the Father to the prophet Joseph Smith.

I bear you my testimony that these things are real, your authority is real, you are trusted servants who must represent the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ in your allotted spheres to this dispensation.

May the Lord give us power to be worthy representatives and discharge our duty ably and well, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

First Counselor in the First Presidency

My brethren, as always I come to you in fear and trembling and in humility, and I ask our Heavenly Father to bless me, that what I may say tonight may be of some value to us in our work.

POWER OF THE PRIESTHOOD

I am again impressed, as always, by the strength of the priesthood. I have seen it work in the lives of many men. I have seen them grow under its power and its influence. I have seen men moving in the walks of life of the world increased in power and in influence, far beyond their natural abilities, and I am sure the only reason for it was the possession of the priesthood.

The priesthood, of course, must not be taken lightly, and as I have said to you before, the priesthood cannot be taken off and put back on at will as you would a coat. Once endowed by the priesthood it remains with you. You may forfeit its power, the power may go, but your priesthood is still there, and in the days to come God will judge us by the use we have made of it, and we can no more escape that consequence than we can escape death. That fact should be with us always and never absent from us.

UNITY

I wish again to refer tonight to my favorite subject of unity. I sometimes think that for me this is sort of an air on the G string that I play every time.

I am grateful to Brother Harold B. Lee today for making some variations to my tune. I adopt them; I am grateful for them. But with his permission I want to play my tune again.

I say to you again, brethren, as I have said every priesthood meeting night for years, that if you are united, if you will act as one man in carrying out the purposes of the Lord, there is absolutely nothing that can withstand your power.

LOYALTY

An essential part of unity is loyalty. There can be no union where loyalty does not exist. Loyalty is a pretty difficult quality to possess. It requires the ability to put away selfishness, greed, ambition and all of the baser qualities of the human mind. You cannot be loyal unless you are willing to surrender. There is no growth, mental, physical or spiritual, unless there be some curtailment, some sacrifice may I say, on the part of him who would be loyal. His own preferences and desires must be put away, and he must see only the great purpose which lies out ahead.

CASES OF DISLOYALTY

I have spoken in the past about loyalty to authority. You remember reference has already been indirectly made to this tonight by Brother McKay, speaking of Peter. You remember how when the Lord told what was going to befall him, the Lord, Peter avowed his loyalty to the Lord. The Lord picked him up very quickly and told him that before the cock should crow he would deny Him, the Lord, thrice. And Peter said: "Oh no, though I should die, yet I will not deny thee." and yet before the cock did crow the next morning he had three times denied his knowledge of an acquaintance with the Lord.

President McKay has referred tonight to the fact that at the cross when the Son of Man was offering himself as a sacrifice for the sins of the world there was only one apostle there and that was John. The rest, apparently, did not have the loyalty to go and see the Master die.

Loyalty to themselves has been a highly prized and sometimes too rare a virtue with all the brethren who have stood at the head of the Church, some more than others. Joseph suffered from disloyalty, and this has been referred to during the conference, for even those nearest to him plotted to overthrow him and he charged some of them with plotting his death. Brother Brigham had his critics,—men who could not be loyal, men whose own ambition, own greed, own objects, prevented them from following Brigham and helping him out. There were tens of thousands, however, who did have the loyalty and who followed.

You cannot have loyalty and be a carping critic. That just cannot be.

OBEDIENCE THROUGH FAITH

Now another point, brethren. Sometimes local presiding officers say, why, why should this be done, why should this course be followed? This does not apply to our local situation and that does not apply to somebody's else situation. Do you remember that after Adam was driven from the Garden of Eden he was offering sacrifice and an angel of the Lord came to him and said: "Why dost thou offer sacrifice unto the Lord?"

He said: "I know not, save the Lord commanded me."

And then the angel explained to Adam what the sacrifice meant, and the point I want to make from that is that obedience must often precede knowledge.

We are prone to try to rationalize and to say that the things we cannot understand cannot be. Well how much is there in the physical world that we do not understand and that even the wisest of our scientific savants do not understand. They theorize about it. None of us here, perhaps one or two of us may, but very few of us here, can understand the atom bomb, can understand whence comes the power and the heat of the bomb that cause such great destruction. The fact that we cannot understand it makes no difference at all. The atom bomb, unfortunately, works, and metes out its terrible destruction whether we know or not. Nations, apparently, are prepared to do anything, stoop to any level, to try to discover about the hydrogen bomb which is supposed to be so much more terrible than the bomb we have. Those of us here, the great bulk of us, know nothing about the hydrogen bomb. Does that make any difference to the fact of the bomb, the destruction still comes. The human mind cannot fully fathom the purposes of the Lord. We see them dimly. We see as through a glass darkly, but that does not change the fact that the purposes are there, even though we do not understand them.

LINCOLN'S FAITH

What a narrow measure it is to try and judge and calculate the infinite by the little our finite minds know. A story is told of Lincoln, who was supposed to be a great skeptic in his younger life. When he was down at Richmond as the war was drawing to a close, one of his early companions—I think it was General Reynolds—suddenly came around the corner of the tent where the President was living and found him reading the Bible. The General began to twit him about reading the Bible, basing the raillery on the early life, as he understood it, of Lincoln. Then Lincoln said: "Well, I have grown older and wiser. I now read the Bible. I believe all I can and I take the rest on faith."

And that is about where all of us are when it comes to the infinities that are involved in our spiritual welfare.

LOYALTY ONE TO ANOTHER

I want to say a word now about unity in the mass, our loyalty one to the other. It is not enough that you be loyal to those who are in authority over you. You must be loyal, one to another, and you will appreciate on a moment's thought what that loyalty will require in your dealings, one with another. Unless you can be loyal, one to another, the strength of the priesthood cannot be exercised, and I repeat, that means that out of our hearts must go the greed and the avarice, the ambition, that sometimes we let lodge there.

A short time ago some gentlemen came here to write an article about us, and as frequently happens, they came to see the First Presidency, and as frequently happens, their approach was kindly, more or less respectful, almost deferential. They were going to do a great job. We have become accustomed to that approach and try to keep our guards up as well as we can. They wrote a story and the title of it, as I recall it, was, "The Mormons Move Over." The implication as I remember it was that we are sort of being crowded out, surrendering our position. We were on the down-grade

Well, there was a time, brethren, when we moved over as we were bid, or forced, but if we have unity and loyalty we do not need to move over until we wish.

A GROWING CHURCH

This is a growing Church. It has the priesthood of Almighty God in it and directing it, and God will honor His priesthood if we, its bearers, honor it.

I read a story once. A judge was out driving one Sunday morning in Hyde Park, London. He had a coachman and a very spirited team. The park was filled with other buggies, teams, baby carriages and nurses and all the rest, and suddenly his team took fright and started to run away. As the coachmen dodged in and out among the other vehicles, the judge got more and more excited. He could see possible suits for damages for large amounts as he gazed at some of the handsome equipages they were narrowly missing. As the horses gained momentum he moved farther and farther to the front of his seat and then he called out to the coachman: "Henry, for goodness sake, drive into something cheap."

We were "cheap," once. Everybody considered it within his right and it certainly has been within his power to treat us, write about us, talk about us as he wished. But we are not "cheap" anymore, brethren, if we will be united and loyal. And the respect which men have for us is built, almost entirely, upon our loyalty and devotion to the cause which we represent. We do not need to put ourselves into a position where anybody can think that it is his power and his right to write spurious articles about us. They will be written but they will not be believed.

SCRIPTURE READING

One thing more before I sit down. I would like to urge you brethren to read the scriptures, not somebody's interpretation of them. Read them. They are the original sources. You go to them and read them. Make up your own minds about them.

When the Prophet, Seer and Revelator speaks, when he interprets, we follow. So with the brethren when they speak under the influence of the Holy Ghost. We have a growing lot of books, a growing lot of courses of study, but I urge you to read the scriptures, so that you may get your own idea as to what they mean.

I close as I began, brethren, that there is nothing that should be done, that we cannot do, if we shall be united and loyal, united in our purpose, loyal to those who preside over us and to the cause which we represent. That we may be so united and so loyal, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

I remember a number of years ago I was in Portland, Oregon, and at that time the President General of the National Society of the Sons of the American Revolution was there visiting, so I invited him to go to church with me. He and his wife accepted, and when we got to the place where the meeting was being held we could not get in. People were standing out in front, packed on the steps, and I said to him, "If you will follow me, we will find another way." And so we went around the building and climbed up the back stairs and went over the backs of the seats into the choir loft. The missionaries did most of the talking and when we got outside the visitors said to me, "My, Mr. Smith, what wouldn't our minister give for a congregation like that."

I just repeat that to you now—what wouldn't any organization, any church, give for a congregation like this, and I want to say not only because of numbers but because of quality.

The choir will now sing to us a hymn that will be familiar to many of you because it was sung by Melvin J. Ballard so many times, our dear departed brother who was so dear to us all, "I'll Go Where You Want Me To Go, Dear Lord." The choir and congregation will sing that hymn.

The choir and congregation sang the hymn "I'll Go Where You Want Me To Go, Dear Lord."

PRESIDENT GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

I wonder if there is anybody in the audience tonight, other than the man I am going to have stand, who is ninety-four years of age. I do not see very many hands up. I would like to know whether any of you have attended a hundred and thirty-five general conference meetings, and never missed a meeting. All those who have raise their right hand. (No hands were raised).

Brother Walter Cox of Provo is always at meeting, never misses anything, and he is the man I have been talking about and I thought I would like to have you look at him. He appears to be good for another ten or fifteen years.

WORK AMONG INDIANS

This is a great Church. Today we have had a number of Indians in the congregation and I thought we might be able to locate some of them tonight, but we hope to find them by tomorrow morning. I mention the Indians, because in this particular case, the men I am referring to have been in the Church a long time and they are very faithful. One man came to the Temple within the last two or three days and had his wife sealed to him. This means they are moving our way, in the direction that we are going, and that causes me to call your attention to the fact that the way is opening for the dissemination of the Gospel of Jesus Christ among the Indians.

Dr. John R. Nicholls, who is the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, was here some months ago and he seems to be very friendly to our work among the Indians, not more than to any other Church, but some of the other Church organizations have sought to keep us out of the reservations. Within the last year or two we have appointed a committee whose duty it is to find a way of reaching the Indians in the various sections of the country, wherever they may be.

INTERMOUNTAIN INDIAN SCHOOL

The Intermountain Indian School is located at what was formerly called the Bushnell Hospital at Brigham City. Dr. George Boyce is the Superintendent there, and he has manifested his kindness in every way. He wants to help the Indians all he can, their children who are there.

I take this occasion to say to our people who live at Brigham City, and I hope you will carry the message on to your wives who are not here, that you are doing a fine piece of work in looking after those Indians that are in the school at Brigham City. They are our Father's children. If they were not Indians a good many people would be concerned about them, but because they are some people are not so concerned. You people who hold the priesthood, not only at Brigham City but in every part of the world, enjoy a blessing from our Heavenly Father that carries with it a responsibility to share the gospel of Jesus Christ with all of His children, and that includes the Indians.

IMPORTANCE OF INDIANS

These Indians in the western world are the descendants of Father Lehi who left Jerusalem, centuries ago at the direction of our Heavenly Father. They are His children, and I hope that there will be no member of the Church, in any department, who will feel that because it is the Indians, they are not important. They are just as important as are the whites. They are entitled to the priesthood if they live to be worthy of it, and our Heavenly Father is anxious that they should have that blessing. I want to emphasize this to all you brethren, tonight.

Of course it is not necessary to say anything to the General Authorities of the Church. They know that a committee has been appointed, that we can no longer neglect our responsibility of carrying the Gospel to the Indians. And I hope that the presidents of stakes and bishops of wards and those who are in the mission field will feel the responsibility that is ours, and if we will do our duty the Lord will bless us for it, while he is blessing his Indian children. That is one of the matters that I had on my mind tonight.

Reference has been made to the development and growth of the Church. This meeting tonight is an evidence of the growth of the interest in the Church, because a good many of you people have come from afar to be here, and we appreciate it.

FRIENDLY MINISTER

A good many people are friendly with us. I had a visit with a good man not very long ago who is not a member of the Church. In fact, he is a minister. He is just as friendly and nice as can be, in fact, I received a birthday congratulation from him. The last time I saw him he was not very well, and he seemed to be afraid I was going to preach to him. He gave me to understand that he was not able to believe that Joseph Smith could have been a prophet. He was just in the same condition exactly that Nathaniel was in the days of the Savior when Philip said to him: "We have found our Lord."

Nathaniel asked: "Where did he come from?"

"Why, he came from Nazareth."

And then this good man said: "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?"

And Philip, who was talking to him, said: "Come and see."

And when he went to see he became a devoted follower of the Savior and was the one whom the Savior later referred to as "an Israelite without guile."

So I am not worrying but what our brother, if we can just get him to come and see—and not only him but hundreds of others—will understand as Nathaniel did, eventually, that this is our Father's work that we are identified with.

STATISTICS

Utah's birth rate was 33.9 per thousand in 1947. It was 31 percent above the national average of 25.8. New Mexico alone, had a higher birth rate than Utah.

Our death rate in Utah was 7.8 percent per thousand in 1947 and was 22 percent below the national average, and was the lowest in the nation.

The ratio of Utah's population attending school in 1940 in the age group of five to twenty-four was sixty-four percent. This is the highest ratio in the nation and is twelve percent above the national average of fifty-seven, according to the statistical abstract.

I thought you would like to know that this Church you belong to is not only better informed about the purpose of life, better informed as to where we came from and where we expect to go than any other organization in the world, but we believe in education and refinement and culture, and we believe that we will be saved no faster than we gain knowledge and apply that knowledge in our lives. We have nothing to apologize for among our brothers and sisters of the various churches.

I congratulate all of us who are here that we can be here, congratulate all of us that we are here in peace and quiet. Can you think of a more delightfully quiet place to be than here, and have the joy and satisfaction and companionship of good men, the very finest men and boys in all the world. And when we go from here I hope we will not forget that it is our privilege to carry the message that has been so beautifully portrayed to us today with regard to our responsibilities, by the brethren, carry the message to those to whom we may minister and with whom we associate.

DUTIES OF PRESIDING OFFICERS

There is one more thing I would like to emphasize. We have had quite a number of our boys and girls, due partly to the war conditions, that have become careless. In some cases the bishops have kept in touch with them not only in their own wards, but where they have moved away have had others contact them, and see that they did not stray away from the Church and lose their virtue. I thought when I heard of this how beautiful it was. Here was a father of a ward of six or seven hundred people and yet he had time to go outside of his own area to follow this boy or this girl, children of our Heavenly Father, and try to hold them in a path that would entitle them to eternal life in the Celestial kingdom.

Brethren, you men who are presidents of stakes, and bishops of wards and presidents of missions, branch presidents, holding positions of authority, you have tremendous duties, and I want to say to you that they carry with them tremendous responsibility. Let us not neglect our opportunities and our privileges. Let us labor while the day lasts.

We may not all live to be as old as Brother Cox here, ninety-four, ninety-four years of activity, always on hand when there was an opportunity to hear the Gospel preached or partake of it. He is always at the Brigham Young University affairs because there he can meet with members of the Church. Let us each year, as the years continue to come on, lay up our treasure in heaven so that when the time comes for us to go to the other side, our Heavenly Father will be able to welcome us home because we have not neglected our opportunities and because we have been anxious to share his Gospel with his other children.

THE POWER OF LOVE

There is one other thing that I should like to mention. The increase in the Church for 1949 was 16,261 members. Think of that in one year, and so it goes and goes if we will do our part, as the brethren have called to our attention tonight, if we will be true to one another, be true to our Heavenly Father, and if we will use our authority with kindness and love. We cannot drive these young people, and our neighbors and friends into the kingdom of heaven by scolding them and finding fault with them, but I want to tell you that we can love them into the direction of our Father in heaven, and by and by, perhaps, lead them there too.

That is our privilege. Love is the great power to influence this world, and if we do not find more love in the world soon, if people do not get together better than they are, then, as you have already been told, the predictions that are in the scriptures will be fulfilled.

MINISTRY OF THE SAVIOR

Reference has been made to the fact that the Son of our Heavenly Father appeared in Jerusalem and his own race refused him. He was crucified in the home of his friends, so to speak, but he was resurrected. Now a good many people in the world do not know what the resurrection is. Do you teach your children and your associates what it means?

Reference also has been made to the fact that the Father and the Son appeared to Joseph Smith. There are many people who do not believe it, but it is true just the same. And then we have the additional information of the appearance of the Savior after he was crucified when he came to this Western Hemisphere, as he had told them in the East: "Other sheep have I that are not of this fold, and them must I bring that there may be one fold and one shepherd," and so he came to the Western Hemisphere where the descendants of Father Lehi were, and appeared among them, and while they had been told that he would come, and while he came in the clouds of Heaven with power and glory, when he came to them, so that there could be no question, he said: "I am Jesus Christ for whom you have been looking."

MEANING OF RESURRECTION

There could be no question about it. His resurrection is plain to the Latter-day Saints who understand the gospel, but there are so many who do not understand what it means. But how beautiful it is to know that in our day, not only the Saviour, but our Father in heaven appeared, and other resurrected beings in addition, the Angel Moroni, John the Baptist, Peter, James and John, men that have lived upon the earth as we have lived, who have gone on and performed their part and have been resurrected and sent back to earth. That is what the resurrection means, and the purpose of the Gospel of Jesus Christ is to prepare every man woman and child for the time when all those who have died will be brought forth from their graves, and when our Heavenly Father will establish his kingdom upon this earth and the righteous will dwell there and Jesus Christ will be our King and our Law-giver.

This is my testimony tonight. I want to thank you all for the delightful privilege I have of being with you. When I go out among the people of the Church, they are always so kind and helpful and I pray that the Lord may bless them and bless you for all these good things, and I do it in the name of Jesus Christ, our Redeemer, Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

Brethren, I would like to caution you when going out tonight,—it is dark and the streets may be thronged with people—to be as careful as you can, so that there will be nobody injured by an accident. We will now be dismissed.

---

The Deseret Stake Male Chorus sang, "The Lord's Prayer."

President Harry T. Oscarson, of the Sugar House Stake offered the benediction.

---

The congregational singing of the Conference was directed by J. Spencer Cornwall, Conductor, and Richard P. Condie, Assistant Conductor of the Tabernacle Choir.

The Salt Lake Tabernacle Choir was in attendance at the Sunday sessions and presented musical numbers at those meetings. J. Spencer Cornwall directed the singing of the Choir.

The Brigham Young Choir, furnished musical numbers at the Thursday morning and afternoon meetings, John R. Halliday conducted the singing of the Choir at the morning meeting, and Newell Weight at the afternoon meeting.

Saturday morning, the singing was entirely by the congregation, and in the afternoon the Swiss-German Choir, Elder Heinz Rimasch conducting, furnished the choral numbers.

The music of the Tabernacle Choir and Organ broadcast, Sunday morning 9:30 to 10:00, as also the music for the Church of the Air broadcast, was directed by J. Spencer Cornwall, Frank W. Asper was at the organ, and the spoken word was by Richard L. Evans.

Accompaniments and interludes on the great organ were played by Alexander Schreiner and Frank W. Asper.

Stenographic notes of the Conference were taken by Frank W. Otterstrom and Joseph Anderson.

The One Hundred Twenty-first Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints

The One Hundred Twenty-first Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints convened in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Utah, Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, September 29, 30 and October 1, 1950.

General sessions of the Conference were held at 10:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., Friday, Saturday and Sunday, and the General Priesthood meeting convened in the Tabernacle Saturday evening, September 30, at 7:00.

The proceedings of the general sessions were broadcast over Station KSL, and by arrangement through KSL over the following stations:

In Utah: KSUB at Cedar City, KVNU at Logan, KSVC at Richfield, KJAM at Vernal.

In Idaho: KGEM at Boise, KID at Idaho Falls, KEYY at Pocatello, KVMV at Twin Falls, (Friday and Saturday morning and Sunday afternoon sessions) and KBIO at Burley (Friday and Sunday sessions).

In Oregon: The morning sessions over KSRV at Ontario, and the Sunday sessions over KLBK at LaGrande.

In Arizona: By transcription over KTYL at Mesa.

In Colorado: By direct line and transcription over KEXO at Grand Junction.

The services of the general sessions were also televised over KSL television station, channel 5.

All general sessions of the Conference and the General Priesthood meeting were broadcast in the Assembly Hall, just south of the Tabernacle, on the Tabernacle grounds, and in Barratt Hall (60 North Main) over a loud speaking system and by television. In addition, many who could not find accommodation in any one of these buildings assembled on the Tabernacle grounds and listened to the services as they were broadcast from the Tabernacle, by means of amplifying equipment.

President George Albert Smith was present and presided at each of the general meetings. He conducted the services at the Friday morning, Sunday morning, and Sunday afternoon sessions, also the General Priesthood meeting. President J. Reuben Clark, Jr., First Counselor in the First Presidency, conducted the Friday afternoon and Saturday afternoon sessions. President David O. McKay conducted the Saturday morning meeting.

Included in this report of the Conference is also a report of

FIRST DAY

MORNING MEETING

The Conference commenced Friday morning, September 29, at 10 o'clock, with President George Albert Smith presiding and conducting the services of the first session.

President George Albert Smith:

We welcome you to the One Hundred Twenty-first Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are glad to see so many of you here. We hope that those who have not seats will be able to crowd in so that no one will be compelled to stand.

This is the opening session of the One Hundred Twenty-first Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City, Utah.

All the General Authorities of the Church are in attendance except Elder Stephen L Richards, of the Council of the Twelve, who is visiting the European Missions, and President S. Dilworth Young who is presiding over the New England Mission.

Elder Joseph Anderson is the Clerk of the Conference.

These services, and all general sessions of the Conference, will be broadcast in the Assembly Hall and in Barratt Hall, 60 North Main Street, over a loud speaking system and by television.

This service, and all general sessions of the Conference, will be broadcast over Station KSL, Salt Lake City, and by arrangement through KSL, over the following Stations: in Utah: KSUB at Cedar City, KVNU at Logan, KSUB at Richfield, KJAM at Vernal; in Idaho: KGEM at Boise, KID at Idaho Falls, KEYY at Pocatello, KVMV at Twin Falls Friday and Saturday morning and Sunday afternoon sessions, and the Friday and Sunday sessions over KBIO at Burley; in Oregon: the morning sessions over KSRV at Ontario, and the Sunday sessions over KLBK at LaGrande; by transcription over KTYL at Mesa, Arizona; and by direct line and transcription over KEXO at Grand Junction, Colorado.

We are very grateful to the stations named for their cooperation in broadcasting the proceedings of this Conference. We thank them for their service, which will continue throughout the Conference. In the interest of time we shall not repeat this announcement at every session.

All general sessions will also be televised over the KSL television station, channel five.

The choir singing for this morning's session will be by the Combined Chorus of Singing Mothers from the Cache Region and

Friday, September 29First Day

Salt Lake City Stakes, with Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen conducting and with Elder Frank W. Asper at the Organ.

We will begin this service by the Relief Society Singing Mothers singing "The Lord Is My Shepherd."

The opening prayer will be offered by President Delbert F. Wright, Oakland Stake, California.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers sang the hymn "The Lord Is My Shepherd."

President Delbert F. Wright of the Oakland Stake offered the invocation.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers sang "Unto Thee I Lift Mine Eyes."

PRESIDENT GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

This is a beautiful picture this morning, to see the Lord's house filled with his children who have come here to worship. Since our last conference many things have occurred. While our Singing Mothers were singing, I thought of one of our brothers who went to the South Seas with me about thirteen years ago. When we arrived at British Samoa, the people were having a holiday. We had been persuaded to stay aboard the boat at night because it could not go around the reef, and we could not land in small boats in the dark. We were told that the people wanted to give us a welcome, so there was nothing else for us to do. We could not wade it, so we had to wait until they took us in.

WELCOME IN APIA

The boat anchored, and the next morning out came a war canoe all decorated and rowed by great husky men, one oar to a man, and there were fifteen oarsmen including the captain. They had persuaded us to wait because they said they wanted to give us a royal welcome, and when we arrived, it was a real welcome. Everybody was out, apparently. People were all along the shore. Among them was a group of women, more than a hundred, all dressed in light-colored dresses of tapa cloth made from the bark of the mulberry tree. They had made them themselves for that occasion.

When I saw this group of Singing Mothers all dressed alike this morning, my mind went back to Apia and Brother Rufus K. Hardy who was with me on that trip. He has been gone a long time.

Those Singing Mothers sang beautifully at our meetings and at such celebrations as they had, as our sisters have sung this morning. And since that time I have heard the Singing Mothers in many places, but I think I have never been more impressed with them than I was there in the islands.

BRETHREN WHO HAVE GONE

Our first meeting was in the open air, and there were between two and three thousand people whom the Singing Mothers entertained. But the thought that came into my mind is that Brother Hardy is gone. He has finished his work. Since our last conference President George F. Richards of the Council of the Twelve has finished his mission and has gone to find his reward. I miss these brethren.

I am glad that Brother Thomas E. McKay is here this morning. He has had a long siege of illness. I am sure that Brother Stephen L. Richards and those with him are having a real experience. In all probability they are in the vicinity of Jerusalem today.

JOY OF CONFERENCE MEETINGS

It is a joy to come to one of these conference meetings and meet people not only from all sections of the United States, but also from other parts of the world. It is one of the greatest gatherings of religious people that meet anywhere in the world, and you will find no other such place in all the world dedicated to the Lord for worship.

I would like us all to remember that this is the Lord's house. You will find no other place in all the world dedicated to the Lord that gathers together a congregation such as is here this morning, many of whom have come thousands of miles, not to see and be seen, but to wait upon the Lord. And he has promised us that if even two or three shall meet together in his name, he will be there to bless them.

This morning, that we may claim our blessings, there are approximately ten thousand here in the Tabernacle and in the Assembly Hall—all at worship. There are thousands more enjoying the conference by means of radio and television. We are here in the name of the Redeemer of mankind, and I am sure when we go from this conference back to our homes, we will have an intense desire to live the gospel of Jesus Christ, which is the only gospel that is the power of God unto salvation in the celestial kingdom.

OBSERVANCE OF COMMANDMENTS

This morning, brethren and sisters, I congratulate you: Not that you are here, but that you are here to worship. What a privilege it is to worship the Lord and to do it in the way he has indicated. There are some people who are members of the Church—their names are on the record, and they have an idea that that is all that is necessary—but the time will come when they will have to face their record, and their admission into the celestial kingdom will be conditioned upon the way they have observed the advice of our Heavenly Father right here upon earth. How grateful we ought to be, not to be uncertain as to where we are going.

I had a man say to me one day after I had taught the gospel to him for an hour or so on a train, "I'd give a lot to have the assurance that you have." And I replied: "You do not have to give anything to have the assurance that I have except to keep the commandments of the Lord. If you do that, you will know that the gospel of Jesus Christ is on earth. You will know that the authority of the priesthood is on earth."

How beautiful it is to realize that men who are worthy may receive that priesthood, and in the authority that is given them, do so many things that are a blessing to our Father's other children.

FAITH GROWS WITH RIGHTEOUSNESS

Within the week, I listened to one of the brethren who has just returned from the mission field. He has been out nearly five years, and he told of some of the experiences in the field. He told of people that had illness and the doctors did everything they could for them, but they could not heal them. But the humble missionaries, the humble men who held the priesthood, placed their hands upon the heads of those who were afflicted and rebuked their ailments, and they were healed.

That would not occur without faith, and our faith is conditioned upon our righteous lives. We cannot live improperly and have faith as we should, but if we keep the commandments of the Lord, we can have faith, and it will grow and increase as our righteousness increases.

POLITICAL CAMPAIGN

I am happy to be here with you, my brothers and sisters, in the Lord's house to wait upon him. We are right now in the midst of a political campaign here in America. It ought to be a source of education to the people. It ought to inspire men and women to choose for their officers in the various sections of the country, particularly in the nation, men and women who believe in God. That is their privilege, but unfortunately so many times people become allied with a group, and they insist on everybody supporting the individual that they support, and the result is a campaign of bitterness.

Brethren and sisters, you have your agency; you do not have to be angry with your brother and your sister because they do not see as you do. We are not supposed to criticize and find fault with the members of the Catholic Church, the Presbyterian Church, the Methodist Church, because they cannot understand all of the gospel.

I think it is fine to encourage them to understand all that they have and then add to it. Now if that is true in regard to our religious belief, surely we will not lose our way during a political campaign, and cultivate anger and displeasure and hatred for those who do not believe as we do.

CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES

And that brings me to something that is frequently on my mind. No nation in the world has a constitution that was given to it by our Heavenly Father except the United States of America. I wonder if we appreciate that. The Lord gave us a rule of life for this great nation, and as far as we have lived up to it and taken advantage of it, the nation has grown, and the people have been blessed. But there are many people who prefer, or at least they seem to prefer, something else.

As one man said to me, "Why not try what Russia has tried and Germany has tried?" And my answer to him was, "Why try something that has already failed? Why not hold on to what the Lord has given?" The Constitution of the United States was written, it is true, by men, George Washington, Benjamin Franklin, and others who were their associates, but we have in this book that I have in my hand, the book of Doctrine and Covenants, a revelation in which the Lord tells us that the Constitution of the United States was prepared by men raised up by him for this very purpose.

As Latter-day Saints we ought to know that there is nothing better anywhere else. And so we should cleave to the Constitution of the United States and in doing so, earn the blessings of our Heavenly Father.

OBSERVANCE OF TEN COMMANDMENTS

It was a long time ago that the Lord gave to Moses the Ten Commandments. If the people of the world had observed the Ten Commandments from that time until now, we would have a different world. There would be millions of people who would live longer than they have lived and be happier. The Ten Commandments are in force today, and if we are good Latter-day Saints and are observing what the Lord has advised, among other things, we will honor the Sabbath day and not make it a day of pleasure. The Constitution guarantees us liberty that no other nation enjoys. Most of the nations are losing the liberties they have had because they have not kept the commandments of the Lord.

Most of the difficulty is the bid that is made by the leadership of nations to people that if they will follow the plan that the leaders map out, they will be fed and clothed without having to work so hard for it, but it does not work. People are being misled with the idea that they can get something for nothing and are not encouraged to work for what they need and desire.

Brothers and sisters, you are approaching a political campaign. Go to the Lord in prayer. Seek his guidance. We do not want to turn this nation over to the folly of the teachings of other nations that have failed. What we should do is to cling to what we have, and it is wonderful what the Lord has given to us in this nation.

Now it does not make any difference to me what a man's politics is; as long as he observes the advice of our Heavenly Father, he will be a safe companion and associate. We should not lose our tempers and abuse one another. I want to say that nobody ever abused anybody else when he had the spirit of the Lord. It is always when we have some other spirit.

Friday, September 29First Day

SEEK THE LORD

Seek the Lord, brothers and sisters. We do not have to live as they are living in many other parts of the world. We can continue to live under the influence of the Spirit of the Lord and worship. One of the most populous nations in all the world restricts the people in their worship. They cannot worship as we do here, and yet there are many people in our land who would like to try what they are doing over there because they want something different.

I hold in my hand a copy of the Doctrine and Covenants, and in it the Lords tells us another thing, to pray for and sustain the Constitution of the land and those who represent us in its offices. So, pray for the President of the United States, pray for those who have been elected to Congress, pray for your governor and the members of your legislature. If they have the Spirit of the Lord, they cannot go wrong; but without it they can go a long way on the by-path.

HAWAIIAN CENTENNIAL

Here we are this morning, on a beautiful day. No people could be more comfortable in worship than we are this morning. I am so grateful that I am able to be present. Recently I, with a group of my brothers and sisters, went to Hawaii to celebrate the centennial of preaching the gospel in the Hawaiian Islands. Some of our party expected to find most of the people Hawaiian. But it was found there were Hawaiians, Japanese, Chinese, Portuguese, Samoans, and several other nations I might name, all living there at peace. When our meeting was held in a large building, all of those races were there as members of the Church.

GOSPEL FOR ALL PEOPLE

The gospel of Jesus Christ is not just for us. It is for the people of the world, all our Father's children, and at the present time we have over 5800 missionaries out in the world, from this little Church. What for? To go to all these people and say, "Keep all the good things that you have, keep all that God has given you that enriches your life, and then let us share something with you that will add to your happiness and increase your satisfaction." That is the spirit of the gospel of Jesus Christ. Our happiness is conditioned upon our loving our fellow men, all of whom are children of our Heavenly Father.

Right here on this block is one of the greatest missionary fields in the world. I see a man sitting down here in the audience who spends much of his time with the people on this block. He is a wonderful missionary and just as happy as he can be when he is talking about it. When we are doing missionary work to bless the people, we are doing it under the influence of the Lord, and we are sure to be happy.

SPIRIT OF PRAYER AND GRATITUDE

We welcome you all here this morning. Let us all come into this house, into the houses that may be necessary to be used for the conference, with a spirit of prayer, the spirit of gratitude. Let us appeal to the Lord to bless us, and then those who address us will be inspired. I pray that we may all live in such a way that our Heavenly Father can have us in his keeping, that we may have joy and satisfaction, and we will have if we have this Spirit.

I pray that his peace may be with us during the continuance of this meeting and the other meetings of the conference, that we may meet with a feeling of gratitude for all our blessings. And when the conference is concluded, and we return to our homes, may we do so with the appreciation of the fact that we did wait upon the Lord and that he fulfilled his promise and was with us to bless us. I pray that we may be filled with that spirit that comes from him, and that is a spirit of love, of kindness and helpfulness and of patience and forbearance. Then, if we keep that spirit with us in our homes, our boys and girls will grow up to be what we would like them to be.

That the Lord may add his blessing, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOSEPH FIELDING SMITH

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

President George Albert Smith says that this is a wonderful sight. To that I agree. It gives me great pleasure to look into the faces of men and women whose lives are clean; who have faith in God; who have made covenants to serve. President Smith further says that salvation comes through the keeping of the commandments of God. We do not believe that salvation comes from lip service, merely a confession with our lips that Jesus is the Christ. It comes through obedience to every principle and eternal truth pertaining to our exaltation. Let me read to you words of the Lord given to his disciples on this continent as he stood in their presence.

And it shall come to pass, that whoso repenteth and is baptized in my name shall be filled; and if he endureth to the end, behold, him will I hold guiltless before my Father at that day when I shall stand to judge the world.

And he that endureth not unto the end, the same is he that is also hewn down and cast into the fire, from whence they can no more return, because of the justice of the Father.

And this is the word which he hath given unto the children of men. And for this cause he fulfilleth the words which he hath given, and he lieth not, but fulfilleth all his words.

And no unclean thing can enter into his kingdom; therefore nothing entereth into his rest save it be those who have washed their garments in my blood, because of their faith, and the repentance of all their sins, and their faithfulness unto the end.

These words that I have read to you are from the twenty-seventh chapter of III Nephi, verses 16-19 inclusive.

LAMB'S BOOK OF LIFE

One of my great sorrows is that so many members of the Church fail to recognize this truth which I have read. We are not going to be saved in the kingdom of God just because our names are on the records of the Church. It will require more than that. We will have to have our names written in the Lamb's Book of Life, and if they are written in the Lamb's book of Life then it is an evidence we have kept the commandments. Every soul who will not keep those commandments shall have his name blotted out of that book.

WORLD REJECTS BLESSINGS

I am exceedingly grateful this morning for the knowledge which I have, limited as it is, of the gospel of Jesus Christ; of the things that have been revealed for our salvation; for the opportunities which come to us to give service to the Church and to our fellow men. We have so many blessings that the world does not have. The world could have them, but it will not. As the Savior said, speaking particularly of the Jews, many a time would he have gathered them as a hen gathers her chickens under her wings, but they would not. I wish that every honest soul in this world would read the Book of Mormon; would read the Doctrine and Covenants; the Pearl of Great Price, besides reading the Bible. What a glorious privilege is ours. The so-called Christian world, divided and subdivided, maintains that the Bible contains all of the word of God. To them the Lord has never given a revelation. According to its teachings nothing has come from the heavens by way of counsel and advice or revelation, comparable to that which we find in what they are pleased to call the canon of scripture.

Not long ago, as I was on the train coming home, a minister said to me that the Book of Mormon was a fraud because in the last chapter of the book of Revelation the Lord so declared it. Let me read those words.

And if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book. (Rev. 22:19.)

I said to him, "My good friend, don't you know that when that was written we had no Bible?" This Bible was not compiled as we have it when that was written. That has reference merely to this Book of Revelation. Then he was sorry that he had spoken. Well, all they have is what is contained in this book (the Bible), this record that closed nearly two thousand years ago.

ADVANTAGES ENJOYED

See the advantage, brethren and sisters, that we have. Not only do we have the revelations given to the prophets of ancient Israel, given by our Savior when he was on the earth and by his disciples in that first century, but the Lord has continued to speak; he has given many revelations to others. We have them. We are blessed with the Book of Mormon which contains the principles of the gospel so clearly stated, that we do not stumble over them. We have the Doctrine and Covenants, which is our book particularly, containing the revelations given to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and to all the world if it will have them. This book isn't just for us, but we have it. The world won't have it. See what it could have if it would. It could have information, knowledge and wisdom pertaining to the salvation of men, that can't be found in the Bible. I have said, and I think I am right, that there isn't one principle pertaining to the salvation of men that is so clearly stated in the Bible, as it has come down to us, that men do not stumble over—not one thing. There is not one principle they can be united on that has been so clearly stated that they don't find their interpretations of it conflicting.

THE VISION

Do you want to know about the resurrection of the dead? Who is going to be saved in the celestial kingdom of God? Then read your Book of Mormon. Read your Doctrine and Covenants. The seventy-sixth section of the Doctrine and Covenants, known as The Vision, is the clearest, most concise statement regarding salvation that I know anything about, and I doubt if the Lord ever gave to any people at any time upon the face of the earth anything clearer than this revelation. Do the people of the world know where they are going when they die? No. They sing about a beautiful isle of somewhere. They don't know. Can they find out in the Bible? Yes, we can find it. They could find it if they had the right inspiration, but with the added help that we obtain from the records the Lord has given us, we don't stumble over that. We don't stumble over baptism and how it should be performed and by whom. We have a clear and perfect understanding of the nature of God. Now, I can find that in the Bible; so can you. So can they, if they would search for it in the spirit of faith; but they stumble over it; and yet they are not willing to accept the revelations of the Lord given in the day and dispensation in which they live that would set forth clearly to them all these principles of eternal truth. How greatly are we blessed!

BOOK OF MORMON

Then I have this regret, that so many members of the Church do not avail themselves of this information. The Lord was kind enough and so deeply concerned in the matter that he sent an angel from his presence to reveal the Book of Mormon. For ages he prepared the Book of Mormon that it might come forth to the convincing, it says, of both Jew and Gentile and the remnant upon this land, that Jesus is the Christ. It was to come forth in a day when men would be denying the Christ. Isn't that true? Is not the world today getting farther and farther away from a knowledge concerning the Son of God? Are not the peoples of the earth beginning, if they have not already reached the point, to deny the literal resurrection of the body and are questioning the resurrection of the Lord himself and his godhood? The Book of Mormon said that would be the case and that it was to come forth as a testimony, as a witness to men that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, the Redeemer of the World, and that men will be saved and exalted in the kingdom of God by keeping their hearts pure and obeying all of his commandments. These things the Lord has impressed upon us.

COVENANT AT BAPTISM

In conclusion let me read the covenant we make when we are baptized and come into this Church.

All those who humble themselves before God and desire to be baptized, and come forth with broken hearts and contrite spirits, and witness before the church that they have truly repented of all their sins, and are willing to take upon them the name of Jesus Christ, having a determination to serve him to the end, and truly manifest by their works that they have received of the spirit of Christ unto the remission of their sins, shall be received by baptism into his church. (D. & C. 20:37.)

What do you get out of that? I get this: that every soul baptized, truly baptized, has humbled himself; his heart is broken; his spirit is contrite; he has made a covenant before God that he will keep his commandments, and he has forsaken all his sins. Then after he gets into the Church, is it his privilege to sin after he is in? Can he let down? Can he indulge in some of the things which the Lord has said he should avoid? No. It is just as necessary that he have that contrite spirit, that broken heart, after he is baptized as it is before.

POWER TO REACH MEMBERS

Oh, I wish we had the power, we who hold the priesthood, to reach every soul who is not faithful, who is not humbled in his heart

—members of this Church—that we might bring them back to a full understanding of the gospel. Is it true that some among us have an idea that it matters not that we sin so long as it is not a grievous sin, a deadly sin, that we will yet be saved in the kingdom of God? Nephi saw our day. He said that people would be saying that. But I say unto you, we cannot turn away from the path of truth and righteousness and retain the guidance of the Spirit of the Lord.

May the Lord bless the Latter-day Saints. May he bless all people. Oh, I wish that we would all humble ourselves and seek the truth which the Lord has declared to us by his own word in this day in which we live. The Lord bless us all, help us to be true and faithful and keep his commandments, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER BRUCE R. McCONKIE

Of the First Council of the Seventy

President George Albert Smith said this morning that it was not enough for people to have their names on the records of the Church in order to be saved in the kingdom of God, but that it was necessary to keep the commandments.

Then Elder Joseph Fielding Smith said the same thing and read to us the covenant of baptism, that is the covenant which we take in the waters of baptism.

A COVENANT PEOPLE

We are a covenant-making and a covenant-taking people. We have the gospel which is the new and the everlasting covenant: new in that the Lord has revealed it anew in our day; everlasting in that its principles are eternal, have existed with God from all eternity, and are the same unchangeable laws by which all men in all ages may be saved. The gospel is the covenant which God makes with his children here on earth that he will return them to his presence and give them eternal life, if they will walk in the paths of truth and righteousness while here.

We are children of the covenant which God made with Abraham, our father. To Abraham, God promised salvation and exaltation if he would walk as the Lord taught him to walk. Further, the Lord covenanted with Abraham that he would restore to Abraham's seed the same laws and ordinances, in all their beauty and perfection, which that ancient patriarch had received. "For as many as receive this gospel," the Lord said to him, "shall be called after thy name, and shall be accounted thy seed, and shall rise up and bless thee, as their father." (Abraham 2:10.)

Now we have this same everlasting covenant. We have the restored gospel, and every person who belongs to the Church, who has passed through the waters of baptism, has had the inestimable privilege of making a personal covenant with the Lord that will save him provided he does the things he agrees to do when he enters into that covenant with God.

ALMA'S EXPLANATION

Alma recited this personal covenant of salvation at the waters of Mormon in language like this—all of it is, of course, summed up in the promise to keep the commandments of God—but Alma gives these particulars: He says that when we go into the waters of baptism we covenant that we will come into the fold of Christ and be numbered with his people. We covenant that we will take upon ourselves the name of Christ and be Saints in very deed. We covenant that we will bear one another's burdens, that they may be light. We covenant that we will mourn with those that mourn. We covenant that we will comfort those that stand in need of comfort. We covenant that we will stand as witnesses of Christ and of God at all times and in all things and in all places that we may be in, even until death. Then, by way of summary, Alma says we covenant that we will serve God and keep his commandments.

THE LORD'S PART

In return, that is, if we do all these things, the Lord on his part promises us that we will come forth in the first resurrection and be redeemed of him; that he will pour out his Spirit more abundantly upon us while we are here in this life; and that we will have eternal life in the world to come.

I don't suppose that the Lord is making any useless covenants with any individual; and so, any person who will keep this covenant, and do all the things required by it, can have in his heart the assurance that he will go to the presence of God and have eternal life in the mansions that are prepared.

RENEWING OF COVENANT

So important is this covenant in the eyes of the Lord that he has provided for us a means and a way to renew it often. The ordinance whereby we renew this covenant is the ordinance of the sacrament. Every time we partake of the sacrament worthily, with humble hearts and contrite spirits, we agree again that we will take upon ourselves the name of Christ, always remember him, and keep his commandments which he has given us. And the Lord agrees with us again that we will always have his Spirit to be with us; and further, that we will have eternal life in his kingdom in accordance with the revelation which says,

Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day. (John 6:54.)

To be saved is to go to the celestial kingdom of heaven. To be exalted is to gain the highest heaven or degree within that glory. Not only have we been permitted as Latter-day Saints to take the covenant of salvation, and to renew it from time to time, but we have also been privileged to enter into covenants which will give us exaltation in our Father's kingdom. After a man has taken the covenant of baptism and has pressed forward in righteousness and steadfastness before the Lord, and has desired to keep his commandments, and manifested by his works that he places the things of the kingdom of heaven first and will let the things of this world take care of themselves, there comes a time when he is called and chosen and ordained to the higher priesthood. Ordination to the higher priesthood includes a covenant of exaltation.

The Lord revealed this covenant to Joseph Smith in this language:

For whoso is faithful unto the obtaining these two priesthoods of which I have spoken, and the magnifying their calling, are sanctified by the Spirit unto the renewing of their bodies.

They become the sons of Moses and of Aaron and the seed of Abraham, and the church and kingdom, and the elect of God.

And also all they who receive this priesthood receive me, saith the Lord:

For he that receiveth my servants receiveth me;

And he that receiveth me receiveth my Father;

And he that receiveth my Father receiveth my Father's kingdom; therefore all that my Father hath shall be given unto him.

And this is according to the oath and covenant which belongeth to the priesthood.

Therefore, all those who receive the priesthood, receive this oath and covenant of my Father which he cannot break, neither can it be moved.

But whoso breaketh this covenant after he hath received it, and altogether turneth therefrom, shall not have forgiveness of sins in this world nor in the world to come. (D. & C. 84:33-41.)

FULNESS OF BLESSINGS

Now, according to the revelations which we have received, the fulness of the priesthood, meaning, I suppose, the fulness of the blessings of the priesthood, is had only in the temples of God. There is an order of the priesthood which is named the new and everlasting covenant of marriage. When people enter into that order of marriage, administered in the temples of the Lord, by the Lord's servants, having the Lord's authority, they make a covenant of exaltation, a covenant that will bring them up in the resurrection as husband and wife. The family unit will continue, and they will gain the highest reward and the greatest honor and glory that our Father can bestow on any of his children. They will be gods, even the sons of God, and all things will be theirs, for they will receive of the fulness of the Father.

These covenants which we take in the waters of baptism and when we partake of the sacrament, if we keep them, will guarantee us a place in the celestial world. These covenants which we take when we are ordained to the higher priesthood, and when we enter into that order of priesthood which is the new and everlasting covenant of marriage, if we keep them, will guarantee us a place of exaltation in eternity.

And as with the covenant of baptism, so with the covenant of marriage: I don't suppose the Lord is making a useless covenant with us or offering us something that we are not able to obtain. In each instance, if we keep our part of the bargain and do the things we know we should, the Lord has promised to do his share and keep his part of the bargain and give us the promised reward.

BAPTISM A GATE

Sometimes someone will say: "Well, I have been baptized into the Church; I am a member of the Church; I'll just go along and live an ordinary sort of life; I won't commit any great crimes; I'll live a reasonably good Christian life; and eventually I will gain the kingdom of God."

I don't understand it that way. I think that baptism is a gate. It is a gate which puts us on a path; and the name of the path is the straight and narrow path. The straight and narrow path leads upward from the gate of baptism to the celestial kingdom of heaven. After a person has entered the gate of baptism, he has to press forward with a steadfastness in Christ, as Nephi expresses it, having a perfect brightness of hope, and a love of God and of all men; and if he endures to the end, then he gains the promised reward.

And so it is with marriage and exaltation. Sometimes people think they can enter into the ordinance of celestial marriage and then be indifferent or lukewarm or even commit iniquity and sin, and yet figure that eventually, in the eternities that are prepared, after they have paid the penalties for their sins, they will come up as husband and wife and enter into their exaltation. Such is not the case. The same principles apply to marriage and exaltation as apply to baptism and salvation. There is no such thing as gaining salvation or exaltation except by obedience to those laws upon which the receipt of these blessings is predicated. Salvation never has been and never will be the fruit of sin.

COVENANTS TO BE KEPT

After we have been baptized, after we have been married in the temple, after we have taken all these covenants, we have to keep them. Every promise that we receive is conditioned upon our subsequent faithfulness. It is expressly so stated in the marriage covenant itself. We have to be obedient, faithful, and diligent, valiant in the testimony of Christ, walking by every word that proceedeth forth from his mouth. By such a course we will sanctify our souls. When we become sanctified and pure, we are capable and eligible and worthy to stand in the presence of our Father. No unclean thing can dwell in his presence. The whole process of salvation, this whole probation that we are undergoing in mortality, is to permit us to cleanse and perfect and purify our souls. It is to permit us to take evil and iniquity and carnality and everything that leads away from God out of our souls, and replace those characteristics with righteousness and virtue and truth and obedience, which, if we do, degree by degree, will perfect us until eventually we are clean and spotless and pure and are able to stand the glory of the celestial world. If we can't stand the glory of the celestial kingdom, we won't be able to go where God and Christ are.

BLESSINGS TO FOLLOW

We get the greatest blessings that it is possible for men to get here in this life by living the gospel. The world may be in turmoil, torn and disheveled; there may be blood and carnage on every hand, but if we keep the commandments of God, we will get the Holy Ghost for our companion and guide. Those who have the Holy Ghost get the peace which passeth understanding. Now, that is the greatest gift that a person can get while he dwells in mortality.

And then by having kept those same commandments and having walked in that same path, having kept those same covenants, we get the sure promise that we will be inheritors of a celestial exaltation in the mansions that are prepared. The gospel gives us the greatest blessings it is possible to receive in time, and assures us of the greatest inheritance it is possible to gain in eternity. How grateful we ought to be for it! How anxious we should be to keep the commandments of God, and the covenants that we have made, so that we may have all the choice and rich things the Lord promises the Saints. It is my prayer that we may so do, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOSEPH L. WIRTHLIN

First Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

I sincerely trust, my brethren and sisters, that I might enjoy an interest in your faith and prayers during the few moments that I shall stand before you. I have the high honor and privilege of laboring with the youth of the Church; and it is a distinction and an honor to associate with Bishop Richards and Bishop Isaacson, who have the welfare of the young people at heart.

PAUL'S ADMONITION

The admonition of the Apostle Paul to his younger associate Timothy is so applicable to youth:

Let no man despise thy youth; but be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity. (I Timothy 4:12.)

Through the great youth program of the Church, the admonition of Paul to Timothy is being adhered to. On every hand we see the evidence in the lives of these young people of their belief, faith, charity, and purity.

FAITH OF YOUNG PEOPLE

Sometime ago while I was visiting in the southern part of the state with Sister Wirthlin, we decided to remain overnight at Bryce Canyon. We arrived in the afternoon, meeting some of the young people who were employed there. They came to our cabin and held what I would call a fireside chat. These young men and women told us of ambitions and objectives to be achieved and of their great faith in the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. I remember one young man who told us that he came to Bryce Canyon with the hope of earning enough money to pay his school expenses for the coming year. He was promised a certain salary, but later the manager indicated that the salary could not be paid in the amount first mentioned. The young man was deeply worried, knowing that the income for the summer would not be adequate. He said he worried about it for several days and wondered whether or not he should seek employment elsewhere.

"Finally, one day," he declared, "as I was driving out among the cedars to gather firewood for the lodge, I said to myself, 'Why not ask the Lord about it?' So I stopped the truck and walked out among the cedars, knelt down, and talked to my Heavenly Father. And there came to my heart a feeling of assurance that I should remain at Bryce Canyon and things would work out. A few days later the manager came to me and said, 'We have decided to give you the salary promised you in the first place.'"

You couldn't convince that young man that the Lord hadn't answered his prayer. He believed implicitly in God, and because of that great faith he took his problem to the Lord and found the solution.

The next morning when we went to the lodge for our breakfast, I noticed on the table the name of the waitress, an old familiar Latter-day Saint name. When the young lady came in, I asked her where she lived, and she answered, "I live in Bountiful."

I asked, "I suppose you are a member of this so-called Mormon Church?"

She replied, "Yes, I am."

Then I asked, "What kind of church is it?"

She declared rather emphatically, "It's a good church."

And then I put the next question quite strongly and asked her if she thought it was the only true church. In a very positive way she gave me to understand that it was the true church. At that point Sister Wirthlin told the young lady who I was, and that ended it. But the thrill of the whole thing was that this young woman, talking to a stranger, was willing to bear testimony to the fact that she belongs to the restored Church of Jesus Christ.

FAITH OF SERVICEMAN

Some four weeks ago I had a rather interesting and inspiring experience. A young man whom I have known since he was a boy came into my office. He said, "I'm a reserve officer, and I have been called into the army."

He had been married only about four or five years and has two lovely children, and I sorrowfully replied, "Paul, I'm sorry, in a way."

He said, "Brother Wirthlin, don't worry about me, I have come here this morning to get some tracts that I might do some missionary work among my companions in the army; and furthermore, I have a promise, which I look upon as a divine promise, that I shall live to see the day when my father, who is not a member of the Church, will join it. I'm so impressed with that promise, I'm not worrying about the experiences that are immediately ahead of me." Such faith—so simple, and so profound! This young man will enjoy the blessings of our Heavenly Father because of his sweet, clean life and his faith in the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, and in the priesthood.

We often hear young people bear their testimonies to the divinity of this great work, and what a thrill it is; although, at times, there are evidences of a negative attitude on the part of older people. They say these young people cannot stand up and testify that they know this is the Church of God, that God lives, that Jesus is his Son, and that Joseph Smith was a true prophet. Brothers and sisters, young people, even a child at the age of eight who has been baptized, can stand up under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost and bear sincere testimony that he knows the Heavenly Father lives, that Jesus is his Son, and that Joseph Smith was his chosen instrument. There is no question about that in my mind.

DAY OF PENTECOST

Go back to the days of Peter, the Apostle, after Christ had left the disciples, and they had received the Holy Ghost. They stood before a great multitude of people on the Day of Pentecost and preached to them the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. The throng of people were so pricked in their hearts that they arose as one man and asked, ". . . Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Peter answered them and said,

... Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.

For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call. (Acts 2:37-39.)

Any child who attains the right age, who has faith and repents of his sins and is baptized for the remission of sin under the hands of authorized servants of God, can receive the gift of the Holy Ghost; and under the inspiration of that sweet spirit, he can bear his testimony. Did not the Christ declare:

But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me. (John 15:26.)

SPIRIT OF TESTIMONY

I recall a friend of mine who had a great sorrow to bear. He had sought solace in many places. Finally, one fast Sunday he said to his wife, "Let us go over to fast meeting." He hadn't been too active in the Church. In the fast meeting he saw many of the young people bearing their testimonies. The spirit of testimony took hold of him, and he stood up and bore his testimony. That same afternoon he asked another associate of mine if he could have some place in the activities of the Church, and he was called to serve. Today he is a loyal, devoted, and fruitful servant of our Heavenly Father.

Now, what about the young men who are being called into the armed forces of the nation? After all, we use this axiom: Old men for counsel and young men for battle. In the bloody struggle of war, it is youth who suffer. Their blood is spilt; their lives are sacrificed; and many are denied the blessings of having a companion and rearing a family. We owe much to these young men. First, we owe them encouragement. We owe to them letters in a constant stream to keep them encouraged, to keep their faith built up. Then, if death should come, because of their sweet, clean lives, they will regardless of what happens to them if death should come, because of their sweet, clean lives, they will be able to meet the great Judge who will extend his hand to them and give them that heavenly salvation: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

AARONIC PRIESTHOOD PROGRAM

The Aaronic Priesthood program of the Church is most vital. It is a training field for the young men of the Church. And what a grand and glorious thing it is to know that a boy at the tender age of twelve can receive divine authority from on high and become a servant of God. Whenever I think of these twelve-year-old boys, I always think of another one who lived nearly two thousand years ago—the boy Savior of the world, Jesus Christ. At the age of twelve we find him attending the Feast of the Passover with his parents in the city of Jerusalem, and in the course of events he found his way to the temple. There he was discussing the problems of the day with the great, the wise, and the learned. Later his mother missed him, and in looking for him, found him in the temple. In effect, she said to him, "Do you not know that you have caused your father and me a good deal of sorrow and grief?" Then he gave her that memorable answer, "... wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" (Luke 2:49.) That should be the slogan of the Aaronic Priesthood, in which every boy at the age of twelve commences his ministry in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The Aaronic Priesthood affords opportunities that young boys cannot afford to miss, if they will take advantage of them; just as Paul said to Timothy,

Let no man despise thy youth; but be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity. (1 Timothy 4:12.)

AUXILIARY ORGANIZATIONS

Then, too, we have the great auxiliary organizations of the Church. We have the Sunday School which provides lessons covering the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ; we have the Young Men's Mutual Improvement Association and the Young Women's Mutual Improvement Association. We have our seminaries and institutes. We have our great welfare program, too, which should play a pertinent part in training our youth to be thrifty, ambitious, and willing to sustain themselves by the sweat of their brows and the toil of their hands. The Primary Association of the Church makes a great contribution in the spiritual, vocational, and recreational training of our children. It is the Primary that takes the child at a tender age and guides his footsteps in the paths of prayer and faith; and it teaches him how to use his hands effectively. The Primary Association is closely related to the young men who become holders of the Aaronic Priesthood, as it provides a preparatory course for all young men of the Church who anticipate receiving the Aaronic Priesthood. May I say, emphatically, the Primary Association has been one of the great factors in giving young men a vision of their responsibilities in the future. May God always bless and sustain the fine sisters who have been and who are carrying on this splendid work.

BOY SCOUT PROGRAM

Another great and very important project of which little is said is that of the Boy Scout program. I want to say to you, as the vocational and recreational program of the Church for the Aaronic Priesthood, there is nothing finer than scouting. I say this because I have three sons, two of them are Eagle Scouts, and the other one a Life Scout. As I have observed their work in scouting, to me it has been almost comparable to a college education. Many times there are those of us who feel scouting is strictly a recreational program, but that is only a part of it. We are faced today with a big problem in knowing what to do with the leisure time of our boys, especially during the vacation period. The scouting program will take up all of this leisure time, provided we encourage our boys to participate in it.

About a year ago a Scout was sent to me for an oral examination covering the project of producing beef. I asked many questions of the scout pertaining to the production of beef, and I was quite surprised when he answered every one of them correctly. With the knowledge he has accumulated through the merit badge project in scouting, he will be able to go forward in the beef industry on his own, although he is tender in years.

There are many other projects which can be most helpful to young men in working out their future vocations.

As a father of three sons, and all of them Scouts, if I were to choose someone to supervise their recreation, I would choose the scouters of my own ward, because I know they would be in good hands and nothing would happen that would be detrimental to their character.

Where we have the right kind of Aaronic Priesthood work, we will have the great scouting program supplementing it; and where there is good scouting, there is good Aaronic Priesthood work. I plead with you to support the Boy Scouts.

MISSIONARIES

I haven't forgotten the 5800 young men and young women out in the world, meeting people far beyond them in age and experience. With the sword of truth in their hands for defense and offense, they are convincing men they have a great message, and as a result thousands of people are accepting the gospel of Jesus Christ in this nation and all over the world.

SUPPORT OF YOUTH

So, we plead for your support, for your help in encouraging the youth of the Church to participate in the great Church youth program, with the aim that they may be prepared when the time comes to take over the responsibilities that we older people now have. Returning to Paul's admonition to Timothy, "Let no man despise thy youth; but be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity." Impress every young man with his responsibilities and obligations in the priesthood, that when temptation crosses his path, he may remember the answer of the boy Savior in the temple when he said, "... wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" This I humbly pray, will be the blessing of every young man and every young woman in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Amen.

ELDER MATTHEW COWLEY

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I am indeed grateful this morning, my brothers and sisters, for the counsel which we have received. I am grateful for the counsel we have received which has come from the President whom we sustain as a prophet, as the mouthpiece of God to his children here on earth. I endorse his timely counsel with respect to our conduct in the coming political campaigns and the keeping of our tempers. I am reminded of a story that was told of Senator Chauncey Depew when he was launching into a campaign for the Senate of the United States. His opponent came to him and said, "Senator, let's make this campaign clean."

The Senator replied, "I fully agree. If you will promise not to lie about me, I'll promise not to tell the truth about you." How clean the campaign was, I am unable to say.

NEVER LOSE A FRIEND

When I was a youngster employed in the Senate of the United States, there came into the office one day a former governor of this state. While we were visiting, he said, "I'd like to give you a little advice."

I said, "That's fine, I appreciate advice from one of your experience."

He said, "Never lose a friend over politics or religion."

I have tried to keep that counsel in my mind all my life. I was in politics a little bit at one time, for which I have since repented. I was successful in one election. I was defeated in another. But I am very thankful that I can say today that I still have the friendship of my opponents. I cherish their friendship. I respect the principles for which they stood, and I am sure they respect me in the same light.

Brothers and sisters, we are children of God, we are Saints of the Most High God. There is no place in this kingdom upon the earth for God's children to make enemies, one with the other, both professing to be members of the Church, over politics or religion.

BLESSINGS OF GATHERING

I am reminded now of the opening prayer. In that prayer we thanked God that he had sought us out from far and near places to gather here. How thankful we should be that we have been sought out to gather where we are. And as I stand here this morning, I see two in this congregation who have come all the way from New Zealand, two good Maori Latter-day Saints who have come to receive the blessings in the temple of God. These are the only two who have had the opportunity to come from New Zealand during the past thirteen years. There are thousands of us living in the shadows of the temples of God upon whom there is no financial burden to go to these temples. How I thrill this morning when I see this grand couple who have saved and saved and prayed and prayed that they might one day come to the temple of God and receive their blessings. They have come eight thousand miles to spend a few days with us and to return back home. I trust that they have listened to the admonition which has been given all of us this morning, to keep the covenants which we have made with our God, to remember the blessings which are theirs if they remain faithful to the end.

I see also our good Hawaiian sister, Sister Kauhini, the president of the Relief Society of the Oahu Stake. I see also some of our Japanese and some of our Indian friends. Yes, I thank God that we have been sought out from places far and near to gather here. After this conference I am going among the Indian people of the Southwest Indian Mission. Brothers and sisters, they are our people. The salvation of these people rests upon us. The rewards to which they are entitled must come through us and the service we are willing to render to them and for them.

LOVE FOR NATIVE RACES

I love these native races. They have given me something that I could have received from no other source. Even though some classify them as heathen, yet I have never seen the veil between God and man so thin as I have seen among these native races. God has restored his gospel for all people. We have had eleven thousand missionaries in the field since 1946, going to all parts of the world where they are permitted to go. As has been mentioned, they are young, unexperienced men and women. But whether in New Zealand or in Hawaii or among the Indians of this nation or wherever they may go in the world, God magnifies his priesthood, and his priesthood speaks as having authority, and the people give listening ears.

Sometimes they are warned, the people of the world, to beware of these Mormon missionaries; and they are referred to the prophecy that one day false prophets would come among them. God never fulfils his purposes through false prophets. It is only through true prophets that he fulfils his purposes among men. It is a matter of historical record that God said he would scatter Israel. It is a matter of historical record that he said he would gather Israel from the four corners of the earth. And this congregation today is a witness to the world that it is a matter of historical fact that through the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, God is gathering Israel.

PROPHECIES FULFILLED

God said that in the last days the house of the Lord would be established in the tops of the mountains, and exalted above the hills, and all nations would flow unto it. It is a matter of historical record that he uttered that prophecy through one of his prophets. It is a matter of historical fact that the mountain of the Lord's house has been established in the tops of the mountains, and all nations have been flowing into it. It is a matter of historical fact that the stick of Judah has been written and is in the hand of God as one of his mediums of bringing salvation to his children. It is a matter of historical record that there was also to be a stick of Joseph, and that these two should be one in the hand of God. It is a matter of historical fact that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is now distributing this record, this stick of Joseph along with this stick of Judah to the thousands and thousands of those to whom the missionaries are going with their testimonies of the restoration of the gospel. It is a matter of historical record that God was to send Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord to turn the hearts of the children to the fathers and the hearts of the fathers to the children, lest the earth be smitten with a curse. It is a matter of historical fact that in this dispensation Elijah has returned to the earth, for the hearts of the children have been turned to their parents and those of the parents to the children. We know to whom that prophet came. It is a matter of historical record that God said through his Apostle that another angel would fly through the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach to those who dwell upon the earth. To the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints it is a matter of historical fact that that angel has flown through the midst of heaven, and the everlasting gospel has been restored to the earth. It was said by the Master that this gospel of the kingdom should be preached as a witness to all nations, and then should the end come. It is a matter of historical record and fact that there are right now 5,840 missionaries representing the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints out in the world, bearing witness to the restoration of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

GOD'S KINGDOM ESTABLISHED

Brothers and sisters, what more do we need other than the testimony of these historical facts to confirm the fulfilment of God's prophecies as prophesied by his servants? And we know as explained by Daniel that God would set up a kingdom in the last days. We know the story of the image which was seen by Nebuchadnezzar in a dream and the interpretation by Daniel under the power of God of that dream. We know that those kingdoms and empires symbolized by the head, shoulders, and breast, the belly and thighs, and the legs, all passed away, and that during the existence of none of those kingdoms did God set up his kingdom never to be destroyed. But in the days of the kings symbolized by the toes, God did establish his kingdom in the earth, and it will never be destroyed.

LOYALTY TO PRIESTHOOD

The priesthood of God is among men. Let us who hold it be faithful and loyal to this priesthood. We represent God, brethren. God must work through you to fulfil his prophecies; therefore, prize your priesthood, be loyal to it, be humble before God, and you will accomplish his purposes in the building up of his kingdom, and this work shall go forth into all the world and will reach out and will touch those who are to be brought out, two of a family and one of a city, and gathered to Zion.

I repeat, I thank God that we have been sought out from far and distant places to gather here. I thank God for the young missionaries who many years ago found my ancestors on the Isle of Man and brought them out, and they came in poverty and found their way to Nauvoo. They met the Prophet. One of these young lads was almost to be attacked and destroyed by a mob as he was lifting water from the Mississippi River, but his life was spared as it had been prophesied it would be. Yes, I thank God with all my heart that we have been gathered out from the world, and I thank God that these people, these islanders, and these Indians are responding to this message, and that once in a great while, these people in their poverty find a way to get to Zion and go into the temple of God.

THANKSGIVING FOR NATIVES

I offer up my thanksgiving to my Father in heaven for these natives who are here today. My, how much I owe to them! I remember during the war years that this fine couple were both in the military service of their country. And after the service was completed, as we had no missionaries in New Zealand, they both responded to mission calls. One day as I was going to visit them in the city of Rotorua, I discovered that they had built a beautiful new house. As I went into that home, I noticed that over the door there was a beautiful little printed sign with the name on it, Matthew Cowley. That was to be my house whenever I was visiting in that area of the mission. And when my family and I left New Zealand, it wasn't enough that we had lived in their home, they took the blankets from the beds on which we had slept and insisted that we bring those blankets back home with us.

Are these people, brothers and sisters, these islanders of the sea, these Indians of the reservation, worthy of the blessings of the gospel of Jesus Christ? Yes, a thousand times, yes!

God bless us all. May we be faithful and devoted to this cause, obedient to the principles of the gospel, sustaining one another in our respective positions, honoring each other in our homes, preserving the integrity of our families, the integrity of our priesthood quorums, and of all the auxiliaries, that God may continue to be and abide with us. This I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

We have been speaking of a good many things this morning. I have been looking around, and another one who has passed away since our last conference is Elder Frank Evans, one of the most faithful and devoted workers the Church has had, and his wife is equally faithful and helpful in doing things for the Church. I can hardly refer to the passing of these men and women who have worked so close to us in the office. I hope and pray that we will all remember these good women who are left when their husbands go, and not forget them.

Another thing while I am on my feet, I want to call attention to the fact that several references have been made to our keeping the commandments of the Lord in order to obtain our blessings. I would like to refer to the 130th Section of the Doctrine and Covenants with reference to that principle:

"Whatever principle of intelligence we attain unto in this life, it will rise with us in the resurrection. And if a person gains more knowledge and intelligence in this life through his diligence and obedience than another, he will have so much the advantage in the world to come.

"There is a law, [this is what I particularly want to emphasize] irrevocably decreed in heaven before the foundations of this world, upon which all blessings are predicated—

And when we obtain any blessing from God, it is by obedience to that law upon which it is predicated."

Now brethren, we have had our attention called to the fact that we have many blessings that other people do not enjoy. We are members of the Church of Jesus Christ, but our blessings will be the result of our obedience to the laws governing those blessings, so let us continue to set an example among our fellows.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers will now sing "My Soul Is Athirst For God."

The closing prayer will be offered by President Arvell L. Child of the Nyssa Stake, Oregon, after which this Conference will stand adjourned until 2:00 o'clock this afternoon.

The proceedings of that session will be broadcast over Station KSL, Salt Lake City, and by arrangement through KSL, over the other stations named at the beginning of the session. The Conference will also be broadcast over the television station of KSL, channel five.

Important messages and calls coming to us for persons supposed to be in attendance at the Conference will be announced at the dismissal of the meeting over the loud speaking system on the grounds.

The choir music for this session has been furnished by the Combined Chorus of Singing Mothers from the Cache Region and Salt Lake City Stakes, with Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen conducting, and Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ.

Haven't we had a good time? Hasn't the Lord kept his part of the agreement, that when a few meet together in his name he will be there and that to bless them? He has been here.

The Singing Mothers will now sing to us, after which Brother Child will offer the benediction.

Singing by the choir "My Soul Is Athirst For God."

Closing prayer was offered by President Arvell L. Child of the Nyssa Stake.

Conference adjourned until 2 o'clock p.m.

FIRST DAY

AFTERNOON MEETING

Friday, September 29.

The second session of the Conference convened at 2:00 p.m.

President George Albert Smith presided, and at President Smith's request, President J. Reuben Clark, Jr., First Counselor in the First Presidency, conducted the services.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

This is the second session of the One Hundred Twenty-first Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City, Utah.

President George Albert Smith is present and presiding and has asked J. Reuben Clark, Jr., one of his counselors, to conduct the services.

These services, and all general sessions of the Conference, will be broadcast in the Assembly Hall and in Barratt Hall (60 North Main) over a loud speaking system and by television.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over Station KSL of Salt Lake City, and by arrangement through KSL, over the stations named in the first session of the Conference.

This session will also be televised over the KSL television station, channel five.

The choir singing for this session will be by the Combined Chorus of Singing Mothers from the Cache Region and Salt Lake City Stakes, Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen conducting and Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ.

We will begin the services by the Relief Society Singing Mothers rendering: "Hear My Prayer."

The opening prayer will be offered by President G. Carlos Smith, of the Big Cottonwood Stake, Utah.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers sang "Hear My Prayer."

The opening prayer was offered by President G. Carlos Smith, of the Big Cottonwood Stake.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers then sang "How Lovely Are Thy Dwellings."

ELDER CLIFFORD E. YOUNG

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

Our testimonies have indeed been strengthened so far in this conference, and I share with you in gratitude to our Heavenly Father for his goodness, for the manifestations of his Spirit, and above all I am grateful for the Church, for the testimony of its truth, and for the fellowship with you, my brethren and sisters.

MORMON CHURCH A CHALLENGE

Some weeks ago I was handed a clipping taken from a Los Angeles paper in which appeared a report of some remarks made over the radio by one of the distinguished clergymen of Los Angeles. His broadcasts are in the nature of a questionnaire, and one of the questions submitted to him was this: "There are said to be more Latter-day Saints in Los Angeles and its environs than there are in Salt Lake City. Do you not regard this as a threat?" Dr. Fifield, in answering the question said,

No, I do not consider this a threat. I consider it a challenge. The Protestant churches, I think, have much to learn from the Mormon Church. There is no church in the world that does so much for its young people as the Mormon Church. I personally know most of the dignitaries of the Mormon Church. I visit in Salt Lake City frequently, and I know of no finer or more high-minded people anywhere. They live the cleanest and most temperate lives of any religious sect that I know of. Their people support their church generously with their tithing system, and the church in turn supports its people and provides a way for their social care so that none of them is on any public relief roll.

As I read that, I wished that were true. The possibilities of it are like the possibilities in the Church for all things that are in harmony with the mind and will of God. But sometimes some of us do not always conform. If all the Latter-day Saints conformed to the counsels of the Church, this would be verily true. But we do have within the Church this possibility. It isn't a dream. It's a reality, if we will. And then he goes on.

Of course, I do not accept the story of the finding of the golden plates and the translation thereof of the Book of Mormon in the manner related, but I do think that as a religious organization, holding its people to a high level of culture and education and social progress, the Mormon Church has no parallel in our time. No, I do not think the Mormon Church is any threat to other churches. I think it is a challenge to them to do better work with their members and their converts.

PRESIDENT CLARK'S BOOK

As I read that, I recalled a very constructive criticism of President Clark's book, On the Way to Immortality and Eternal Life. A brief review of that book appeared in the Unitarian Christian Register in the April number of this year. This is a magazine that is 124 years old, a magazine that carries each month criticisms and reviews of the leading theological, religious, and philosophical books as they are published from time to time. Outstanding works they are, and it was certainly in keeping with the dignity and the scholarly atmosphere of Brother Clark's book to have this criticism appear in this magazine. In the final statement, and that is the point I wish to emphasize, the critic says this: "It is an excellent introduction to the contemporary position of one of the most influential religions on the American scene." Now, of course, we all like to hear nice things about our Church, but the thing that we are interested in, my brothers and sisters, is this: Are we worthy of this trust—this pedestal on which we are placed—as set forth in these statements? That is the challenge for us. Are we meeting this challenge? Do we in very deed in our living represent the Church and kingdom of God? On one occasion the Savior, as he was speaking to his disciples and telling them of the events that should come to pass in the last day, after making certain predictions and promises, said, "And this gospel of the kingdom," and that was quoted here this morning, "shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all the nations; and then shall the end come." (Matt. 24:14.)

WITNESSES OF THE TRUTH

On the Sabbath day, as we partake of the sacrament, we witness unto the Lord Jesus Christ that we will keep his commandments, that we will live in harmony with his will. And so I repeat, we have this challenge. Are we witnessing the truth to the world? We can only witness it as we live in harmony with those concepts that have been revealed by our Heavenly Father. Lip service is not the service that is required in this Church. It is a constant daily service to our fellow men. I alluded to it a minute ago with reference to people being on relief. We have a challenge there to see to it that those of our people who are in distress shall not be neglected but shall be provided for, and if we fail to measure up to that challenge, and that is the reason why we have people on public relief, we are failing in our responsibilities as leaders and members of the Church. The Lord has pointed the way. We should walk therein. We know the way, but it is in our neglect and in our failure to live up to that which we know to be true, that we fail to witness that we are keeping his commandments, that we are a witness of the truth. This applies not only in this but in other walks of life also. We are told in James 1:27,

Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world.

CONSTANT SERVICE REQUIRED

In our community recently, we had a very serious tragedy. One of the young men of our city, a very promising young man, met with a tragic death. The community responded in love and sympathy to the family; and when the funeral service was held, it proved to be one of the largest attended in a long time. One couldn't help feeling the love and the sympathy there manifested. But the next day, then what? And the days to follow. These are the things that should give us concern. It isn't just a spasmodic move or a gesture, but it's a constant service that is required of us as Latter-day Saints in all we do, in our various walks of life. Therein our religion can be exemplified as we each day experience problems such as this.

Now, I do not regard this as difficult. I believe we can do it. I believe the Lord is cognizant of our weaknesses sufficiently to overlook them, and to make it possible, in spite of those weaknesses, for us to carry out to the world that we do have a living, vital religion, that we have something that the people can live and exemplify in their lives. Otherwise the gospel would not mean to us what it does. I repeat again, it isn't a lip service. It is one that presents a constant challenge of daily labor, laboring for good, for the establishment of truth, for the amelioration of suffering. We'll never have peace in the world in any other way. It will come only if we translate into our lives these divine concepts and these truths.

I pray, that the Lord will give us strength and power to do this, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

ELDER OSCAR A. KIRKHAM

Of the First Council of the Seventy

I pray that I may enjoy the blessings of the Spirit of the Lord. I thank him for my membership in this Church. I wish I had the power and the ability to make that expression of appreciation more real, that it might be not only more helpful to me but also to those with whom I associate.

MUCH GIVEN AND EXPECTED

Much has been given to us. Much is expected of us. I sincerely feel that there never was a time when greater opportunities faced our Church. I know that every year, every score of years, brings to that group and that generation like feelings, but truly great things are now being wrought in the world, and great opportunities now face us. Nations fear each other. There is much that is being done, but we have a task that challenges truly the best that is within us, me in my home, you in yours, all of us wherever we may be.

These lines from John:

He that hath received his testimony has set to his seal that God is true.
(John 3:33.)

BAPTISM OF KARL G. MAESER

I want to refer to the baptism of Karl G. Maeser, one of the great spirits of our Church, one of the great leaders of the Brigham Young University. Just after his baptism in Germany, he said these words:

On coming out of the water, I lifted both my hands to heaven and said, "Father, if what I have done just now is pleasing unto thee, give me a testimony, and whatever thou shouldst require of my hands, I shall do, even to the laying down of my life for this cause." (The Improvement Era 3:25.)

Soon after this covenant with the Lord, he and President Franklin D. Richards of the European Mission received the answer to this promise to the Lord, for while neither one of them could speak the language of the other, that is, Brother Richards could not speak German, Karl G. Maeser could not understand English, yet the Lord gave them the gift of tongues and of understanding. The promise was fulfilled at once. You know, hundreds of you in this audience today, that the Lord continued his blessings with Karl G. Maeser, for numbered among his pupils were George Sutherland of the Supreme Court of the United States, Reed Smoot of the United States Senate, William H. King of the United States Senate, and many, many others. I feel in like fashion we have also in our hearts with all good intent made a like promise to the Lord. And again I repeat, this is our opportunity to prove to the Lord that promise.

GLORY OF THE GOSPEL

At one of our recent conferences in one of the stakes, we asked a young lady to tell of her experience at a national convention. She had received lovely honors. She told the story in some detail of what had happened at the convention, but then as the detail of it got wearisome to her, she took hold of the stand and seemed to rise several inches higher as she said, "I want to bear my testimony. That is what is on my heart." Then this youth in all her glory expressed what her testimony meant to her.

Years have been somewhat many in my life. I'm easily up to the top of the crest, but I challenge myself with you, the great majority of this audience, if we do not take the opportunity that is ours to serve him and courageously do his will, he will bring forward a generation that will keep his commandments and prove the glory of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

SPIRIT OF AMERICAN YOUTH

I listened to a talented pressman a few days ago who had just returned from Korea. He said the question was often asked of the soldiers up in the front lines what they were fighting for. He told only one simple incident. He said they know. Down the highway when thousands of Koreans were evacuating a city, there came a young fellow in a jeep. In the crowd that was hurrying on in confusion was an old lady bent with age, a large bundle on her back. The jeep stopped, the GI boy threw the bundle in, then lifted the old lady into the seat. Down the road they went to safety. Well, the pressman made quite a bit of that simple incident, and I believe that I caught the spirit of it. Surely the American youth know what they are fighting for. God bless them with courage when they return home, that they will take their place and do their best. May the destiny that is theirs to have and enjoy be with them.

SERVICE OF MISSIONARIES

A like spirit has gone out with 5800 young men and women into different parts of the world. One simple, yet to me a glorious, experience was enjoyed last month in the East Central States Mission. As is our custom, we meet with all the missionaries as we go through a mission. Their testimonies are truly inspiring. We are thrilled as we listen to them. I seldom leave a meeting but what I have to hold back my tears of pride and joy for the youth of this Church. I received a lovely reflection of their service in one experience. A brother came to me after the dedication of one of the little chapels in the mission and said, "Brother Kirkham, I have been in the Church now for about nineteen years, and I am extremely grateful for what God has given us. The light and the truth of the gospel has truly enriched my life. Let me tell you how it happened."

He said: "I had a young missionary come to my home. I used to drink a cocktail occasionally. I smoked freely; but the young chap, clean, sweet in his nature, and in his appearance so delightful, came to our place and told us that he had something for us. I called Mother in, and we sat and listened. This continued for several evenings, until one night when we were quite free in our conversation and felt we knew each other quite well, I took the liberty of rolling a cigaret. And the young man said: 'I suppose it's time that I told you about another great principle of the Latter-day Saints.' He said, 'I want to read you what we call the Word of Wisdom,' and he started to read to me. I had taken the cigaret out of my mouth and, as this young chap read this Word of Wisdom, something happened to me. I found myself trying to crush that thing in my fingers. I felt the fire once but held my nerve and kept crushing it, and I said, as now I say to you, Brother Kirkham, he spoke the truth. This boy brought me a message from God and cleared up my life."

ACCEPT OPPORTUNITIES

Well, these opportunities are also ours. Just over the fence from where we live is someone waiting to hear us speak the word. Consider the way we accept our opportunities in citizenship. Yes, I appeal to every Latter-day Saint: Vote—it's one of the high privileges of your American citizenship. Bear your testimony every opportunity that comes to you. "Stand up and be counted with the Lord."

God bless us and help us that these great hours may to us be great realities and opportunities. May it be said of us, "Much was given to you; much was expected; and you did your part." God bless us and be with us that we may make of our glorious religion a reality. In the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOHN A. WIDTSOE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I confess, my brethren and sisters, that the call to occupy this position this afternoon is somewhat unexpected. I am to give the Church of the Air sermon next Sunday morning. It was intimated that because of that appointment I would not be asked to speak from this stand. So I have no special message in my heart. I suppose I'll have to depend upon the Lord. That is good practice for Latter-day Saints.

I am always happy to bear my testimony to my brethren and sisters that this is the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. I rejoice in it; I know it to be true. The truth of it has lightened my life and has given happiness to me and to my family. That I can say always to my brethren and my sisters.

YEAR OF ANNIVERSARIES

This has been a year of anniversaries. A short time ago, within the last few weeks, the President of the Church went to Hawaii to celebrate the coming of the gospel to those islands one hundred years ago. You have read of what happened there. He mentioned it briefly himself this morning in his address.

It is also a hundred years ago since the gospel was brought to the foreign-speaking lands of Europe. Up to that time we had only once attempted to preach the gospel in foreign tongues, namely in the South Sea Islands. But a hundred years ago the missionaries sent out by the First Presidency of that day entered the Scandinavian and other countries of Europe and bore witness of the restoration of the gospel of our Lord, Jesus Christ. They made notable progress at that time, a progress which has resulted in a large influx of men and women, faithful men and women, to the valleys of the mountains here.

SCANDINAVIAN CELEBRATION

It was my privilege to be sent to Scandinavia a few months ago to take part in the celebration which the Saints of those countries were holding and enjoying, because of the great anniversary. I visited the three Scandinavian countries. I was given the privilege primarily, I suppose, because I am able to speak a little of the tongues of those countries. I visited Denmark, Sweden, and Norway, in addition to stopping briefly in England. I came back feeling thrilled with the manner in which the gospel had developed and spread from the humble beginnings of a hundred years ago in those countries. You know, of course, that here in these valleys, among the stakes and wards of Zion, the blood of those countries through intermarriage has spread until a large proportion of our people here carry some of that blood.

The brethren and sisters of the Scandinavian countries had planned large celebrations. I was able to attend fully the ones in Stockholm, Sweden, and in Oslo, Norway. They were carefully laid out after the pattern that had been planned for our celebration here at home and were splendidly rendered, fully as well as the celebration here at home. I missed the beginning of the celebration in Denmark because of my hurried call and trip, but later on I met with the Danes and enjoyed their company and partook of their spirit and learned of the excellence of their celebration.

GOSPEL CHANGES MEN

It was interesting to me to note how the gospel changes the very nature of men and women, and how faithful and devoted men and women may become to the cause of truth once it sinks into their hearts.

Norway is a long country, nearly a thousand miles long. Up in the icy north, we have two or three branches, one very recently established, and I was pleased to find in Oslo, which is nearly at the south end of the country, people who had come from the far north to celebrate and to thank the Lord for the coming of the gospel to their land. The same happened in Sweden; also in Denmark, which is a small country. All had a very large representation of their Church members in attendance at the celebrations. There was a spirit of faith and devotion like that we have here today. Many people had traveled hundreds of miles to sit by one another in meetings like this and to listen to discourses on the simple principles of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

It was interesting to note, also, how men grow and develop under the influence of the gospel spirit. Let a very humble man be touched by the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, and he becomes transformed. He is no more the same man, no longer the same person. He has changed completely. I am reminded of the statement of the Prophet Joseph Smith at one time, when talking about the children of Abraham; he said that any person who accepts the gospel of Jesus Christ becomes of the seed of Abraham. A subtle change occurs in the very physical system of the man, which makes him indeed one who belongs to the family of Abraham, the family of the faithful. This notable change I observed a good many times on this trip to Scandinavia this summer, that men are transformed for the better, their powers multiplied, their vision increased, their understanding and comprehension brought out in new forms so much more vigorously because of the gospel which they have received, because of the truths of the gospel. I am happy to bear this record to my brethren and sisters at this conference.

GREETINGS FROM EUROPEAN SAINTS

I am very happy also to bring you the greetings of the people, our brethren and sisters of the covenant, of the faraway missions in Europe. They send their greetings to you and their blessings also, and their blessings are quite worth while for they come from common sources. They love you, they watch you; they follow you; they try to emulate and to imitate that which you do here.

MEETING IN OSLO

Some years ago, I have forgotten just how many, I had the privilege to go to Oslo, the capital of Norway, with President David O. McKay and Elder Reed Smoot. The three of us came into the city rather late in the afternoon. I think two of us at least were unannounced. Perhaps Brother McKay was announced, the president then of the European Mission, I am not sure about that. But we made our way at once to the meeting place of the Latter-day Saints. I shall never forget that meeting. We were not expected by the members present. The meeting was composed of the people, the men and women, who had been called to labor as missionaries in the city of Oslo. It was a report meeting. One after another the people, young and old, got up and gave a report of what they had done. I recall one elderly lady who said that she hesitated to make her report, for it was such a poor report. She had only had time during the last month to bring the gospel to two hundred different homes. I thrilled as I thought of the faith of that woman, the strength of her faith; and how many of us fail to appreciate what we have received as she did appreciate it. Many go by day after day, having received the great gift of the eternal gospel, the greatest of all gifts, but forgetting to pay back to the Lord as he would like us to do a part of our time and strength and power to assist in the advancement of the great kingdom of God here upon this earth. I am sure that good sister received the gift of joy from her labors.

There is much I might tell you even after a brief trip to Scandinavia this summer about the conditions of the people. They are faithful Latter-day Saints, second to none in the wards of Zion. I just touched old London for a few days and found it the same wonderful old London, in the same condition as of the past. The people there, our people, are reported to be faithful and true to their covenants with the Lord, through their baptism into the Church.

WORLDWIDE MESSAGE

I would like to say, before I close this brief report, that I was greatly thrilled this morning as I heard Brother Cowley give his report, and added to that we have heard from Brother Kirkham a few moments ago. The message of the Church is not to the valleys of the mountains alone. It is not to be confined in these valleys surrounded by these everlasting hills. We have a worldwide message. Our army of missionaries, five thousand eight hundred strong as was reported this morning, implies our belief in the spread of the gospel over the whole earth. The Lord has said himself that every ear shall hear the gospel in these latter days. That means not only the ears of the people who are here in this beautiful, blessed land of America, but far beyond over the seas, on the islands, everywhere, the gospel has been preached and must continue to be taught. And we're doing this sacred work to the best of our ability. As we do that and continue to do it, the Lord will bless us and magnify us and make us powerful and strong, acceptable to him. Let us never forget the worldwide nature of our obligations before the Lord. Our missionary system must be cherished and be kept alive constantly and forever, until that last great day comes and the Lord says that the work is done.

WE HAVE THE TRUTH

My brethren and sisters, I bear you again my testimony that I know this to be the gospel of Jesus Christ. It is the truth. As Brigham Young used to say, "Men ask me what the gospel of Jesus Christ is, what name does it bear? And I say to you, its name might well be truth." We and the Church, if we are faithful, as we have been taught this morning by the President, the prophet of the Lord, shall conquer. We cannot fail. Truth is never defeated. It blesses all who possess it. We have the truth. If we will keep the truth and if we cherish it and practise it in our lives, then victory over error will be ours from the smallest household in Zion to the farthest outpost of Zion, wherever that may be. Thus through the restoration of the gospel in our day, the whole world shall be blessed.

May the Lord bless us and fill us with an understanding of this mighty work laid out for us in these latter days and make us able to do the Lord's work, which we can do if we are faithful, I pray in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER MARK E. PETERSEN

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I earnestly pray, my brothers and sisters, that while I stand here the Spirit of the Lord will be with me because indeed it is a frightening thing to stand before so many people, and I realize my great need of help.

PRESIDENT GEORGE F. RICHARDS

I have missed in this conference the genial presence of President George F. Richards. I would like you to know that I, as one of the members of his Council, was very, very grateful for the privilege of serving under his leadership. I regard him as a truly great man—a great soul—a great leader. I am sure that no one had a more firm faith in the Almighty than did President Richards. I am sure that he was an inspired man of God, and I would like to say to you that I, along with the other members of the Council, loved that man deeply; and today, together with the rest of you, I miss his presence here.

STORY OF A FRIEND

I would like to tell you a story about a friend of mine whom I shall call Bill, for the sake of anonymity. During Bill's last year at school, he met a lovely young woman named Helen. They became very good friends, and it wasn't very long until they began to talk about the possibility of their getting married.

During that same last year of school Bill fell in with a group of fellows who were known as the most popular group on the campus. They taught Bill some bad habits.

When Helen first saw Bill with a cigaret in his mouth, it nearly broke her heart. She talked with him and pleaded with him, but he felt that smoking cigarets was one of the things that went with the popularity of this group on the campus. So her pleadings brought no results. Helen began to wonder if she should stay with Bill or not, whether she should allow their courtship to end in marriage. She wanted to be married in the temple, and she knew that if Bill continued to smoke cigarets they would not get to the temple.

When graduation time came, Bill offered a formal proposal to Helen and asked her to set the date of their wedding. She thought it over long and seriously. She loved Bill a very great deal and did not like the idea of losing him. But neither did she like the idea of marrying a smoking man, one who could not take her into the temple where she had wanted to go.

After some days' consideration, Helen finally came to the conclusion that when school was out, Bill would be separated from this group of boys and that possibly, if she married him, under her influence he might leave off the bad habits which he had acquired and get back into activity in the Church. And then, probably within a year or so, they could go to the temple together; so she consented, and they were married by her bishop in her living room at home.

A year or so went by, and a lovely baby boy was born to them. They called him John. In due time another boy was born to them. They called him James, but he was soon known as Jim.

Bill loved his two boys, and every night after he came home from work, he would play with them and have just a grand time. He would hold them way above his head and laugh at them and talk to them, and they would laugh back. Then he would bring them down and hug them to him.

This show of affection made Helen very happy, but Bill played with them while he had a cigaret in his mouth, and when Helen saw those little baby hands reach out for that smoldering white thing between Bill's lips, her heart sank, and she began to wonder what that example might mean in the future lives of those boys.

Years went by. John became twenty years of age and was called on a mission. He was thrilled with the call and so was his mother. Bill—well, on the night of the farewell testimonial, Bill sat on the stand with his wife and son and he was just about as proud as any father could be, because John was really a remarkably fine young man.

About three weeks after John's departure for his mission, Bill was sitting one evening in front of the big, open fireplace in the living room reading the evening paper and smoking a cigaret. While he was doing so, in came Jim, a young man by this time. Jim said, "Hi, Dad."

Without looking up from his paper, Bill said, "Hello, Son. How are you?"

"I'm fine, Dad. I want to ask you a question."

"All right, Son, what is it?"

"What's the best brand of cigarets?"

Bill stiffened in his chair. For a moment it seemed as if he were frozen there. Then his hands relaxed, and the paper slipped from his fingers and fell to the floor. He flipped his cigaret over into the open fire and then stood up and faced his son.

He said, "Jim, you cannot start to smoke."

"But I have started already, and I want to know what is the best brand of cigarets?"

"Son, I am telling you," Bill said, "you cannot start to smoke."

"Well, why not, Dad? You've smoked as long as I can remember, and it hasn't hurt you any. I've watched you."

Those last words Jim spoke cut into Bill's heart. "I've watched you. I've watched you." Then Helen was right, Bill thought to himself. All these years Helen had told him that his cigaret habit—the example he was holding before his sons—would result like this, and he had never believed her. Now Helen was right. Here was Jim saying, "I've watched you. I've watched you."

Then Bill felt a consciousness of guilt, a note of self-accusation, and there were words going through his mind saying, "I taught him. I taught him. I taught him."

Bill shook himself and walked over to his son and took hold of both shoulders and looked him square in the eye and said, "Son, you say these cigarets didn't ever hurt me. And you say you've watched me. I want you to know that these cigarets have done me more harm than anything else in my life. Nothing has hurt me, nothing has handicapped me so much as these cigarets. Why, I'd give anything that I own if I had never started to use them, and I don't want to see the same handicaps come to you. Why, Jim, these cigarets have raised a barrier between me and happiness right here in my own home, and they have caused your mother many hours of weeping. I know that, and I don't want you to undertake a habit of this kind."

He talked so earnestly and so unusually that Jim at first thought that his Dad was putting on an act and told him so. Again Bill began to talk and plead with his son never to smoke again, to get rid of this habit that he had just begun.

Then Jim, realizing that his dad was really serious, said, "Well, Dad, if this cigaret habit is so bad, why haven't you quit?"

Bill said, "I've tried to quit. I've tried many times, but I have never been able to—the habit is too strong. I'm just like a slave to this cigaret and I don't want you to become a slave. Now, Son, cut it out."

Jim said, "Well, Dad, you see all the fellows I go with—they all smoke. They'll think I'm a sissy. I couldn't face those fellows and tell them I wasn't going to smoke any more. They are the most popular crowd I know."

Bill said, "Popular or not, stop this habit and if necessary get a new crowd. Find new friends who don't smoke, but let cigarets alone."

Jim said, "Well, I don't know whether I can do that or not. I'll have to think this over."

Then his dad said, "Jim, I'll make a bargain with you. If you'll quit smoking, I'll quit."

Jim, quick as a flash said, "Well, Dad, you just told me you couldn't quit. Are you trying to lead me along?"

Bill's answer to that was that he walked over to the fireplace, put his hand in his pocket, pulled out the package of cigarets and the folder of matches, and threw them into the open fireplace. Then he turned around and faced his son and said, "Son, I've quit. I'm all through. Now, will you do the same thing?"

"Well I don't know, Dad, I've got to think this over," Jim said. "I'll tell you in the morning."

That night Bill couldn't sleep. He rolled and tossed in bed as long as he could stand it and then got up and went into the living room and closed the door. He didn't turn on the lights. He just walked the floor there in the dark. Jim's words kept going through his head, "I've watched you. I've watched you," followed by his own sense of self-accusation, "I taught him. I taught him."

It had been a long time since Bill had said a prayer. He had left that pretty much with Helen. But this night he wanted more than anything else to have Jim quit smoking; so there in the darkness and the stillness of his home he slipped down on his knees and began to pray. He poured out his soul to the Lord and told him all of his faults and shortcomings, confessed all of his sins to the Lord—the first time he'd ever done that. Then he told the Lord about Jim and their conversation of the evening.

He didn't pray with much faith. The cigarets had pretty well weakened what faith he had, but he did pray from a sense of fear—fear for the future of that boy; and from a sense of love—love for a son for whom he would give his own life, if necessary. But it seemed like asking a great deal of the Lord to erase in one night an example which he had held before his son ever since that son was a tiny baby.

At last morning came. Bill slowly climbed the stairs up to Jim's room and went in and sat down on the edge of the bed. He put one hand on Jim's shoulder. Jim turned over, and Bill said, "Son, what's your answer?"

Jim looked up into his dad's tired face and sleepless eyes and said, "Dad, I surely don't want to hurt your feelings, but the fellows—I couldn't face them. I guess I won't quit. I'll wait awhile."

Deeply disappointed but without saying another word, Bill got up and walked slowly out of the room. He felt like he had been whipped. But he was more than ever determined to keep his own resolution. He would never go back to his cigarets.

The next Sunday he went to Church, the first time in years. He went again the next Sunday and the next, and he continued to go and enjoyed it.

About a year afterwards the bishop came to him one day and said, "Bill, how would you like to be ordained an elder?"

A lump came into Bill's throat, and his eyes filled with tears as he took hold of the bishop's hand and said, "Bishop, do you mean that at last I can take Helen to the temple?"

The bishop squeezed his hand and said, "Yes, Bill, at last you can take Helen to the temple."

Another year went by, and John came home from his mission. One day when John and his father were alone together, John went over and put his arm around his dad and said, "Dad, I want you to know how deeply grateful I am to you for the wonderful thing you have done. You know, as a boy I always used to think that my dad was just about perfect, and I guess every boy thinks that his dad is the greatest man in the world. But every time you took a cigaret, it hurt me deep inside. I knew you had a weakness you couldn't control. But now, Dad, all that is over, and I want you to know how grateful I am to you."

But what about Jim? Well, Jim is married now and has a little boy of his own, and he comes home at night and plays with this boy just as Bill used to play with Jim. And when Jim gets his own little son up in his arms, that little baby, just as his father did, reaches out for that smoldering white thing between his dad's lips.

The other day I rode home on the bus with Bill, and he was telling me how happy he is in his new life. And then he told me about Jim, and said that if nearly twenty years of a bad example would put Jim where he now is, possibly another twenty years of a good example might bring him back to where he ought to be. And I thought, "God bless you, Bill."

And God bless all other men like him in the wonderful struggle they are making for the right.

And God bless Jim and all other boys like him that they may recognize tobacco for what it is—a narcotic which enslaves human beings and helps to destroy their faith in God. This is my prayer, in Jesus' name. Amen.

ELDER FRANCIS A. CHILD

Formerly President of the Western States Mission

My dear brethren and sisters, Brother Clifford Young said that it is a challenge to any man to stand before this audience. I bear my humble testimony that to a Child it's more than that.

Sister Child and I are very appreciative and thankful for the call we received to preside over one of the great missions of the Church. We arrived in Denver in December of '45 to take charge of the Western States Mission. You remember that that was following the war and we had, to begin with, just nineteen missionaries. They were pretty well scattered over that vast area, but we felt that the Lord would bless us if we would apply ourselves to the work. We asked the Lord to bless our labors, but we can't expect him to bless our labors unless we labor. We appreciated this call very much, first because it brought us under closer supervision and in close contact with the Presidency of the Church whom we love very dearly and, with them the Quorum of the Twelve and the other General Authorities of the Church. They have been so considerate and so kind personally and have given so much attention to the mission where we labored, that we feel very grateful to them.

We have a very happy memory of our tours of the mission, first with Milton R. Hunter, and then with Elder Harold B. Lee, with President Antoine R. Ivins and Sister Ivins, and with Thomas E. McKay, as Assistant to the twelve, and Sister McKay. These were all very wonderful experiences. To travel day after day and to hold conference every night with these men and women who are inspired of the Lord to do the work is an unusual experience and one you can't forget.

We had some wonderful missionaries come to us. We received the first missionaries from the war service. They came out of the Army, off the battleships, and out of the airplanes, and yet they were marvelous missionaries. They had received an experience that matured them and gave them qualities of leadership, and it was wonderful to know that they had been in those situations without losing the testimony which they had carried from their homes and from their wards. We received in the four years we were there 367 missionaries. Most of them were elders and considering the fact, as I said, that most of them had had service in the Army or the Navy, it was remarkable to know that not in one instance did we have occasion to criticize any missionary, any elder, for violation of the Word of Wisdom or for disregarding the standards of the Church. That speaks very highly for the training that they had received previous to their missionary experience.

I would like to thank the friends out in the mission field, I hope some of them are listening in, for the friendly assistance given to our missionaries. They were so kind and so considerate and so helpful. I am sure the Lord will recognize their work as a contribution to the great missionary service of the Church, and were Christ speaking, I'm sure he would say that in being kind to these my brethren and sisters, you were kind to me because they are my servants.

As I said before, we had only nineteen missionaries in the field when we went out, and then they began coming ten at a time, twelve at a time, fifteen at a time. We would hold a little conference with them, have a testimony meeting, and then assign them out. I assigned two elders together in a new city who had never had any experience in missionary work with senior companions to show them the way. That was a test period in the mission, but it's remarkable how the Lord sustained them.

One of our problems was to find accommodations in the homes of people where they could stay while they did their labors, but the Lord opened the way. Let me give you one example: We desired to send two sisters to LaJunta, Colorado where we were opening up the work. Two elders were sent there first and they tried to find some place in which the sisters could stay before they moved there. They couldn't find any place, but we told the sisters to go there and we were sure the Lord would provide a place for them; not to be discouraged, but to go there and put an advertisement in the paper. They did that and on reaching LaJunta they put a small ad in the paper which read "Room desired in a home with cooking privileges, for two young women who do not smoke and do not drink and do not entertain." The paper came out at 5:00 o'clock and at 8:00 o'clock they had three or four offers. The ad ran three days and at the end of three days, they had seventeen places to choose from. One good old couple said, "Yes, we have a place in our home for young women like that. The last ones we had stay at our home burned us out. Yes, if there are any young people that do not smoke, if there are any young women that do not drink and do not entertain, we would like to have them in our home." And so by using that advertisement, holding up our standards, places were provided in every city to which missionaries were assigned without any difficulty.

I wish to thank the parents of those wonderful young men and young women who came to us. They were remarkable—some had their weaknesses that they had to overcome, but they were great missionaries.

It is a remarkable experience to be a mission president. I think no greater blessing can come to any man in the Church, and no greater blessing can come to a sister than to be along with her husband in that presiding position. We watched them come, new, inexperienced, bashful, and backward, timid, and just as tense as they could be. They were uncertain of their testimonies, but they were willing. They accepted their assignment, sometimes in a difficult part of the mission. And they applied themselves and as they applied themselves, they prayed to our Heavenly Father and he blessed them. We watched them grow and then we watched them when they were released. They had gained spiritual stature. They had become strong in their testimony. They were self-reliant. They could stand on their feet and declare their faith and uphold the standards of the Church. I know those young men and young women would all, if they had the opportunity, stand up and say, honestly, that the two years or so spent in the mission field were the most wonderful two years of their lives. And I think they will continue to say that as long as they live.

A gentleman attended one of our conferences who had been the president of a university, and after he had listened to the testimonies of the missionaries, especially the elders, he said it reminded him of when he was a young man and performed a mission. He said: "Since that time I have completed my schooling, I have held various positions as an educator, and finally was appointed and selected as a president of a university, and I want to tell you now that the experience that I received when I was a young man in the mission field did more for me in making me what I am than all the schooling I received that prepared me for my educational career."

You mothers and fathers, I would admonish you to prepare your children to accept a mission. I say prepare because I think it should start early in life. So often our missionaries in their first testimony express this thought: "I have prayed all my life that I would have this opportunity and now I sincerely pray to my Heavenly Father that I'll be a successful missionary." Start them out with the missionary spirit early. You couldn't do anything better for them. If you would give them the greatest heritage, the richest heritage, that could come to them, send them on a mission. If you would qualify them to meet the problems of life, send them on a mission. I am sure that what they receive there will be a blessing to them and will qualify them in their after years and throughout their lives.

May the Lord bless us all and keep us faithful through applying ourselves to the work which has been given to us for it's our work, given to us for a definite responsibility, and we accept that responsibility when we accept membership in the Church. May he help us to magnify ourselves in that service, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

ELDER GLENN G. SMITH

Formerly President of the Texas-Louisiana Mission

I can say amen, brothers and sisters, to all President Child has said regarding the missionaries and also of the fear that is in my heart in standing before such a magnificent congregation.

We, too, spent four years in the mission field in the Texas-Louisiana Mission, and, as all good missionaries say, "Ours was the best mission in the world. We learned to love those mild, gentle people and that wonderful Southland. We began to believe it truly the Garden of Eden. The hearts of the people were so big and generous we couldn't help but feel that part of this land must have been the Garden of Eden. And, as proof that it was, we read that Adam and Eve were driven out into the cold, and dreary world, and the prophet found his altar north of Texas. We were wonderfully blessed in being permitted to labor among the people of this great mission.

There were twelve missionaries when we arrived at Houston—no young Elders at all. The lady missionaries who were there labored in the office. There were some elderly brethren in the field. Also three couples. These missionaries did a wonderful work. One couple performed a most wonderful mission, baptizing thirty-seven converts into the Church. They also sold over six hundred copies of the Book of Mormon in two years.

When the young missionaries began to come, and there were no older ones for senior companions, how our hearts went out to them. I well remember one in particular saying to me, "President Smith, haven't we a senior companion?" I said, "No." "Well, what will we do?" "You will go out in the authority of the holy priesthood of Almighty God. You'll bear your testimony of the divinity of this great work and as you apply yourself, God will grant unto you wisdom, understanding, vision, and discernment. You will be able to meet the opposition in a sweet and humble way and you will be the means in God's hands in performing his work." I bear solemn testimony to you, my brothers and sisters, these young men and women went into the world with faith in their hearts and a determination to do the thing the Lord wanted done and they performed a most magnificent work.

The population of the mission so far as the Church was concerned was approximately 7700 at that time. Before we left it had climbed to almost 10,000. The missionaries have been successful in that area. With due respect to President J. Golden Kimball's statement, "that the Gospel must be true or the Elders would have ruined it long ago," I know each one of these fine missionaries knows the Gospel is true. These young men and young women, your sons and daughters, have strong and fervent testimonies of the divinity of the great work. I, too, like Brother Child, can say that the best thing you can do for your sons and your daughters is to plant deep in their hearts at a young age a desire to represent the General Authorities of this great Church and Jesus the Redeemer of mankind, in bringing souls to him. "For though they labor all the days of their lives and bring but one soul, how great will be their joy with that one soul in the kingdom of our Father."

In conclusion may I quote from Edgar A. Guest.

God grant me this: the right to come at night
Back to my loved ones, head erect and true;
Beaten and bruised and from a losing fight,
Let me be proud in what I've tried to do.

Let me come home defeated if I must,
But clean of hands, and honor unimpaired,
Still holding firmly to my children's trust,
Still worthy of the faith which they have shared.

God grant me this: what e'er the fates decree,
Or do I win or lose life's little game,
I still would keep my children proud of me,
Nor once regret that they must bear my name.

God bless us as Latter-day Saints. That we may all measure up in the eyes of our children, as we feel our parents have so nobly done before us, I pray, in Jesus' name, Amen.

ELDER E. WESLEY SMITH

Formerly President of the Hawaiian Mission

I sincerely trust and pray that I may enjoy the Spirit of the Lord which was so manifest during our sessions this morning and this afternoon. I will say "Hawaii Noka noi!" That is, there is no mission that goes beyond or exceeds Hawaii.

I have had the privilege of laboring among the true blood of Israel, through the loins of Joseph, through the two branches of the House of Israel—Ephraim and Manassa—a people whom the Lord loves—a people whom the Lord chastens and forgives because of their great faith.

Hawaii, during the past one hundred years, has been greatly blessed because of the faith of that wonderful people. The Lord has blessed them with a Temple, where they have the privilege of going into the House of the Lord. And they look upon that house with sacred feelings in their hearts. Would that you could have the privilege of attending one of the sessions in the Hawaiian Temple at Laie and witness there the sincerity and the honor they feel for the privilege which is theirs in going into that holy house.

I feel it within my heart that I am an Hawaiian. I was born in Hawaii. I made that statement once that I was an Hawaiian and one boy spoke out in that little meeting and said, "You don't look like it to me."

I said, "Son, why?"

And he said, "Because you haven't got the same color skin."

I said, "No, son, that's true. I haven't been blessed with that delicate, brown, lovely skin of the Hawaiian, but if you could see my heart, you could note that I am an Hawaiian."

I love that people because of their faith and their love and their respect for the General Authorities of this Church. When the President of the Church visited them, they honored and respected him, and they love him as their prophet. When they say their morning prayers and at night, they remember their prophet. They remember the General Authorities of the Church for they love them. And when the counsel goes out from the headquarters unto that wonderful people, they heed that counsel and they honor it.

The Lord said that they should become a white and delightful people. They are a delightful people and I feel, when they stand before God and their souls are presented before him you'll find that they are a white and delightful people. We are not judged by the clothes we wear, nor the skin that covers these bodies but God will judge us by the purity and the love and the sincerity that's in our hearts.

The mission of Hawaii has also produced a Stake. It stands well among the leaders of the Stakes of this great Church. They have produced many missionaries. During the past year and a half it has been my joy to present before the First Presidency ten names of Hawaiians for missionary work, and they honored these fine young people and all ten were assigned to labor in the Japanese Mission, in Japan. And they are doing good work. I would like to relate one little incident of Brother William Akau from Kawaihae, a fisherman boy, a boy who was out to sea fishing for a living. He was called on a mission. He said, "I'm not learned. I haven't had a college education, but I know that God lives and I know that Joseph Smith was a divine prophet of God." And so he hung his net upon a branch of a Kiawi tree and he went forth to preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ and become a fisherman of men. In bearing his testimony, he declared that he prayed sincerely and honestly that he might perform an honorable mission and when his work was completed in the land of Japan, that he could return to his little village at Kawaihae and there pick up his net on the Kiawi tree and go fishing again. Another stalwart boy had only been in the Church two years, married, and had a lovely baby. His mother was not a member of the Church and so I spoke to the mother first, about his going on a mission. He was a boy who was well provided with the necessities and comforts of life, and the mother said: "Yes, President Smith, it would be an honor unto us to have our son go on a mission." Then I spoke to his wife. She cried with joy, "What a grand blessing it would be for my husband to go on a mission."

"How would you get along?"

"Very well, with my baby to comfort me."

"Then I spoke to the boy, who had just purchased him a brand new 1948 Packard automobile, "Kimo, how would you like to accept a mission?"

"President Smith, I would appreciate the honor."

I said, "I have interviewed your mother and your wife; they feel as you do."

And so his name was presented to the First Presidency. He was called upon a mission. He went to Japan with his music. President Clissold reports to me that during the time of study when he could hear the other missionaries studying aloud, this good boy was off in the corner of the room playing his guitar. His first impression was to correct that and have him join the other missionaries in studying the language, but he said he felt perhaps that he was homesick. Then a day or two later again he was playing his music while the others were studying. President Clissold hesitated, then, to speak and the third time he said: "Well, perhaps I had better speak to him." But that morning he called on him to pray. In that little family group of missionaries, he got down upon his knees and he humbly prayed in the Japanese language. It was not a memorized prayer. President Clissold said it came from his heart, and he marveled. The next morning he was called upon to offer prayer for the food they were eating, and again in the language of the Japanese he prayed. He said, "How are you learning this language, Kimo?"

"Well he said, "You know I go off in a room with my guitar and while the other missionaries are talking one with another and explaining the principles of the language I listen. It goes in this ear, the music goes in that ear and it can't get out. And thus, I've learned the Japanese language."

I am proud of our missionaries in Japan. It seems to be easy for them to learn the language among that people.

And another thing they have taken into that land is kindness and sunshine, and love for the music of Hawaii. Through the war clouds over Japan and their defeat, and they were crushed, they could see no light, they could see no joy in life, the clouds were heavy over them; but when the Hawaiians arrived on the shores of Japan with their cheer, with their great love, and their music, the darkest of the clouds fled and light came through; their souls were touched with a new interest in life.

I attended a meeting on the island of Lanai, an island that stands out prominent in the history of Hawaii and the Church. Time will not permit to give you the story. At one time in Hawaii in 1858 when the missionaries were all called forth because of the Johnston Army trouble coming into Utah, a condition existed in Hawaii whereby the Church was practically destroyed. The Saints endeavored to buy the Island of Lanai. An unscrupulous man by the name of Walter M. Gibson, cheated the natives out of the land which was being purchased by the Church. The great grandfather of Elder Benson, Lorenzo Snow, Joseph F. Smith, W. W. Cluff, and Alma L. Smith were called to go back to Hawaii to reorganize the mission and establish again proper leadership. In later years the island was sold to the Hawaiian Pineapple Company. At the present time 3500 people live upon that island. We endeavored to establish a meeting place over there. We sent our missionaries to that island. A little over three years ago they gave us a six months probation period and we have built a meetinghouse, helped by the plantation, and we established a nice little branch where we put our elders to labor. In that length of time we had gained the respect of the Hawaiian Pineapple Company. They are very generous to us. We have a nice meeting house, a recreation hall free, and our light and water free. They furnished us paint that we might paint the building and maintain it. So we have taken a pride in our lot and we have nice flowers and a beautiful lawn which is a credit to the Church. In my last meeting on Lanai we had 145 present, Hawaiians, 43; Japanese, 31; Philipinos, 39; Chinese, 10; Koreans, 9; Portugese, 2; and our whites who were mainly missionaries, 11. To mingle with the peoples of Hawaii who associate together as one, and when you labor among them, they are no longer Japanese, Koreans' Philipinos, Hawaiians; they are children of God, brothers and sisters, who have that same feeling in their souls that we have who are assembled here in this holy house.

Much work is being done at the present time among the Philippino peoples and when you get to know them and understand them, you will find that they have the same sweet feelings in their hearts that the Hawaiians have. They are very generous in their natures. Over in Pahalla, the farthest place south on the big island of Hawaii, most of the people in that little branch are Philippinos, and when we held our little meeting there and bade them farewell and could see their eyes fill with tears and their cheeks moistened we felt to thank God that we had had the privilege and joy of associating with His children, though they have not had the privilege we have had.

At our farewell social and our meeting in the Temple, the land of my birth, (I was born in Laie), after the talk, Brother Kanahele, the first counselor in the presidency of the Temple, said, "President Smith, you have hurt our feelings."

I said, "What did I say? What did I do to hurt your feelings?"

He said, "You have been released and you are returning home."

He said, "This is your home and therefore you have hurt our feelings."

From then on I remembered that, and so, I, in our farewell meeting mentioned the fact that I was leaving the land of my birth and returning to my adopted land, and thus they seemed to be pleased.

We have listened to President Cowley's talk, his feelings toward Polynesia. Sister Smith and I know how he feels. Our hearts are out there in Hawaii. When I see our beloved sisters, Abbie and Kamaile, here, stalwart in the Church—I have known them for many years—how pleased I am that they are here with us.

Now, may the Lord bless us and may the Lord sustain us and give us courage to stand for the right and above all, that when we sustain the General Authorities of the Church by raising our hands, may we be sincere and honest in that privilege that is ours to sustain them, and when they give us counsel that might be contrary to a feeling that we have within our hearts, let's uphold them and sustain them, because they are inspired of God and they are prophets of the Lord. May the Lord sustain us and bless us in this and give us courage to do that which is right, is my humble prayer and I pray for it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

We have just listened to Elder E. Wesley Smith, former President of the Hawaiian Mission.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers will now sing "He That Keepeth Israel."

The closing prayer will be offered by President Edward S. Burgess, Alpine Stake, Utah, after which this Conference will stand adjourned until 10:00 o'clock tomorrow. The proceedings of that session will be broadcast over KSL of Salt Lake City, and by arrangement through KSL, over the stations named in the first session of the Conference, and will be televised over the KSL television station, channel five.

Tonight at seven o'clock here in the Tabernacle there will be a meeting of ward bishoprics and others as listed in the published announcement, under the direction of the Presiding Bishopric.

Important calls and messages coming to us for persons supposed to be in attendance at the Conference will be announced at the dismissal of this meeting over the loud speaking system on the grounds.

The Choir music for today has been furnished by the Combined Chorus of Singing Mothers from the Cache Region and Salt Lake City Stakes, under the direction of Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen, with Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ.

We ought not to close this meeting without expressing the gratitude which we have for the Singing Mothers and Sister Madsen, for the excellent music which they have furnished to us. There has been a spirit and soul in it that does not always attach to great choruses. May the Lord bless them always.

Singing by the Relief Society Singing Mothers: "He That Keepeth Israel."

Closing prayer was offered by President Edward S. Burgess of the Alpine Stake.

Conference adjourned until Saturday morning, September 30th, at 10:00 o'clock.

SECOND DAY

MORNING MEETING

The third session of the Conference convened at 10:00 a.m., Saturday, September 30.

President George Albert Smith was present and presided. President David O. McKay, Second Counselor in the First Presidency, at the request of President Smith, conducted these services.

The Deseret Stake Choir, under the leadership of Elder Ladd R. Cropper, furnished the choir music for this session. Elder Roy M. Darley, Assistant Tabernacle organist, was at the console.

President David O. McKay:

We are now ready to open the third session of the One Hundred Twenty-first Semi-Annual Conference of the Church. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City, Utah.

Presiding at this session is President George Albert Smith, President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and conducting, at President Smith's request, is David O. McKay, his second counselor.

These services and all general sessions of the Conference will be broadcast in the Assembly Hall and Barratt Hall over a loud speaking system and by television.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over station KSL, Salt Lake City, and by arrangement through KSL, over the stations named in the first session of the Conference. This session will also be televised over KSL television station, channel five.

The singing for this session will be furnished by the Deseret Stake Choir, Elder Ladd R. Cropper, director, and Elder Roy M. Darley at the organ.

We shall begin the services by the Deseret Stake Choir singing: "Come, Come Ye Saints," after which the opening prayer will be offered by President Reed H. Beckstead of the East Jordan Stake.

---

The Choir sang the hymn "Come, Come Ye Saints."

The opening prayer was offered by President Reed H. Beckstead of the East Jordan Stake.

The Choir then sang "Spirit of God."

ELDER ANTOINE R IVINS

Of the First Council of Seventy

My beloved brethren and sisters, as I stand before you this morning to add my testimony to those that have already been given you in this conference, I seek an interest in your faith and prayers. I pray that what I say may be prompted by the Spirit of God, that out of it may possibly come a word of encouragement for some of us; for my sole purpose, in ministering as I am called to do to the seventies and to the Church generally is to be helpful, to stimulate if I can the faith and the courage of the members of the Church.

It has been very wisely said that he who carries a lantern to light the pathway of his brother sees more clearly his own. I must confess that in trying to encourage others, I gain courage, strength, and faith. It is in a spirit of love that I minister and help those that need it, if I can, realizing at the same time that I get joy and satisfaction out of it.

VISIT TO CANADIAN MISSION

Only a week ago Sister Ivins and I returned from a visit to the Canadian Mission, where we had the privilege of listening to the testimonies of almost 160 of your sons and daughters; where we heard their expressions of faith and their determination to carry on and further the work to which they have been called in the service of God. It was our purpose to encourage and to stimulate them in their faith, to help if we could, to surmount any obstacles that had presented themselves to them. Also, it was our purpose to encourage the members of the Church in that area, to help them.

I was very pleased to discover what I think is an awakening among the people of that area. In some of the meetings we had more investigators than members, after excluding the missionaries. Rather large groups of investigators were present. In some sections we had the privilege of meeting people of Jewish ancestry who have come into the Church. That and other experiences that I have had in other missions of the Church seem to indicate to me that there is an awakening of interest among the people with whom we labor. I hope it is real. I hope it is an indication of an increasing faith on the part of the people and their dependence upon the Lord for his blessings. I hope it doesn't come from fear of the present conditions that prevail in the world but rather from a sincere desire to serve God and enjoy the blessings that come from the companionship of his Holy Spirit.

They expect in the Canadian Mission to baptize more people than they did last year. By a missionary who returned the other day from one of the missions, I was told that in a single month the missionaries had baptized almost as many people as in some previous years in the same territory. As I said, I hope it indicates a true increase in interest and desire on the part of the people to approach God and get nearer to him. And I hope that same spirit exists among us who are here at home. I wish to assure the fathers and mothers of those missionaries in the Canadian Mission that their leadership is good, that the president of that mission has only the welfare of the work and the welfare of the missionaries at heart, that it is my judgment that he enjoys the Spirit of God in his ministry, that his wife is supporting him loyally and well. The missionaries are without exception in the enjoyment of health.

NEED FOR FAITH

This is a time when we need faith, faith of a very definite and positive nature, the faith that will lead us to optimism. I believe that pessimism grows out of a lack of faith, and that if we have the right type of faith, we will be optimistic about the future. It may be true that the immediate future may have difficulties for us, but I feel that out of it all will grow a realization of the purposes of God. And it should be our purpose to develop and maintain in our hearts, if we can, faith in God and in the ultimate consummation of his purposes—a faith that will unite us in a solid, coherent group. We must, of course, in order to do that, develop faith in each other.

Without that faith we are not likely to go far in promoting the work of the Lord. We must have a faith that will encourage our returning missionaries. I find as I interview them, that they are uncertain. They don't know just what is going to happen to them because of present chaotic conditions, but we must try to develop in their hearts faith and reliance on God that will enable them to plan as they would like to plan, and then carry on even though those plans may be temporarily interrupted; the faith that will lead us to the ultimate consummation of the purposes of God, faith that will help us to cooperate, that out of cooperation may come strength. If we could properly unite our efforts, all of our temporal difficulties could be overcome, I am sure. If and when we overcome, it will be only because we unite in our purpose through faith in each other.

RESULTS OF COOPERATION

I want to tell you a very pretty little thing that I once saw that illustrates the result of cooperation. Most of you know that I spent a time in Mexico. One time as I was riding on a cold, frosty morning through the Sierra Madre Mountains, I ran on to a little covey of Messina partridges. It was cold, and they got together for self-protection. I noticed that each one of those birds had spread his wings, and they had so intertwined them that their bodies were completely covered as a shield from the frost and the cold; only their heads stuck up above that covering. And they survived. Without that united effort of self-protection, they might have succumbed to the weather. But with it, they came through in comfort, I am sure.

Now if we could so put out our arms and shield each other, if we could so support each other through the faith that we should have in each other, then all the righteous purposes of God as far as this group of people is concerned, I am sure, could be realized. Can we develop that faith? I think we should; I think it could come as a result of a positive effort on our part.

IMPROVEMENTS NOTED

I have been checking the records of the various stakes that I have visited all this year, and in many respects I notice, as compared with previous years, that there is a better condition indicated in those reports, the condition of greater faith. There are some items that show slipping, but many of them show improvement in the stakes that I have visited. The use of liquor and tobacco seems to be decreasing, if I can trust those statistics. The number of people who hold family prayers seems to be on the increase. The number of people, the percentage of those in the Melchizedek Priesthood who observe the Sabbath seems to be on the increase. I noticed in a stake that I visited recently that the attendance at sacrament meeting has been on a steady increase, showing a rising curve over the last few years. I hope that these indications are real, that they show a real determination on our part to live closer to God and serve him better.

STRIVE FOR PERFECTION

I love this service; I love the people. I am always encouraged when I see these signs of faith on their part. We're never perfect—we will never be perfect—but we should strive for perfection, and the development of faith is the thing that will bring it. My faith prompts me to believe that God has a design for the world that he expects us to realize. And the best way for us to do that is to pay attention to today. Yesterday has gone. It will never come back. Today is always with us so long as we live. Tomorrow is a hope only, so today we must look to ourselves, to our behavior, look to our faith in ourselves and in God. If we are satisfied with it, all well and good! If we are not, let's increase it. Let's make such changes in our program and in our attitudes that will increase that faith. I have said we should have faith in each other. We should have faith in our leadership, in the ward, in the stake, in the general officers of the Church. I stand here to bear testimony to you that in all my associations with the leadership of the Church above me, I have seen nothing but honest purpose. Let's try and develop that type of faith. Let's develop a loyalty to the organization that will prompt us to live its standards. Overcoming the temptations of the world and living the standards of the Church should be a matter of loyalty to us, a matter of self-discipline. We should take pride in ourselves that we can live the will of the Church, whether we always know the reason for it or not. It is my feeling and my testimony that out of the inspiration of God which comes to these brethren, comes a policy for the Church that is wise and well-designed, that will be for the welfare and the progress of every man and every woman that will follow it.

May God give us this faith in ourselves, faith in those who lead us, faith in our ultimate destiny that will enable us to carry on, without misgivings and without fear, into the future; that will enable us to carve out our destiny; that will ultimately bring us back to the presence of God in exaltation, I pray, and I do it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER ELDRED G. SMITH

Patriarch to the Church

I have paid particular attention in this conference to the prayers that have been offered. They have been indeed a good example for all of us to follow. I hope that I will receive in turn my full share of prayers asked in behalf of those who take part here in this conference as I am sure those who have preceded me have received.

In the beginning, as Adam and Eve were driven out of the Garden of Eden, they were shut out from the presence of the Lord, but the Lord did not expect them to be without some contact with him. That one avenue he left open for man to reach God while in this life of mortality was prayer; so Adam called upon God, and he received guidance in all things. Neither does God expect us to get along without his help. Throughout the Old and New Testaments and the Book of Mormon the Lord gave instructions to pray constantly. The Doctrine and Covenants is filled with like exhortations. The disciples asked the Savior on one occasion, "Lord, teach us to pray."

PRAY TO FATHER

Among other things the Lord said, "Pray to our Father in heaven." And herein, I think that we need to be careful, because very often we open our prayer with the expression of praying to our Father in heaven, then during the prayer we use the term "Lord," and before we are through it is hard to tell whether we are addressing the Father or his Son, Jesus Christ. We should pray to our Father in heaven, for he is indeed the Father of all mankind on the earth, and because he is our Father, he wants us to come to him often with our joys and our sorrows and thank him for all that he has given us. Then the Savior gave us a good suggestive sample of the things to pray for and how to pray. (See Luke 11:1-2.)

As Jesus told his Disciples, our Father in heaven knows what we are in need of before we start; yet he has commanded us to pray. He wants us to be thoughtful of others as we are of ourselves. "Forgive us as we forgive our debtors." He did not intend that we should always use the exact words that he gave in the sample or to use pre-written prayers. In so doing we would become as those Christ referred to when he said, "They draw near to me with their lips, but their hearts are far from me." Do you think Joseph Smith would have received that wonderful manifestation if he had simply read a prayer? How much of our heart goes into a prayer of that nature? How much faith can we exercise with words and thoughts that are not our own? Prayer without faith is dead, and if we add to the faith which President Ivins has just spoken to us about, that prayer, I'm sure will have results, and we'll have an increase of the statistics President Ivins has referred to in actual fact and continue as such.

BE IN TUNE

We do not read our prayers in this Church, but some of us get in almost as bad a rut. We are so bound by set words and phrases at times that we hardly remember what we are saying. We must have a spirit of deep humility, of repentance, an open mind, to receive the will of God. We must not be hampered by any anger or meanness or hardness of heart, or any selfish desires. We must tune our minds and our hearts to the Spirit of God just as we tune our radio to receive the program from the broadcasting station. We want no interfering static from outside influences. In the attitude of true repentance we should seek forgiveness of our past mistakes and guidance for improvement. I like the little poem used so much in our home:

To say my prayer is not to pray,
Unless I mean the words I say,
Unless I think to whom I speak,
And with my heart his favor seek.

Then let me, when I come to pray,
Not only mean the words I say,
But let me strive with earnest care,
To have my heart go with my prayer.

SINCERITY OF CHILDREN

Unless our whole heart is in what we are doing, we are not really praying. A child is naturally sincere and can be taught to pray almost with its first words. His own private prayer should become a habit never to be broken. If he greets the day with a prayer for guidance and help, if he goes to sleep with a prayer of thanksgiving, more than half the battle is won in trying to do right. The Lord tells us in the Doctrine and Covenants, sixty-eighth section, twenty-eighth verse:

And they shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord.

Children will learn more from observation than they ever will from just being told. If parents have a prayerful attitude, the children are more than likely to have the same. Family prayer cannot be too highly praised. In no other way can we obtain such a spirit of unity, nor is there any better place for the child to learn to pray in public. The Lord also tells us in the Doctrine and Covenants, nineteenth section and twenty-eighth verse:

And again, I command thee that thou shalt pray vocally as well as in thy heart; yea, before the world as well as in secret, in public as well as in private."

FAMILY PRAYER

It is surprising how soon a child can take his turn in family prayer, and just think of the good that comes to the family. If we kneel down together and unitedly thank God for his many blessings; pray for guidance, for peace and love in our hearts; if we pray for others who are in need; for the advancement of God's work here; can it help but make our home a better place? Can we help but be more thoughtful of others, more kind and loving? A man and wife who will pray together and pray vocally will have more love and contentment in their home. If we would learn to call upon God more often, we should not have to call upon the divorce courts so much. Teach your children the one source of strength that will never fail them. Help them to realize that they have an everlasting friend, one that they can call upon when their hearts are filled with joy as well as when they are filled with doubt or sadness or despair. Then when they have grown up and are on their own, living at home, away at school, or in the far-flung battlefields of war, they have God as their partner; they are not afraid. This would bring peace, happiness, and joy. A sin-sick world could be lifted from its depths if we could only turn to the Lord in prayer. What more could we do for our children? I pronounce the blessings of God upon all who humbly seek him in prayer, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER MILTON R. HUNTER

Of the First Council of the Seventy

This is indeed a humbling experience—to occupy this position. I do, therefore, ask an interest in your faith and prayers and that the Spirit of God might rest down upon me.

More than two thousand years ago an ancient Hebrew prophet, speaking for the Lord, said,

Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings. (Malachi 3:8.)

FAITH EXHIBITED

During the past five and one-half years since I was made a member of the First Council of the Seventy, I have had the wonderful experience and opportunity to travel throughout the stakes of Zion and in the mission fields, I have observed with much joy the great amount of faith expressed and exhibited by the Latter-day Saints. Thousands and thousands of them are paying their full tithes and offerings to the Lord, contributing in the welfare programs, sending their sons and daughters into the mission fields, and in practically all respects living the gospel of Jesus Christ. They are doing all of those things and much more because they know that God lives; they know that Jesus is the Christ and the Savior of the world; they know that Joseph Smith is a prophet of God and that the true gospel has been restored through the Prophet Joseph Smith in our day.

I have ofttimes felt that I am sure God is pleased with the Church in general and with many of the Latter-day Saints in particular.

LAW OF TITHING

On the other hand, however, I have also observed that there are certain members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints—and possibly thousands of them—who are fulfilling Malachi's prophecy or prediction at the present time. They are robbing God in tithes and offerings. I've oftentimes thought and have even expressed the idea that I believe that practically all members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, if they understood the law of tithing, thoroughly; that is, if they knew the will of God in this respect and especially if they could be taught to know of and appreciate the great spiritual blessings which would be received as a result of rendering obedience to this law, they would pay their tithes and offerings to the Lord in full. I have suggested in priesthood leadership meetings as I have traveled throughout the Church that the leaders of the stakes, presidents of quorums, bishops, and stake presidencies endeavor to teach the people the law of tithing.

Yet I also recognize the fact that there are certain ones in the Church who would argue against the law. They might say, "But, Brother Hunter, you quoted Malachi, and he lived four hundred years before the Savior lived. He was a Hebrew prophet and was talking to the Jews. Would his teachings apply to us?"

I would answer, "Yes, I know that he was a Hebrew prophet. He was talking to the Jews, and yet his teachings would apply definitely to us. Why? Because he was giving us the will of God—the absolute mind and words of God the Eternal Father which he had been commanded to teach.

LAW GIVEN TO NEPHITES

Now why can I be so definite on that point? Because of an event that took place after the resurrection of the Savior. The resurrected Lord appeared to the Nephites here on this continent. He taught them the same gospel plan that he had given to the Jews while in mortality. On one occasion he said to them,

After you people left Jerusalem a great prophet of God came among the Jews and my Father commanded him to teach the people certain things, and since you haven't a record of what that prophet taught, I have received instructions from the Father to tell you what Malachi taught. (See III Nephi 24:1.)

So he gave them the teachings of Malachi and he asked them to write those teachings down. After this had been done, he explained to them all that Malachi had taught.

He quoted the exact words of Malachi,

Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say: Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings. (Ibid., 24:8.)

Now since Jesus is the Christ, the Savior of the world, the great Judge, the Redeemer, the very One under whom the gospel came to us, the gospel being named after him; then certainly when he says that these teachings on tithing are the doctrine and will of his Father, those teachings would apply to us.

TITHING REVEALED ANEW

Furthermore, a hundred years ago and a little more, the Lord revealed the gospel of Jesus Christ to the Prophet Joseph Smith. As part of that great restoration was the restoration of the principle of tithing. In a revelation to the Church the Lord said that this commandment would be an everlasting law unto the priesthood of the Church. (D. & C. 119:4.) It is, therefore, a law that you and I must obey if we expect to receive the blessings that God has in store for those who love him and keep his commandments.

EXPERIENCE AT INTERVIEW

I would like to relate a little experience that I had about a year ago. A young man came into my office to be interviewed to be ordained a seventy. I asked him if he would like to be a seventy. His face lighted up with joy; and he said, "Yes, Brother Hunter, for a long time I have wanted to become a seventy. I have never been recommended before, but I do hope that I am now worthy. I do hope that you ordain me a seventy today."

After I got this gush of enthusiasm from him, I asked him a question rather point-blank. I said, "Would you steal $150.00 from your neighbor?" A look of indignation came over his face. If I could have read his thoughts, he probably would have been thinking, "Well, you have your nerve, Brother Hunter, to think that I would steal."

Finally he looked at me and said, "No, sir."

I wasn't exactly satisfied, and so I said, "Would you steal a cow from your neighbor?"

He shot back this reply instantly, "I wouldn't steal thirty-five cents from my neighbor."

I remarked, "This is very, very interesting to me, that you wouldn't steal thirty-five cents from your neighbor; and yet, you would rob God."

A questioning look came over his face, and he asked, "What do you mean? I don't understand you."

Thereupon I turned his recommendation card over and read these words, "Part tithepayer."

He looked at me rather flushed, and I might say, turned a little red, twisted around in his chair a little, and finally he said to me, "Well, I guess it's this way, Brother Hunter: the Lord isn't here to check up on me. My neighbor is. If I robbed my neighbor, he would put me in jail."

I replied, "Brother, you are partly right and partly wrong. Certainly your neighbor would put you in jail if you robbed him. He should put you in jail, but when you got out of jail, your neighbor would have no more influence or claim on you. You would have paid your debt. But God also is checking up on us, and we are working with him for eternal life. He declares that eternal life is the greatest gift he has in store for man, and it is reserved for those that love him and keep his commandments. To receive eternal life in the presence of God would be worth more than all the money in the world." And I continued by saying: "Now it is my opinion and feeling that if you or I or any other Latter-day Saint feels that he must rob somebody, I think probably it would be far better to rob our neighbor than to rob God."

He replied, "Well, I've never thought of it that way before."

And then I asked, "What are you going to do in the future?"

"I am going to be a full tithepayer," came quickly the positive and unqualified answer.

I was delighted that he took that attitude because he now understood more about the law of tithing and had reached a determination to obey it in the future.

COVENANT TO OBEY

We are told by the prophets of God that the earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof; that you and I are merely stewards, merely landlords, so to speak. Our rent is one-tenth of all that we earn. Yesterday, in a very beautiful way, Brother McConkie spoke of a covenant with God. Every one of us has entered into a covenant with God to the effect that we will pay one-tenth of all that we earn to the Lord. When we entered the waters of baptism and became members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, we accepted all of the principles of the gospel, including the principle of tithing.

The Lord has given us the law of tithing in order that he might test our honesty. When we use any portion of God's one-tenth, we are robbing him.

The Lord has given us the law of tithing in order that he might test our love for him. He has declared that if we love him we will keep his commandments; therefore, to the extent that we pay a full tithing, to that extent we have given tangible evidence that we do love the Lord our God.

The Lord has given us the law of tithing to test our obedience. The purpose is to see if we will be faithful in all things that God commandeth us.

Furthermore, the Lord has given us the law of tithing to test our preparedness to enter the kingdom of God, to enter exaltation.

TEACHINGS OF JOSEPH F. SMITH

The prophets of God have taught the things I have been mentioning here this morning. I would like to quote from the teachings of one of the great prophets in our day, the Prophet Joseph F. Smith. He said in regard to tithing, this:

By this principle (tithing) the loyalty of the people of the Church shall be put to the test. By this principle it shall be known who is for the kingdom of God and who is against it. By this principle it shall be seen whose hearts are set on doing the will of God and keeping his commandments; thereby sanctifying the land of Zion unto God, and who are opposed to this principle and have cut themselves off from the blessings of Zion. There is a great deal of importance connected with this principle, for by it ye shall know whether we are faithful or unfaithful. In this respect, it is just as essential as faith in God, as repentance of sin, as baptism for the remission of sin, as the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. [As you recall, the Savior said that "except a man have these, he cannot see the kingdom of God."] For if a man keep all the law save it be one point, and he offend in that, he is a transgressor of the law, and he is not entitled to the fulness of the blessings of the gospel of Jesus Christ. But when a man keeps all the law that is revealed, according to his strength, his substance, and his ability though what he does may be little, it is just as acceptable in the sight of God as if he were able to do a thousand times more. (Joseph F. Smith, Gospel Doctrine, pp. 282-283.)

President Smith also made this statement:

The law of tithing is a test by which the people as individuals shall be proved. Any man who fails to observe this principle shall be known as a man who is indifferent to the welfare of Zion, who neglects his duty as a member of the Church, and who does nothing towards the accomplishment of the temporal advancement of the kingdom of God. He contributes nothing, either, towards spreading the gospel to the nations, and he neglects to do that which would entitle him to receive the blessings and ordinances of the gospel. (Ibid., p. 283.)

Could the Lord have established or could he now establish another way to take care of the economic needs of the Church? I am positive that he could. He could say, "President George Albert Smith, in yonder hill or mountain there is a great deal of gold. Have the brethren of the Church mine that gold. Use the money to build church houses, to send missionaries out in the mission fields, to take care of all the other needs of the Church. The Latter-day Saints have been faithful in the past in paying many contributions, so from now on they can rest. They don't have to pay any more money to the Church."

BLESSINGS TO FOLLOW

Certainly he could do that if he wanted to, but he won't. He is too wise a God to do that. He recognizes the great spiritual blessings which come from paying tithing. They far outweigh the economic blessings. He recognizes that "where a man's treasure is, there his heart will be also." He recognizes the fact that if we contribute much money to help build a church house, we might come to church to get our money's worth. He recognizes the fact that if we give donation after donation to the Church for various purposes, our contributions tie us into the Church. As a matter of fact, we own part of it. We belong there. It develops us spiritually to pay on welfare, to pay tithes, to pay fast offerings, to pay and pay into the Church.

Brethren and sisters, it is a blessing, an opportunity in your lives and in my life to have the privilege of paying into the Church. It helps us to get rid of the selfishness in our hearts. It makes us love each other more. It makes us love God more. In fact, it makes us more godly. In other words, tithing is a spiritual law which God has given us for the purpose of preparing us to come back into his presence and receive eternal life. Therefore, his course is a wise course. Every wise Latter-day Saint will accept it. Not one of us can afford to be part tithepayers nor non-tithepayers. We need the blessings of the Lord.

I humbly ask our Father in heaven to let his Spirit rest down upon you and me and upon every member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, whether he be a full tithepayer or not; may the full tithepayers remain full tithepayers; may the part-tithepayers accept this principle of the gospel and repent of their past negligence. By doing so we might all prepare ourselves to come back into the presence of God and receive exaltation. And for this I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Deseret Stake Choir and the congregation joined in singing the hymn, "O Say, What Is Truth?" Elder Richard P. Condie conducted the singing.

ELDER SPENCER W. KIMBALL

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My brothers and sisters, I should like to express here my great love and admiration for President George F. Richards who was with us in our last conference but has since passed away. Of all the men I have known in my life, none has risen to greater heights, in my opinion, than Elder George F. Richards in saintliness, in vision, in understanding, and in love, humility, and power.

PRAYERS FOR LAMANITES

I was glad that President Beckstead mentioned in his prayer the Lamanite program. I thought, as he was praying, "Wouldn't it be glorious if two hundred thousand Latter-day Saint families every morn before their breakfast, in their family prayers, were asking that the work of the Lord among the Lamanites might be furthered; and if those same two hundred thousand families might also be on their knees before they retired that night to ask again, among other things, that the blessings of the Lord might be brought to this great people?"

PLAN DEVISED BY THE LORD

The Lord has devised a very comprehensive plan, and I have a firm conviction that the blueprint that he worked out many millenia ago will be followed, and the structure will be built in accordance therewith.

The Prophet Joseph Smith dedicated the Kirtland Temple in 1836. His prayer, which he stated later was a revelation from the Lord, covered many matters, and in it he made this statement:

And cause that the remnants of Jacob, who have been cursed and smitten because of their transgression, be converted from their wild and savage condition to the fulness of the everlasting gospel. (D. & C. 109:65.)

Our Father began to speak through the mouths of prophets long centuries ago, outlining in prophetic words the history of those many centuries which were to follow. I'm sure that he inspired a little boy, Christopher Columbus, to stand on the quays in Genoa, Italy, and yearn for the sea. He was filled with the desire to sail the seas, and he fulfilled a great prophecy made long, long ago, that this land, chosen above all other lands, should be discovered. And so when he was mature, opportunity was granted to him to brave the unknown seas, to find this land which had been cut off from the rest of the world long centuries, and to open the door, as it were, to the teaching of these people and bringing them back to their Heavenly Father.

I have a firm conviction that the Lord led the Pilgrims and the Puritans across the ocean, perhaps permitted the persecutions that would bring them here, so that when they came to the American shores with their righteous blood and their high ideals and standards, they would form the basis of a nation which would make possible the restoration of the gospel. I am sure that since there was not religious liberty, not political liberty here, the Lord permitted these few poorly-armed and ill-clad men at Valley Forge and elsewhere to defeat a great army with its trained soldiery and its many mercenaries, a few against the many, but the few had on their side the Lord God of heaven, that gave them victory. And there came political liberty and religious liberty with it, all in preparation for the day when a young boy would come forth and would seek and make contact with the Lord and open the doors of heaven again. Following that great manifestation to Joseph Smith came the opening of Cumorah Hill and the speaking of the dead from the dust.

PURPOSES TO BE FULFILLED

I am sure that all this was for a well-planned purpose. The Lord knew exactly what he was doing, and though evil forces were at play, they were all brought to bow, so that the purposes of the Almighty would be fulfilled.

I should like to quote to you a paragraph from Wilford Woodruff, stated by him in 1873:

I am looking for the fulfilment of all the things that the Lord has spoken.

For long centuries the Lord has said how this chosen people would fall into transgression and how some centuries after Christ they would be so deep in sin they would lose the faith, and that certain ones of them would be destroyed. Now, Brother Woodruff says he knows that these things will all be fulfilled,

... and they will come come to pass as the Lord lives. Zion is bound to rise and flourish. The Lamanites will blossom as the rose in the mountains. I am willing to say here that although I believe this, when I see the power of the nation destroying them from the face of the earth, the fulfilment of that prophecy is perhaps harder for me to believe than any other revelation of God that I have ever read.

Brother Woodruff lived in the day when the Lamanites were being destroyed. They were the "Vanishing Americans" at that time, and they were being persecuted and driven and killed and reservationed about that time of the nation's history. He continued:

It looks as though there would not be enough left to receive the gospel; but notwithstanding this dark picture, every word that God has ever said of them will have its fulfilment, and they, by and by, will receive the gospel. It will be a day of God's power among them and a nation will be born in a day. The chiefs will be filled with the power of God and will receive the gospel, and they will go forth and build the New Jerusalem, and we shall help them. They are branches of the House of Israel and when the fulness of the Gentiles has come in and the work ceases among them, then it will go in power to the seed of Abraham.

WORK COMMENCED

We are given to understand that the work commenced when the book came forth, for in Ether, fourth chapter, we read:

Therefore, when ye shall receive this record ye may know that the work of the Father has commenced upon all the face of the land. (Ether 4:17.)

The Prophet Joseph Smith gave us the thought that the Lord brought us out here from the East to bring the gospel to the Lamanites. One of the most important things that can possibly happen in this Dispensation of the Fulness of Times is to bring to the Lamanites a knowledge of God. He says:

... there will be tens of thousands of Latter-day Saints who will gather in the Rocky Mountains, and there they will open the door for establishing the gospel among the Lamanites, who will receive the Gospel and their endowments and the blessings of God.

Brigham Young seemed to catch the vision of it. He said that the Lord could not have devised a better plan than to put us where we are in order to accomplish that very thing of educating and teaching the Lamanites. Our ancestors came a thousands miles across the desert, under terrific persecutions and hardships, to locate where the Gentiles had scattered the Lamanites. They had pretty well "reservationed" them here in the western states. They were in our every county, and the Lord brought us out here that we might teach them the gospel.

Brothers and sisters, that work has continued with some interruptions through the century. Now the Lord has made another step. It seems to me he is bringing the Lamanites back to us. They were sent onto reservations all over the west, and now the largest, the Navajo Reservation, will not support its people. The Navajos are being starved out. They are coming back among us into the beet and cotton fields, on the railroads, and in the mines to find employment. They are coming back into the stakes of Zion where we have stake missions and where we have thousands of good Latter-day Saints who live the gospel, and thousands of devoted stake missionaries who will teach them the truth. Here is our great opportunity. The Lord seems to have planned everything for our sake. If we fail our opportunity, I am sure the Lord will not easily forgive us.

LAMANITE MEMBERSHIP

You will be interested to know that there are some forty thousand Lamanite members of the Church in the world, including the islands of the sea. There are probably ten thousand Lamanite members in North America in the Mexican missions and the Indian mission. There are 902 Lamanite members in the English-speaking missions in the Eastern, Northern, Central States, and other North American missions. And this work has gone forward splendidly under some of our mission presidents. We have baptized 1823 Lamanites in the last two-and-a-half years in the three missions that specialize in Lamanite proselyting in North America. We have baptized 480 Indians down in the little Indian mission, with a token number of missionaries. About an equal number have been blessed, children under eight years of age who belong to families of friends and investigators and members, so that we now have more than twelve hundred members there in our short period of missionary work. We have approximately seventeen hundred Indian members in the stakes of Zion. We have baptized 347 in the sixty-five stakes which have reported so far, in this period, since the work was inaugurated.

In the missions in the United States and Canada, we have baptized 248 Indians in this short period. You will be interested to know that we are baptizing more Indians for each missionary than the Church is baptizing in the rest of the world. There were three and three-tenths baptisms for each missionary in the Indian mission in 1949, compared to about two-thirds that many for the other missions in North America. We have about fifty baptisms of Indian youth who have come from the reservation and who are living in the homes of Latter-day Saints on a daughter-mother and son-father basis. Here the Indian boy or girl becomes an unofficial member of the family, and is neither a servant nor a guest, where foster parents are taking care of them and are giving them education and training, and they soon come into the Church at their own request. We have about fifty-one Lamanite missionaries in the mission field now, and they will be increasing very rapidly, I am sure. We have a full-blooded Navajo girl who goes into the mission field Monday morning, the first from that nation. We have a Pima Indian in the mission field now, and we have a Catawba Indian coming from the East who goes into the mission home soon, en route to one of the other missions in the Church. Brother (E. Wesley) Smith told us yesterday there were ten Lamanite missionaries from Hawaii who were over in the Orient, I believe.

EARLY BRETHREN QUOTED

I should like to give you a few quotations from some of the early brethren. Joseph Smith said that this work was extremely essential, and he sent Oliver Cowdery, Peter Whitmer, Parley P. Pratt, and Ziba Peterson out as early as October, 1830. It wasn't very long after the plates had come out of the Hill Cumorah. In section thirty-two of the Doctrine and Covenants, the Lord Jesus Christ says of those Lamanite missionaries:

... and I, myself, will go with them, and be in their midst; ... and nothing shall prevail against them. (D. & C. 32:3.)

And then the Prophet Joseph Smith said,

... and there (in the Rocky Mountains) they (the Latter-day Saints) will open the door for the establishing the gospel among the Lamanites who will receive the gospel and their endowments and the blessings of God.

And Brother John Taylor said:

... the work among the Lamanites must not be postponed if we desire to retain the approval of God.

Oliver Cowdery, even in that early day, had found the Navajos in the far Southwest, and he reported it to the brethren, feeling that it was a very important thing. Then Wilford Woodruff said this further, as he went down into the southwest, in New Mexico, and visited among the Indians there. He said:

In my short communication of the second inst., I promised to give a fuller account of my visit to the Isletas which I will now endeavor to do.

The Isletas are one of the Pueblo groups down in New Mexico.

I view my visit among the Nephites one of the most interesting missions of my life, although short. I say Nephites, because if there are any Nephites on this continent, we have found them among the Zunis, the Lagunas, and the Isletas, for they are a different race of people, altogether, from the Lamanites. I class the Navajo, Moquis (Hopis) and Apaches with the Lamanites, although they are in advance of many Indian tribes of America. I class the Zunis, Lagunas, and Isletas among the Nephites.

And then he goes on to say, that as soon as they dismissed this particular meeting among the Isletas, and were going to leave, one of the Nephites arose.

. . . full of the spirit of the Lord and said, "Friends, why do you dismiss us and leave us this way? This is the first time we have heard of our forefathers and the gospel and the things we have looked for from the traditions of our fathers. If our wives and children are weary, let them go home. We want to hear more. We want you to talk all night. Do not leave us so."

Brother Brigham Young said: "It is our duty to feed and teach these Indians." Let me quote a few lines from him. He advised us to "educate them and teach them the gospel" so that many generations would not pass ere they should become a white and delightsome people.

This is the land they and their fathers have walked over, called their own. And they have just as good right to call it theirs today as any children have to call any land their own. They have buried their fathers and mothers and children here. This is their home, and we have taken possession and occupy the land where they used to hunt. Now the game is gone, and they are left to starve. . . . The Lord has given us the ability to cultivate the ground and reap bountiful harvests. We have an abundance of food for ourselves and for the stranger. . . . We are living on their possessions and at their homes.

I should like to quote again from President John Taylor. He said:

The work among the Lamanites must not be postponed if we desire to retain the approval of God. Thus far we have been content simply to baptize them and let them run wild again, but this must continue no longer; the same devoted effort, the same care in instructing, the same organization and priesthood must be introduced and maintained in the House of Levi as amongst those of Israel gathered from Gentile nations. As yet God has been doing all, and we comparatively nothing. He has led many of them to us, and they have been baptized, and now we must instruct them further and organize them into churches with proper presidencies, attach them to our stakes, organizations, etc., in one word, treat them exactly in these respects as we would and do treat our white brethren.

HISTORY OF LAMANITE WORK

Brigham Young put this into practice, the proclaiming the gospel to the Lamanites, and he sent missionaries up on the Salmon, over in Carson Valley, over into Moab, down on the Santa Clara, up around Blackfoot, and elsewhere. He also sent a mission out to the Indian territory. We made five attempts to establish the work in that area. There were twelve missionaries went in 1855. The missionaries were withdrawn from almost all of these places when Johnston's Army came to Utah. And so the work ceased in many places. Malaria, persecution, and death hampered the work, and by 1860 the Indian territory mission work had lapsed. There were few missionaries to send, the Civil War was on, and conditions at home were difficult, and we had just begun to get established here in the West. A period of seventeen years elapsed, and those converts and investigators were lost, of course, with no one to teach them. In 1877 another group of missionaries went to the Indian territory. After six months they returned. The malaria was too much for them. A year later Elder George Teasdale was sent with some other missionaries, and the work began again, but they also returned in about six months. The malaria was most severe.

Two years later a fourth attempt was made to establish the work, and missionaries were sent again. Though the malaria was severe, they remained, and the mission went on to the present time; but other changes that were severe came upon the Indian work. Texas, Kansas, Missouri, and other states were added to the Indian Territory Mission, and it became the Central States Mission, and the emphasis was gradually transferred from the Indians to the non-Indians. When I was in that mission in 1914, no mention was ever made of Indians, all the work being done among the whites. About two years ago President Francis Brown of that mission sent missionaries again to work among the Indians in Oklahoma, and the work is again going forward.

OUR RESPONSIBILITY

It is time now that we began to give proper emphasis to this great work of bringing the Lamanites to a knowledge of their God. It is our responsibility and our opportunity. Now, brothers and sisters, in the stakes and missions you will have a chance to teach the Indians. Let your prayers ascend to the Lord in behalf of them and then do your utmost to bring them to higher standards, and above all, give to them the gospel of the kingdom and the knowledge of God, as they once had.

May the Lord bless the Lamanite people, and bless us that we many realize our responsibilities toward them. This I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER ALBERT E. BOWEN

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

One often hears the question: Why a church? I should like briefly to consider it. I shall hope to suggest to your minds that the question is tantamount to asking: Why religion?

WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL MESSAGE

It was one hundred fifty-four years ago this very month, his second term of office as President of the United States drawing to a close, that George Washington announced to the country his determination to retire, and requested that he not be considered available for re-election to the office he was about to lay down. He made it the occasion for a farewell message which partook almost of the nature of a last testament, bequeathing to his countrymen the fruitage of his rich and varied experiences.

As a participant in the long and oftentimes acrimonious disputes which eventuated in the political severance of the American colonies from the mother country, as Commander-in-Chief of the untrained, poorly-disciplined, ill-equipped, scantily-clad, under-provisioned, and oftentimes unpaid Continental Army, as witness to the bickerings and jealousies and petty greeds which, following the war, so threatened the wreckage of the infant nation that he often wondered whether the winning of the conflict with Britain would prove to be a blessing or a curse, as president of the convention which fashioned the Constitution of the United States of America and as its first president, he had seen human nature at its best and almost its worst. Under stresses and strains, sacrifice and suffering, he had seen men rise to noble heights of patriotic devotion. Likewise, he had seen them usurp and abuse power, quarrel and bicker, resort to petty scheming for advantage, exhibit mean little greeds, and stoop, under the spur of selfish ambition, to ignoble deeds.

Drawing upon this ripe knowledge of human behavior with all its foibles and inconstancy, he so packed into that testamentary legacy perennial wisdom that it never grows old, but is valid for all peoples and all times.

Among the nuggets of pure gold tucked away in that admonitory address are Washington's observations about religion and morality. Here is what he said:

Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness—these firmest props of the duties of men and citizens. The mere politician, equally with the pious man, ought to respect and cherish them. A volume could not trace all their connections with private and public felicity. . . . And let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle. (Sept. 17, 1796.)

THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

Without doubt, when Washington spoke about religion, he had in mind the Christian religion. By and large that is the only religion Western man knows. When I speak, in what I shall say today, about religion or the church, I shall have in mind the Christian religion and the Christian church, which encompasses the moral and religious teachings of the Old Testament as well as the new.

The church has had many ups and downs since Washington's day as well as before. It has had periods of strength as well as periods of questionings and doubts. Agnostics and atheists have ever been with it. It has taught that man, the individual as well as the race, is of very great consequence. As a child of God endowed with divine attributes, he is capable of infinite advancement in the scale of being, even to ultimate perfection. He must have faith in himself and his high destiny. Thus far, the Christian is a humanist, and the church is humanistic. But when man loses his humility and arrogates to himself a self-sufficiency which denies God or any other power higher than himself, then the church must part company with the humanistic creed or compromise its principles.

INFLUENCE WEAKENED

Under the impact of agnosticism, atheism, and the extreme humanism which denies God and makes man the source of all meaning, the Christian church as a body has compromised its basic doctrines to make its teachings more harmonious with the current of popular opinion. And where has it got itself? It has lost its saving faith, weakened its influence, and almost forfeited its moral leadership. In consequence, men are floundering about in confusion, not knowing what they ought to do, but well-assured that the fair promises of irreligion and unbelief and human sufficiency have failed them, and they are casting about for anchorage. That is the sorry plight of man in this age.

REVIVAL OF FAITH NEEDED

Men of distinction in the world of letters, scientists, men of wide learning in almost every realm of scholarly research are asserting with great earnestness that the only thing that can save our civilization is a revival of religious faith. In one of his notable addresses, Robert Gordon Sproul, president of the University of California, said:

There is a great need for some directive force to rally the recuperative powers of mankind and win the race with catastrophe. Education cannot provide such a force, important as it is, because it is not the minds, but the souls of men that must be regenerated if catastrophe is not surely to come. . . . Our American heritage cannot long endure without a firmly-grounded religious faith.

Only day before yesterday, General Marshall said that military force alone cannot defeat the enemies of the United States. It must be buttressed by the weight of moral force.

These utterances are but typical of the warnings that are repeatedly being sounded by thoughtful people who are concerned about the state of men and women in this modern world. Thus is the wisdom of Washington's reminder that religion and morality are indispensable supports to political prosperity and that morality cannot be maintained without religion vindicated by the compelling logic of events in this disordered topsy-turvy world. One of the most frequently urged indictments against the Soviet system of government as directed by the polit-bureau is that it seeks to destroy all religion and forbids freedom of religious practices to its people.

UNIFIED ACTION REQUIRED

If, then, it can be conceded, as is so vigorously asserted, that a sound religious faith is essential to the saving of our blighted and withering civilization, the question demanding concrete and immediate answer is: How is a religious faith equal to this supreme task to be regenerated? I do not assert or mean to say that the average run of our people is irreligious or anti-Christian. Christian standards of morality have too long been bred in their bones for that. The teachings of Christ still furnish the best standards by which to measure values that the world knows, and the people of this land, out of long habit, instinctively turn to them. At least we pay lip service to them. But clearly that is not enough to furnish the crusading fervor essential to rousing the people of the Christian nations to that mighty endeavor. It is not a matter for individual, uncoordinated confession of faith. It requires action, unified action. That means an organized agency or instrumentality to give the movement direction and solid purpose. The only such organization at hand is the church. That is its office. But there are too many people who profess religion and would probably be insulted if charged with being irreligious or non-Christian, who at the same time refuse to unite with their fellows in the effective practice of religion. They tell us that they do not believe in organizational religion.

RELIGIOUS ISOLATIONISM

Who has not heard amiable, good men say: "I have my own religion and do not need to be bolstered up by church affiliation to live a good life?" Even if that were so, it may still be that others need the bolstering up their superior strength would afford, and after all, they owe some obligation to those who need their help. But apart from that, if this sinking, trouble-torn world-order is to be saved through a resurgence of religious fervor, then it is incumbent on every believer to throw in with his might. We hear much said these days about isolationism and isolationists. The least excusable form of isolationism and the most reprehensible of isolationists is that one who holds himself aloof and refuses to lend his strength with fellow-believers to the supreme job of saving civilization and the world.

The gospel taught by Jesus is a gospel of action. It does not consist in a passive profession of faith. Of himself, Jesus said that he came to do the Father's will, not to talk about or profess it. He made a parable about the man who heard his sayings and did them not, likening him to a foolish man who built his house upon the sand, and when the rains descended and the floods came and the winds blew and beat upon that house, it fell because it was built upon the sand. That man who heard his sayings and did them he likened to a wise man who built his house upon the rock, and it withstood the fury of rain and flood and tempest.

A GREAT BROTHERHOOD

The Christian church was not established by isolationists who separated themselves from each other or the body of believers. They were formed into worshipping bodies who collectively fought their way to victory against dire persecutions, torture, and death. They constituted themselves a great brotherhood cemented together for the fulfilment of a purpose in which they believed. Let him who in placid aloofness luxuriates in the freedom and comfort and security and ease which Christianity has brought to the nations, contemplate what his status might have been if there had been no Christian church.

Organization is but another name for order and stability. Its opposite is turmoil and confusion and weakness and ultimate disintegration. If no political body in the world has ever been able to exist without orderly coordinated authoritative organization, how can it be presumed that religion can carry on its high commission to resuscitate a sagging world without the church which is the organizational instrumentality through which it carries out its great work? Here is reason enough for a church.

EFFECT ON FAMILY LIFE

There is one other vital consideration, namely, the effect on family life and succeeding generations of the neglect of participation in organized church practices. A few years ago I recited from this pulpit the story of a disturbed woman's perplexities. She had just visited a dear friend of her college days who by then had a well-grown daughter and a son. She was both embarrassed and shocked by the behavior of these children. The boy came and went as he pleased, and no questions asked or answered. The mother's admonitions and protests against the indelicate indiscretions of the daughter in her behavior with young men were met with jeers at the mother's prudery and lack of sophistication. The last night of her visit, she was awakened by a disturbance in the house. The girl had come home from a late party thoroughly intoxicated and was leading her escort in like condition to her room when they were intercepted by the aroused parents. A noisy scene ensued before the boy was finally sent off home and the girl put to bed. So the embarrassed visitor went home to clear her head and do some thinking. She remembered the home environment in which she was reared.

The religious note was strong in that home. The Bible was read and believed in. Daily the family on their knees talked to God who was revered and was a reality. They were church-going people and set apart one day a week as a holy day on which to do reverence to the Author of life. They sang majestic hymns which carried messages to their expanding souls. They heard the simple, direct words of the gospels whose grandeur somehow carried over into their hearts and furnished their ideals for living. These ideals, through practice, were silently woven into the pattern of their lives, and they came out with established characters and stable guides to conduct which made them secure against the waves of laxity which washed about them with the passage of time. Her home and family experience were typical of those of the youth of her time, including the friend she had just visited. That friend, along with herself, in the days of their girlhood association had spontaneously as a matter of habit and acceptance observed the conventions and proprieties.

She explained that she and her friend and their associates had in their college years given up the simple faith of their youth, had ceased to give credence to the beliefs which had sustained them, had given up their Bible reading and their church-going and their Sabbath observance and their prayers. They could live the good life without these "artificial props." They didn't need the church. They said they had their own religion, but really it had shriveled up to a mere code of ethics now cut loose from its roots and no longer nourished from the parent stem. Then with an incredible lack of recognition of the relation of cause and effect, she professed amazement at the moral bankruptcy of her friend's children. The truth was that these children by the neglect of their parents had been cut off from the very character-forming influences upon which her own character, and her friend's character and the character of their generation had depended for formation and growth.

RELIGION A STABILIZER

While the instance I have cited may in some aspects be extreme, it nevertheless illustrates a result naturally to be expected. The moral foundations established through active participation in the activities of the church may carry through for one generation, but scarcely go beyond that. When parents detach themselves from active church affiliations and leave their children free to neglect it too, they have no right to be surprised when their children fall below their own standards. Religion is a powerful stabilizer, and the church is the medium through which it is made effective.

I have but merely mentioned some of the reasons why there must be a church if religion is to be a force in the world or wield any influence or power. Many other cogent reasons will occur to you.

The church, however, is but a dry and barren mechanism unless energized by the burning faith of a vital religion. That is the spark that gives it life.

It would seem to be the part of wisdom that all professing the same creed, the rich and the poor, the mighty and the humble, the laborer and the professional man, the unlearned and the scholar should rally together and with united strength exert a power in the land.

SOLID CONVICTION REQUIRED

To merit the name, religion must rest on solid conviction. It must stand for something. It cannot temporize or compromise. The Christian church rests on the premise that Jesus is the Son of God, the resurrected Lord, the author of eternal life for man. So long as it stood unyielding on that base, it was a force in the world. When the guardians of the faith, in their several denominations, wavered and watered the doctrines down till the virtue was gone out of them, they ceased to be the prop and support to morality and political prosperity which Washington said was indispensable. So long as that is the case, the world will totter and reel. We seem to be trying now to rear a government whose proponents and sponsors cannot even invoke divine blessing upon their deliberations or its destiny. What chance do you think it has to heal the wounds of the world?

If religion is a necessary prop to the political government, so likewise does the religious body, the Church, need for the protection of its guaranteed freedom a righteously administered civil government, which depends upon an intelligent and jealously guarded use of the franchise. That is the citizen's protection against abuse and usurpation.

So far as Latter-day Saints are concerned, I pray that as President Smith admonished at the beginning of this conference, they may have the wisdom and honesty to put their religion above their partisan politics and unite together as a solid phalanx to weed out prostitution of power and debauchery and subversion of the God-ordained freedom guaranteed by the glorious Constitution of this land, by voting into office without regard to party affiliation those who will preserve it unpolluted and uncorrupted, the protector and guarantor of individual liberty.

ELDER LEO J. MUIR

Formerly President of the Northern States Mission

Twenty-three hours ago I left Los Angeles to attend this conference. The journey was long and tedious. But, my dear friends, I testify to you that the little trip I just made from yonder front seat to this pulpit was by far the most exhausting lap in that journey.

Lest you might think there has been some negligence or indifference on the part of the First Presidency in not calling for my report previous to this time, let me assure you the fault has been mine and not theirs. I was here at the last conference and attended all sessions, except the Sunday morning. I thought that of all sessions of the conference that would be the least likely to afford occasion for the report of a mission president.

I am delighted to be here and to look upon this vast and interesting audience, the following of the leadership of modern Israel. I am not going to burden you with details upon my mission experience. Suffice it to say that to Sister Muir and myself it was the most enriching experience of our lives. Well, indeed, might anyone covet the privilege of a mission presidency. I am sure my feelings in this matter reflect the heartfelt verdict of all the men and women who have been privileged to enjoy such an appointment. The people in the mission field have a simplicity of faith that to me is admirable. In the stakes of Zion we argue a good deal about this principle or that principle, and we indulge in debates and didactics. Out in the mission field the Saints take for granted the verity, truthfulness and substantiality of the principles of the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. And they represent the acquisition we have made in the world in our attempt to gather Israel to the fold of Christ. In their total, especially when we consider their remoteness from the headquarters of the Church, they are a commendable acquisition and a substantial corroboration of the affirmation the Church makes that it represents the power and the authority of God upon the earth.

Now, I want to say that I feel a sense of pride in standing here at this pulpit. This is the greatest pulpit in all the world. I sincerely believe that more truth, more of the logic and wisdom of religion, and more of the warmth, substance and loveliness of correct instruction have gone forth from this pulpit than from any other pulpit on earth. One thing that always pleases me is that there is no effort on the part of those who speak from this pulpit to reach for something exalted, captivating or fascinating. They just labor on diligently in the exposition of the truth. My dear friends, that's what we need, and every time I come here I find myself the beneficiary of a great deal of truth, wholesome truth, ardently expressed and yet so clearly and simply that the wayfaring man may not err in it.

Now I have another thought about this pulpit. Ezekiel tells us, I think it is in the 36th chapter, speaking for the Lord, that the Lord will in the latter days pour out his spirit upon Israel and will cleanse Israel from all her wickedness and her evils, not for her sake particularly, but for his own name's sake, the name of the Lord, Jesus Christ. And that he will also take out of Israel as a people, and I take it also individually, their hearts of stone and will put in place thereof hearts of flesh. The Lord says—and I think he is speaking to us—that he will put his law in our inward parts, in our subconscious mind, that we shall react to his law instinctively, just as we breathe, just as the organs of respiration, the organs of digestion, the nervous system operate under natural law. And he further says he will write his law on our hearts so that we shall obey his law and love his law. Now isn't that a triumphant blessing promised, somewhere in the future, for the enjoyment of Israel? That we might love the law of the Lord and instinctively follow it even as we breathe. Then he says he will call for the corn, symbolic of the vegetation of the earth, and renew it and lay no famine upon us. Then, finally, toward the end of the chapter we find this auspicious promise: "I will yet, [the Lord speaking] I will yet for this," for the doing of these things, cleansing, giving us the heart of flesh, the heart of love and brotherhood, and renewing to the earth its Edenic fruitfulness, "I will yet for this be enquired of by the House of Israel to do it for them."

Now unless my understanding of prophecy is badly distorted, I feel confident that whenever that prayer, representative of modern Israel, is sent forth to the Lord that modern Israel might enjoy the fulfillment of the prophecies of that marvelous chapter in Ezekiel, such prayer must be uttered here at this pulpit and with the voice and the authority that have presided here. This is truly the House of the Lord.

May God bless us, my friends, may he bless the rank and file of this Church, everywhere, with the firm conviction that we stand at the very threshold of the richest and most fruitful fulfillments of prophecy that the world has ever seen, and that we must, ourselves, do very much toward their fulfillment, is my prayer through Christ, our Lord, Amen.

President David O. McKay:

The Deseret Stake Choir will now sing "God Is Our Refuge and Strength."

The closing prayer will be offered by President Glen S. Burt, Riverside Stake, Salt Lake City, after which this conference will stand adjourned until 2:00 o'clock this afternoon.

The proceedings for the afternoon session will be broadcast over KSL of Salt Lake City and by arrangement through KSL over the stations that have been already named. The proceedings of this afternoon's session will be televised over KSL, television station, channel five.

The closing prayer was offered by President Glen S. Burt of the Riverside Stake. Conference adjourned until 2 p.m.

SECOND DAY

AFTERNOON MEETING

Conference reconvened Saturday afternoon, September 30, at 2:00.

President George Albert Smith presided and, at President Smith's request, President J. Reuben Clark, Jr., First Counselor in the First Presidency, conducted the services of this meeting.

The Choir music for this meeting was furnished by the Deseret Stake Choir, Elder Ladd R. Cropper, director. Elder Roy M. Darley, Assistant Tabernacle organist, was at the organ.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

This is the fourth session of the One Hundred Twenty-first Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square, Salt Lake City, Utah.

President George Albert Smith, President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, is present and presiding. He has asked J. Reuben Clark, Jr., speaking, to conduct the services.

These services will be broadcast in the Assembly Hall and in Barratt Hall (60 North Main) over a loud speaking system and by television.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over station KSL of Salt Lake City and by arrangement through KSL, over the stations named in the first session of the Conference.

This session will also be televised over the KSL television station, channel five.

The choir singing for this session will be furnished by the Deseret Stake Choir, Elder Ladd R. Cropper, director, and Elder Roy M. Darley at the organ.

We will begin the services by the Deseret Stake Choir singing "For The Strength of The Hills."

The opening prayer will be offered by President N. Russell Tanner of Weber Stake, Utah.

---

The Deseret Stake Choir sang the hymn "For The Strength of The Hills."

President N. Russell Tanner of the Weber Stake offered the opening prayer.

The Deseret Stake Choir sang "Christian, the Morning Breaks Sweetly O'er Thee."

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

Elder Joseph Anderson, Clerk of the Conference, will now read the vital statistical data, the changes in the ward and stake organizations, and the obituaries of the Church.

---

Elder Joseph Anderson, Clerk of the Conference, read the following report:

ELDER THORPE B. ISAACSON

Second Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

I am very glad I made it this far. At the opening session of the conference President Smith said this was a beautiful picture, and it certainly is a magnificent sight, but I would like to have some of you brethren looking at it now.

My dear brothers and sisters, you of the radio audience, and you who are following the conference on television, I am grateful for the privilege of attending this conference in this house which was dedicated to the service of the Lord. Nevertheless, I always fear and tremble as I stand here, and I will be very grateful if I might have an interest in your faith and prayers, because I know I need the Lord now—I need him always. I confess that I have waited upon the Lord. I believe I know my limitations. I have prayed, and I have wanted to be humble, and I believe my soul is bowed.

TRIBUTE TO PRESIDENT RICHARDS

I, too, would like to pay tribute at this time to President George

F. Richards. I am very grateful to my Father in heaven that I had the privilege of knowing him intimately. He loved this people. He loved this Church; and the people loved him. These conferences were a great comfort to his soul, and he, in turn, always gave us beautiful and wise counsel. He was truly one of God's noblemen. I am particularly grateful for a blessing that I received at his hands, and I sincerely pray to my Father in heaven that he will never permit me to forget that choice blessing.

I had a birthday a few days ago, a month after the passing of President George F. Richards, and on the day of my birthday I received a letter signed by President George F. Richards, written in his own handwriting, that his good wife had kept and mailed to me the day before my birthday. He had written that letter just the day before he died. I shall always treasure that letter, and in it he gives me some advice that I need.

This great tabernacle that we are meeting in now was commenced in the year 1863, nearly a hundred years ago. The Lord inspired the brethren to build this house, and it was first used for a general conference such as this in the year 1867, and it was dedicated as a house of the Lord.

CONFERENCES STRENGTHEN SPIRITUALLY

Spiritually I am strengthened as I attend these great conferences of the Church. The Lord revealed to the Brethren that conferences should be held, both general conference and stake conference, so that we could be spiritually strengthened and instructed in our duties.

It is very good to be here to worship God, our Eternal Father, together. We are here for no other purpose. We have no selfish interests. We come here to thank our Father in heaven for the blessings that we enjoy as a people. We come here and unite our faith, and when all of us together can unite our faith humbly, then the Spirit of the Lord is here in rich abundance. It is good to be here and pray together, and when we say "Amen" to these prayers, we have prayed together, and the prayers have been so beautiful and strengthening. It is good to be here and sing together. It is good to be here and hear the word of the Lord as we have heard yesterday and today and that we will hear during the remainder of the conference. It is good to be here and be taught the gospel of Jesus Christ. It is good to be here and partake of the Spirit of the Lord, and as is stated in Genesis: "Truly this is God's house."

MISSIONARY LETTER

As we come here to be instructed and to draw near to the Lord, I am reminded of a letter that I received the other day from a nephew of mine who is on a mission over in Finland. Brother Stephen L

Richards had just been there and spoken to these missionaries, and I would like to quote from a paragraph in this missionary's letter.

Last week it was a real privilege to hear Apostle Stephen L Richards and also to see and feel the example that he is, the spirit which he radiates. I sometimes am afraid these Apostles of God which live in our midst today may not be appreciated for what they really are. Many people do not realize that these men are truly Apostles of God in the same sense of the word that Peter, James, and John were Apostles of God, our Father. This great Apostle who was inspired of the Lord stood in front of us this day and told us about the things of our Father in heaven, and I shall never forget one thing that he said to us: "The things of men are understood by the spirit of men, and the things of God are understood by the spirit of God."

LORD INSPIRES LEADERS

I, too, know and bear testimony that every one of these Apostles is truly an Apostle of God, our Eternal Father. I want to bear testimony in all humility that I know that the Lord inspires his leaders. Many times I have seen decisions made that for the moment I could not understand nor could I comprehend, but it was only days, yes, only hours, until I knew that the decisions that had been made were truly the decisions inspired of our Father in heaven.

I am grateful for the privilege I have of living in this day and age when the gospel has been restored. I am grateful for a little old grandfather who in his youth accepted the gospel in far-off Denmark. I am grateful that the Spirit of the Lord came into his bosom and told him that it was true. I am grateful that he had the courage and that he listened to that spirit. He had to leave his native land, his parents, and his brothers and sisters, never again to see them; but oh, how he loved the Lord, and how the Lord blessed him all the days of his life.

MISSION OF PROPHET JOSEPH

I am grateful for the mission of the Prophet Joseph. I am grateful that he read that passage of scripture because he lacked wisdom. He was confused. He read that passage of scripture that we ought to read today and practise:

If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him.
But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering. (James 1:5-6.)

He believed in God, and he went into the Sacred Grove, a natural place for him to go and kneel down and pray, just back of his father's home. I don't suppose we can ever imagine how he must have felt when God and his Son appeared to him. He saw them; they spoke to him; and as a result of that great event, one of the great events of the ages, it has been made possible for you and me to be members of the Church of God, our Eternal Father. I am grateful for our parents and our grandparents who had that faith, who did not have the learning of men, but oh, they had the faith of God. Their testimony was indeed strong. Yes, if we lack wisdom, let us ask of God. He has promised us if we would seek after him, we would truly find him. I know that God hears and answers prayers. I can confess humbly, publicly, that I know I would not be able to do my work if the Lord withheld from me his blessings in response to my petitions and my prayers. God has said: "Pray always, and I will pour out my blessings upon you." Yes, he has said,

Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. (Malachi 3:10.)

Other promises and other blessings go with all the commandments of the Lord.

REDEDICATION OF LIVES

Now as we attend these conferences, oh if we could rededicate our lives, and put aside those things that matter little. Sometimes I ponder over the things that I have foolishly placed value on that mean little or nothing.

I would like to ask you, "When are you the happiest?" You're the happiest when you are trying your best to serve the Lord with all your heart, with all your might, and with all your strength. And I would like to ask you when you're the most unhappy? You're the most unhappy when you fail to do those things that the Lord has commanded you to do. Happiness, true happiness, comes from serving the Lord every day as best you can, trying just a little harder today than you did yesterday.

It is marvelous to be associated with the Latter-day Saints. We love you as we come to you in your wards and your stakes. You're a great inspiration to us. Sometimes we try to encourage you, but, oh, the comfort you bring to us from your faith and your prayers and your encouragement to us.

OUR SERVICEMEN

Now I would like to say just one word about the servicemen. I wish you could all have heard Brother McConkie last night at our bishops' meeting. My heart goes out to this group of boys who have been called away from their loved ones; who have been called away from their wives, their farms, their businesses, their schools; many of them wanted to go on missions. They'll not have that privilege now, at least temporarily, but, oh, I hope that as a Church, that as a people, not only we who have sons of our own, but that all will unite our faith that the Lord will bless these young men. They didn't bring this on themselves. They go because it is their duty to their country. They don't like war; they don't like hatred; and they don't like killing. But they are called into the service of their country. Many of them have just been married, some of them only married a couple of years, some of them only a short time. They are entitled to live and to love and to rear their families and build their homes. It would not matter so much if it were some of the rest of us who have nearly lived our lives; but may our faith and prayers go out to these young men. Pray for them diligently, for, as Brother Bowen said this morning, "If this Church could unite our faith, if we can humble ourselves and petition the Lord regularly that these boys may be blessed, I'm sure that God will look down in his tender mercy upon them." May we pray every day of our lives, pray harder than we have ever prayed before that God in his mercy will stay the hand of the leaders of nations, that this conflict may not become a dreadful conflict that could ruin thousands and millions of innocent young men, leave many widows, and many children fatherless.

LETTERS OF ENCOURAGEMENT

May we write to those young men diligently. May we promise them that we are praying for them with all the faith and prayer and testimony that we can muster. It isn't enough that we leave that just to the parents of these boys. Surely they will write to them nearly every day of their lives. They'll need you. They are not in places of worship. They are in an environment that is not good, and you know it, and I know it; so when we know that, is it asking too much that we exercise our faith and our prayers in their behalf that they can come back, that they can yet have the privilege of living and loving and raising their families as God intended? Oh, I am sure the Lord must not be pleased with the world conditions of today.

Many of these young men returned from the service three or four years ago. They didn't ever expect to be called back to the armed services again. Some of them signed up as reserve officers, but they did not expect to be called back into bloody conflict in just four or five years. Many parents have already received that sad letter which starts out "We regret to inform you." Oh, may we pray to God Almighty, that he will spare the lives of our boys, that they can come back and fulfil their places in the Church as they have desired to do.

THE LORD'S PRAYER IN KOREA

I did receive a ray of hope today when I read that just yesterday the United Nations commander directed the Lord's prayer. Seldom has the Lord's prayer been uttered in such solemnity or in such grim surroundings. Yesterday it was spoken in a battered Korean capital, in the legislative halls where glass came tinkling down from the wrecked dome at intervals, and where the galleries were guarded, where they kept close watch in all directions, and where the Korean guards stood outside, draped in grenades. They themselves were walking bombs. The leader of the Lord's prayer yesterday was General Douglas MacArthur. He stood behind the speaker's desk on the speaker's platform, with light showing the gravity of his lean physique. Before him the congregation at this place of thanksgiving consisted of brass hats in army uniforms; haggard, unshaven marines and soldiers; and many weary-looking war correspondents and other people. The war air was tainted with smoke and death; smashed and burning buildings stood along the streets; columns of reverse refugees were now trying to find home. Then Douglas MacArthur came to that part of his address where he was about to read the Lord's prayer, and he hesitated for a very long solemn moment, and then that great man raised his hands and stood up and asked everybody to quote the Lord's prayer, and he stated, "In humble and devout manifestation of gratitude to Almighty God for bringing this decisive victory to our arms, I ask that all present rise and join me in reciting the Lord's prayer." There was the rumbling shuffle of many rising to their feet such as you might hear in a great church. Off came the camouflaged helmets, the canvas hats, the navy caps, the snappy, blue air-force hats—all were bowed as they repeated the Lord's prayer. It was truly the act of a Christian gentleman. Oh, that that same spirit, that same confidence in God, our Eternal Father, could be in the hearts of all men who are holding responsible positions!

I bear you my testimony that I know that God lives. I know that the spirit of the Holy Ghost is understandable. I know that it is clear. I know that we can hear it if we will only try and listen to it as it speaks to us. And in closing, I would like to give my favorite little quotation:

Oh, the joy and comfort that comes from feeling safe with a group like you, having neither to weigh my thoughts nor measure my words, but pouring them out from my heart, just as I have today, chaff and grain together, feeling certain that some kind friend here will accept what's worth keeping and with a breath of kindness, blow the rest away.

God bless you, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Deseret Stake Choir and the congregation sang the hymn, "How Firm A Foundation," Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

Elder Henry D. Moyle, of the Council of the Twelve, will now speak to us. Elder Delbert Leon Stapley, newly sustained member of the Council of the Twelve, will follow Elder Moyle.

ELDER HENRY D. MOYLE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My brethren and sisters, I am indeed grateful for this opportunity to bear my testimony to you and to those who listen in. I am grateful to be counted a member of the great Church and kingdom of God here upon earth. And I am especially grateful that my life was touched as closely and as intimately as it was by the life of our departed President, George F. Richards. I want to join with my other brethren today in paying respect to his memory. He will always stand in my memory as a man of God whose testimony of the divinity of the work in which we are engaged will ever burn in my heart. It has increased my testimony and the intensity thereof because I know that what he knew and what he testified to was true. I am also very grateful for the close association I have had both in the Church and out with our departed brother, Frank Evans. I had the privilege of practising law in the same courts and in the same counties as did he. And whether it was in his profession or in his Church activities, he exemplified the highest virtues that we find in our fellow men.

ARMY OF RIGHTEOUSNESS

As I have sat here during this conference and looked into your faces, I have been conscious of the fact that we represent but a small part of this great body of men and women whose lives are dedicated to the work incident to the establishing of the kingdom of God here on earth. If we had a building which would hold twenty times as many people as are here today, we would hardly have as many people as we meet every three months in our quarterly conferences throughout the Church. Just think of it: A great army of righteousness contending against evil! What a power and what a force we are in the world. It was in 1899 that President Heber J. Grant spoke these words:

The Latter-day Saints are indeed, as the Prophet Joseph Smith said they would be, a mighty people in the midst of the Rocky Mountains, and we are simply in our infancy. We are beginning to grow and become a mighty people, but we are nothing to what we will be. There is no question in my mind but what the Lord is going to multiply the Latter-day Saints and bless them more abundantly in the future than he has ever done in the past, provided of course that we are humble and diligent, provided we seek for the advancement of God's kingdom and do not do our own mind and will. (Conference Report, April 1899, p. 28.)

WHAT IS IMPORTANT?

I'd like to say a few words this afternoon about that Latter subject. There are so many people on the earth today who desire to do their own will rather than the will of the Father. And whenever I think of these people, I wonder what there is that we can do in our ministry to touch their lives, cause them to realize the blessings that are incident to obedience to the laws of God. What is there in life, after all, that is so important that we cannot and should not set it aside to do our full duty to our maker? The Savior said to his disciples of old:

Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. (1 John 2:15.)

Is there anything the world has to offer us today that is as precious as the truths of the gospel of Jesus Christ? The gospel brings comfort and joy into our lives, gives us a sense of security which the world cannot offer to us. Some people today, and today is a day of prosperity, become so attached to their wealth that they become sufficient to themselves. They cease to be dependent upon God. They sense no necessity for any direction from him, and they go their own way. Just as certainly as they do, they gradually lead themselves on toward destruction. When the Lord blesses us with wealth and with prosperity, we have a great mission to perform. We can utilize that which the Lord has given us so beautifully to build up his kingdom, to help one another, and to accomplish good, and to be the more dependent upon our Father in heaven rather than less. As a matter of fact, prosperity, economically speaking, is not the only force in the world that draws us away from the things of God and builds us up in our own estimation—leads us to criticize the prophets of God here upon the earth, thinking that our judgment and our wisdom are superior to theirs. It seems that when men gain power on this earth, whether it be political or otherwise, they build up within themselves an egotism which destroys that simple faith in God which is so essential for men who are charged with important responsibilities in public life and elsewhere to possess.

RELIGION, MORALITY NECESSARY

Brother Bowen read to us this morning from the farewell address of President George Washington. Washington realized that religion and morality are the pillars which uphold the Constitution of the United States, and without which the Constitution would fall. Washington also realized and exemplified in his life the necessity for religion and morality in the lives of those charged with the responsibility of maintaining our Constitution, and without which men will be led away from the truth. Men will be led to follow the course which will ultimately destroy the Constitution rather than uphold it, against their very oaths of office, if they once throw off the cloak of morality and of religion. No one can fail to uphold the Constitution and be a good citizen, much less a worthy public officer. One who disregards the Constitution is not worthy of our patronage, politically or otherwise.

It grieved me very much this year to hear a man running for public office decry the fact that another man in the opposite political camp had religion with him, as though that totally disqualified him for public office. When men, in the exercise of the power which they hold by virtue of the offices in the government to which they are elected, begin to discredit religion, they cease to become fit to hold public office. And I hope and pray that we as a people shall be led to exercise the rights which are ours in this great government of ours to vote for those men who have some religious conception and who seek to ordain their lives in accordance with the principles of truth and of right; men who respect, uphold, obey, honor, and sustain the Constitution of the United States.

ORGANIZATIONS SPRING UP

We have in our midst social organizations. They seem to be springing up every day in one shape or another; and because there is some power, some distinction, some prerogative that goes with those who become members and the heads of these organizations (whether they be purely social or otherwise), many seem to think that's more important in their lives than to magnify the callings which are theirs in the priesthood. We have heard something said this morning about learning, and the same thing holds true for that. As we become absorbed with the wisdom and the learning and the philosophy of men, unless we have a humility and a faith about us, we shall be led astray just as certainly as wealth or power might accomplish the same purpose. There is a very slight margin between good and bad in our lives. Sometimes when I see my friends erring a little, I wonder why it is they can't remove that margin and be as strong and faithful in keeping the commandments of the Lord as their neighbor.

I want to say that my heart goes out to you brethren and sisters here today and to those in the wards and stakes of the Church who are so faithful to the callings which are yours, and who seek so earnestly to magnify the priesthood which is yours. I am sure that history in no age of the world could record any greater faithfulness than we find today in the lives of our bishops, our stake presidents, and those who labor under them in the stakes and wards of this Church. When I look into the faces of these brethren who have returned from their missions as mission presidents, I have a sense of reverence for their integrity, their loyalty, their faithfulness, their courage. These men have been willing to give up their business and their professions, leave their families and homes, and go out into the world, and remain just as long as their call extends, not worrying about what happens in the future. There is no wealth, there is no political position, there is no power or social distinction which could come to these men that could tempt them in the least.

INSTILL FAITH, DEVOTION

And so it is our purpose in the Church to go out among the people in the wards and stakes and see whether we can instill in their hearts the kind of faith and devotion which we find in these great mission presidents of ours. It is one of the joys of my life to be able to go into a mission and become intimately acquainted and associated with these men as they direct the efforts of the sons and daughters of Israel in the mission field. They give to us an example which we, that is, most of us, endeavor to reflect in our own lives. I am sure that as we reflect this into the lives of those over whom we preside, this great Church and kingdom of God on earth will continue to grow and develop even as President Grant said it would in 1899. I am sure that prophecy is yet unfulfilled. We are still in our infancy, and we still have all these worldly forces and powers to combat and to overcome.

We have a few simple remedies which have been given to us of the Lord by which to accomplish his purpose; I don't know of any remedy more effective than ward teaching. If the bishops and the stake presidents would see to it that this work was entered into in the true spirit of the priesthood, the spirit of this work as the Lord intended it, we'd be able to touch the lives of these people. As a matter of fact, we'd even be able to live close to those who hold public office if our ward teachers visited them once a month and called their attention to the duties and responsibilities they owe to the people who elected them to that office.

RIGHTEOUSNESS IN OFFICE

I would like to say one more word about public office. There seems to be a tendency among us in this state, and I presume even more so in others, to think that when we act as mayor of a city or in a city council, we are not required to exercise that same degree of righteousness that we would in our own individual lives. I have particularly in mind today a case where a mayor and a city council thought that it was perfectly proper for them to violate the laws of the state of Utah and to carry on in their city parimutuel betting, gambling in one of its worst forms, in connection with horse racing held there during one of their city celebrations. They seemed to think, when their acts were challenged, that because they held public office and the city treasury received the income from those vices they were completely justified. Let us stop for a moment and see where such reasoning would ultimately lead us. If every city in Utah did that same thing, then the mayors and the city councils would nullify the laws of the state legislature. They would take unto themselves powers that do not belong to them. They would abrogate the law by their own illegal and immoral practices. But, say the people of this one town, they don't all do it, and we're the ones that got this idea up and we ought to be able to continue to profit by it. I asked them one simple question. Who is it that comes to your city to attend these races? Well, they come from all over the state. Now isn't that the answer? Has any mayor, has any city council the right to carry on illegally, gambling in the city under the auspices of the police power of the city and invite everybody else from the state in, so that city might profit by preying upon the weaknesses of others, inviting as it were the public to come there and not only exhibit their weaknesses but also lose their money. It cannot be any more objectionable for the individual to carry on gambling within the city than it would be for the city itself. It seems to me, as a matter of fact, that those who have taken a solemn oath to uphold and sustain the laws and the Constitution of the land should be the last to violate them no matter in whose name they might do it.

EXERCISE FRANCHISE INTELLIGENTLY

I hope and pray that this coming election will indicate to the world the steadfastness of the Latter-day Saints in their determination to move forward as an army of righteousness, to fight evil in all its forms wherever it is met by putting into office men and women who will stand for our highest ideals, morally and religiously. We should be discerning when we seek to exercise any of the rights that are ours. We should see that those rights are exercised intelligently, that we know whom we are voting for, and what they stand for when we vote for them. It is our privilege, yes, our duty, to know the position legislators will take on all matters of interest to us. Will those who seek our patronage at the ballot box, if elected to the legislature of this state, vote for sale of liquor by the drink? Will they vote for horse racing with parimutuel betting, gambling on the side? Will they otherwise let down the bars of morality and permit men to come into our communities and prey upon the weaknesses of the flesh. No man ought to be very proud of his accomplishments if those accomplishments consist of capitalizing upon the human weaknesses and frailties of others. Generally speaking, it is the young people, the boys and girls, who are naturally inclined to be a little reckless. They get in the groove, as it were, in the habit of gambling, by learning that most vicious habit of trying to get something for nothing. It is prevalent today in the individual lives of our people and in all of our government units to give the people as much as possible for nothing and to see how little the people shall ultimately be required to work for what they get. I hope and pray that the day will come when every Latter-day Saint will stand for the enthroning of labor and industry and thrift. God bless us to be wise, to be discreet and discriminating and discerning, and to utilize every force and every asset that we have to see to it that our governments are conducted by men who uphold the Constitution unconditionally, who believe in God, who lend obedience to his commandments, I pray humbly in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

Elder Delbert Leon Stapley, newly sustained member of the Council of the Twelve, will be our next speaker and he will be followed by President J. Reuben Clark, Jr., of the First Presidency.

Congratulations Brother Stapley, upon the great honor and high responsibility that have come to you.

ELDER DELBERT LEON STAPLEY

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

Brothers and sisters, I feel more keenly than ever that what President Clark has just said is true. I am grateful I had the stop-over privilege on the way up to the pulpit, otherwise I am fearful I would not have made the grade. I stand before you in all humility. I am very humble about this call, and I know I require the blessings of the Lord if I fulfil such a high responsibility. I know, too, that I require your love and confidence, your faith and prayers, for it is my desire since receiving this appointment, with the help of the Lord, to give it the best that I am capable of giving.

LOVE FOR BRETHREN

I would like to tell you just a little about the call because it is a testimony, at least to me. But first I would like to say that I love these brethren, the General Authorities. I know them all, and I have had the privilege as a counselor in a stake presidency and as president of a stake to work with them. I appreciate their high spiritual leadership, their fine counsel and advice. I have been coming to general conferences for a long time, and it has been my privilege to raise my hand to sustain these brethren, and I have always tried to do just that. Most of my life I have been actively engaged in the Church. I love the Church; I love to work in the Church. I delight in working with people. I am sure this calling gives me that opportunity.

CALL TO THE COUNCIL

Thursday, having some stake business to transact just following the noon hour, but understanding the General Authorities were in session, I thought I had time to go down the street to visit a friend of mine before they returned to their offices. As I got out of the elevator in the Hotel Utah, whom should the Lord place in my path but President George Albert Smith. There is no one I would rather see, for I have known and loved him for a long time. As a boy I remember his coming into my father's home representing the General Authorities as a stake conference visitor. When I went on my mission to the Southern States, President Smith set me apart for that mission. When my wife and I were married in the Salt Lake Temple, President Smith officiated. When he was General Superintendent of the Mutual Improvement Association, I was superintendent of the Maricopa Stake Mutual Improvement Association. During the dedication of the Arizona Temple at Mesa, President Smith and his lovely wife lived with us for a period of two weeks. He has been in our home, and I have seen him many times since. To us he is a very dear person.

And so here he was, blocking my way. He said, "President Stapley, you are just the man I am looking for." There in the lobby of Hotel Utah he told me that it was the wish of the Brethren that I come on the Council. Well, I saw him to the door, and I am sure I must have looked like a ghost because people were staring at me as I walked back into the hotel, and I thought, surely everyone knows. I went up to the room and called my wife from an adjoining room. I just couldn't speak, I was so overcome with emotion. She tried for a long time to find out what was wrong. She thought surely something serious had happened to me. Well, to some people, perhaps, it had. But when I finally composed myself and told her about the interview with President Smith, the only consideration I received from her was full encouragement to accept the assignment.

APPRECIATION OF WIFE

I deeply appreciate my good wife for the position she took, and I know that in this work if it were not for good wives, the men could not succeed in such high callings. I have learned to rely completely upon these Presiding Brethren, and I know when I sustain them, as being accepted of the Lord, I too am accepted of the Lord and our Heavenly Father.

Brothers and sisters, that is true of all of us. When we receive and follow those whom the Lord has chosen, we are accepted of the Lord and our Heavenly Father.

BLESSING FULFILLED

Now just one other thing. As I was passing through Salt Lake City on my way to the Southern States Mission, I received a patriarchal blessing from Hyrum G. Smith, the father of our present Patriarch to the Church. I haven't read that blessing for some little time, but after this call came, two things in that blessing stood out in my mind that impressed me very greatly. One was that I would be called into positions of responsibility and trust. And this, in a measure, I have enjoyed along the way, but the crowning achievement is in this appointment to the apostleship. And the other was that I would travel much for the gospel's sake. Well, I didn't know when and how in the work I was doing I would be able to realize this blessing. I never expected to be called into this position, but it does open up the way whereby this blessing will be realized. And so I'm grateful to the faithful patriarchs of the Church who enjoy the spirit of their calling, and for the ability they have to lay out before us our pattern of life, and I know if we keep in the way of God's commandments, we will realize that pattern of life.

I have a testimony of this gospel. It is a great Church, and I enjoy working in it, and I hope, brothers and sisters, that I may get acquainted with you in this responsibility and gain your love and respect and confidence. I ask for your faith and prayers that I may serve you well, and I do it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

You have just listened to Elder Delbert Leon Stapley delivering his maiden talk as a newly sustained member of the Council of the Twelve of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and, as you brothers and sisters know, he comes into the Council with the reputation of a long life of activity and usefulness and with our full faith and confidence.

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

First Counselor in the First Presidency

I feel very humble, brothers and sisters, standing before you today, and it is my dearest hope that the spirit which has thus far been present in this conference will continue with us while I speak. And to that end may I humbly ask for faith and your prayers, that I may be led to say something that will be helpful to you and to all who are listening in.

I might begin by adding my tribute to that great soul who is not with us today, who was here last time, President George F. Richards. I have never known a man of finer spirit, greater integrity, more devotion, more loyalty than President George F. Richards possessed or exercised in his life.

Brother Frank Evans also was a splendid character, a man of great ability, a man whose place it will be hard to fill.

We are met here today as members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints—and I am impressed with that name, The Church of Jesus Christ. I would like to say a few words today based on the necessity of our remembering that name and of our yielding loyalty and obedience thereto.

SERMON ON MOUNT OF OLIVES

Out on the Mount of Olives, the day before the crucifixion, the Lord preached a great sermon to his Apostles, in which he spoke of the times that were to come. The Prophet Joseph has given us a revised translation of that great speech. In that speech he spoke of the times when the anti-Christ would come. He also spoke of the destruction of Jerusalem and what should precede that event, apparently the destruction which came under Titus. You may have to read the discourse with care to determine when the Lord was speaking of the one and then of the other, but the revised translation will help you in your study.

At that time, the Apostles seemingly felt, and they felt thereafter, that the second coming of the Savior was near at hand. That was nearly two thousand years ago. In those early days of the Church, shortly after the Apostles began their work, there began to be "fallings away" from those who had joined the Church. There were a number of things that led to that: perhaps not a full understanding of the gospel, their association and proximity, their elbow rubbing with pagan religions, and other things. But in that time, Peter warned them of what he called "damnable heresies," and the Apostle Paul, in his epistles to Timothy and to Titus, spoke more specifically of the wickedness and the transgressions which were among the people, and warned Timothy and Titus to warn the people.

In our own modern revelation, the Prophet Nephi has spoken of these days when men would set up their own reason and their own learning against the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, and he warned us to beware of such doctrines.

HERESIES NOW PRESENT

I want to refer briefly to two or three of the old heresies that are now present amongst us. You will hear among our intellectuals not infrequently that the God of the Old Testament is different from the God of the New Testament; that the God of the Old Testament has evolved into the God of the New—rather a rapid evolution, if it were true. That doctrine had its base in what we know as Marcionism, which appeared very early in the church. The doctrines of Marcion seem to have been founded upon the hatred which he bore toward the Jews and his determination to try to wipe out belief in all that God had done with the Jews, and to destroy the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. When that doctrine is reduced down, it means this: that God is what man conceives him to be; that man creates his God, instead of God creating man. No greater falsehood can be promulgated than that.

ARIANISM

Another heresy which appeared in the early days was known as Arianism and that was called Sabellianism, which identified as one being, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. This man Arius, apparently a resident of Alexandria and a member of the Egyptian church, in order to get away from that concept, developed the idea, the doctrine, that Jesus was merely a mortal man, a man of exceptional power, wisdom, and with a great code of ethics. That was in substance the contention. Marcionism destroyed God and Arianism destroyed the Christ. These two false doctrines shook the early Christian church. That doctrine of Arianism is with us today. As a matter of fact, it would seem that the Protestant churches themselves are largely tinctured with it. They no longer, apparently, preach the simple doctrine that Jesus Christ is the Son of the Living God, but on the other hand they gloss that over and talk about his greatness, which, of course, he had. I want us to be warned against the appearance of these doctrines, because they are grievous sins.

PAGANISTIC IMMORALITY

The third thing I want to mention is paganistic immorality. Among some ancient peoples it had advanced, immorality had, to such a stage of depravity that they actually set up in the worship of some of the pagan deities, religious prostitutes, who, as a matter of religion, offered themselves in the temple precincts to those who were devotees of that religion.

The same elements that had to do with that doctrine are at work amongst us. There is an effort made in some quarters to destroy all idea of the sanctity of chastity. In some quarters it is taught that the urge of sex is like the urge of hunger and thirst and should be equally satisfied. That doctrine is from the devil and will lead to destruction for any man, any woman, any people that espouse it and practise it.

Now, coming back to the Savior, he said: "For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" (Matthew 16:26.)

EVIDENCE ABOUT THE SAVIOR

The evidence about the Savior and his identity has been accumulating over the years, both by experience from him, himself, and by the testimonies of those who have been privileged to receive a testimony and a knowledge that he lives. We will note some great testimonies.

On several occasions the Savior himself declared to those who were about him that he was the light of the world, the light that shineth in the darkness, and the darkness comprehendeth it not. He made this statement to the multitude who remained after he had forgiven and dismissed the woman who was taken in adultery. He made the same statement to those who were in attendance when he healed the man blind from his birth at the pool of Siloam. He has made it in modern times, in our modern revelations, over and over again, where he has said, changing it a little bit: "I am the life and the light of the world." (D. & C. 12:9.) When he was in the temple shortly before the crucifixion, when he was speaking to the Father, he said his soul was troubled; should he say save me from this hour; yet, he added, for the very purpose of enduring this hour he had come. He asked the Father to glorify his name, and the Father said: "I have both glorified it, and will glorify it again." (John 12:28.) Some of the people thought it thundered; others thought an angel spoke. Jesus understood.

LACK OF UNDERSTANDING

There has always been to me a great lesson in that incident. We do not always understand the Savior. We do not always understand the messages from heaven. We are not in tune. When the Savior was introduced upon this continent, the Father spoke from heaven. The people heard the noise but did not understand. He spoke again, but they did not understand. Finally, the third time, they heard and knew what he said: "Behold my Beloved Son." (III Nephi 11:7.)

When Jesus was before the Sanhedrin on the night before the crucifixion, Annas and Caiaphas were there, and the rest of them. Finally, they said to the Savior, "Art thou the Christ, the Son of the Blessed?" And he replied to them, "I am." (See Mark 14:61-62.)

You remember when he was met by Martha; you remember that colloquy at the time of the death of Lazarus. Just before Lazarus was raised, the Savior said to Martha, in the course of their conversation and near its end, "I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live:

"And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." (John 11:25-26.)

I want to read you John's testimony found at the beginning of the gospel:

In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God.

All things were made by him; and without him was not anything made that was made.

In him was life; and the life was the light of men.

And the light shineth in darkness; and the darkness comprehended it not. . . .

And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father,) full of grace and truth. (Ibid., 1:1-5, 14.)

VISIONS GIVEN

I can only refer to the great vision of Stephen and to his testimony as he died. After they had gnashed at him with their teeth and beaten him with stones, he cried out that he saw the Son sitting on the right hand of the Father. And then, as the scriptures say, before "he fell asleep" from his beating, he implored our Heavenly Father to forgive them.

Then I refer to the First Vision and its testimony when the Father and the Son came to the Prophet Joseph in the most glorious vision ever recorded in history—two beings, the one introducing the other, and the other giving the instructions. I am always lifted up by reading what is recorded in the Doctrine and Covenants of the time when Joseph and Sidney had their vision and another testimony:

The Lord touched the eyes of our understandings [they record], and they were opened, and the glory of the Lord shone round about.

And we beheld the glory of the Son, on the right hand of the Father, and received of his fulness;

And saw the holy angels, and them who are sanctified before his throne, worshipping God, and the Lamb who worship him forever and ever.

And now, after the many testimonies which have been given of him, this is the testimony, last of all, which we give of him: That he lives! For we saw him, even on the right hand of God; and we heard the voice bearing record that he is the Only Begotten of the Father—

That by him, and through him, and of him, the worlds are and were created, and the inhabitants thereof are begotten sons and daughters unto God. (D. & C. 76:19-24.)

TESTIMONY

Out on the Mount of Olives on the night before the crucifixion, just before he went into the garden, the Christ said: "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." (John 17:3.)

My brothers and sisters, this is the testimony which we have. This is the testimony that we must retain. I bear you my testimony, born of the spirit, that Jesus is the Christ; that as Peter said: "There is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved"; (Acts 4:12) that he is the Only Begotten of the Father; that salvation comes through him and only through him; and I bear you my testimony that we have the restored gospel, that Joseph Smith was a prophet, and that all those who have followed him as Presidents of the Church are prophets, seers, and revelators. I bear you this testimony in the hope that it may strengthen others as well as strengthen my own, and I pray that God's choicest blessings be with you, and I do it in the name of the Lord, Jesus Christ. Amen.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

The Deseret Stake Choir will now sing "Freedom and Brotherly Love," after which the closing prayer will be offered by President Frederick Charles Horlacher, Nevada Stake, and this Conference will stand adjourned until 7 o'clock, when, in accordance with the custom of the Church, the General Meeting of the Priesthood of the Church will be held in this building. Only those holding the Priesthood are invited to be present. Persons not holding the Priesthood will kindly refrain from attempting to enter the building. That session will not be broadcast. The Assembly Hall will be opened for television with loud speakers, and likewise Barratt Hall.

The session tomorrow morning at 10:00 o'clock will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City, and by arrangement through KSL over the stations named in the first session of the Conference. That session will also be televised over the KSL television station, channel five.

The Church of the Air broadcast, on which Elder John A. Widtsoe, of the Council of the Twelve, will be the speaker, will begin at 8:30 a.m. Those desiring to attend this broadcast must be in their seats by 8:20 a.m.

The Tabernacle Choir broadcast comes from 9:00 o'clock to 9:30 tomorrow morning, immediately following the Church of the Air. As there is only a thirty second break between these two broadcasts, the doors will not be opened after they are closed for the Church of the Air broadcast, until after the Tabernacle Choir Broadcast is over, at 9:30.

The regular session of the Conference will begin at 10:00 a.m.

The choir music for today has been by the Deseret Stake Choir with Elder Ladd R. Cropper conducting and Elder Roy M. Darley at the organ.

We would like to repeat at this time the words of commendation and congratulation which were extended to this fine choir by President McKay at the close of the morning session.

At the conclusion of this meeting the General Sessions of the Conference will be adjourned until 10:00 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Singing by the choir "Freedom and Brotherly Love."

The benediction was offered by President Frederick Charles Horlacher of Nevada Stake.

Conference adjourned until Sunday morning, October 1st at 10:00 o'clock.

THIRD DAY

MORNING MEETING

Sunday, October 1.

The fifth session of the Conference convened at 10:00 a.m.,

Preliminary to the commencement of the regular Conference session the Tabernacle Choir and Organ Broadcast was presented through the courtesy and facilities of the Columbia Broadcasting System's coast-to-coast network throughout the United States.

The great Tabernacle was crowded to capacity long before the time to commence the broadcast, as were also the Assembly Hall to the south of the Tabernacle and Barratt Hall (60 North Main Street), with people who had come to hear the broadcast and to attend the Conference meeting. In addition, many people who could not find accommodation in any of these buildings assembled on the grounds and listened by means of loud speaking equipment that had been installed. The services were broadcast in the Assembly Hall and Barratt Hall over a loud speaking system and by television.

CHOIR AND ORGAN BROADCAST

The following broadcast, which was presented in the Tabernacle from 9:00 to 9:30 a.m., through the courtesy and facilities of the Columbia Broadcasting System's network, was written and announced by Richard L. Evans and originated with Station KSL, Salt Lake City.

(Organ played "As the Dew," and on signal the organ and choir broke into "Gently Raise," singing words to end of second line, and humming to end of verse for announcer's background.)

Announcer: Once more we welcome you within these walls with music and the spoken word from the Crossroads of the West.

The Columbia Broadcasting System and its affiliated stations bring you at this hour another presentation from Temple Square in Salt Lake City, with J. Spencer Cornwall conducting the Tabernacle Choir, Alexander Schreiner, Tabernacle organist, and the spoken word by Richard Evans.

We open with a hymn by Parley P. Pratt sung in a setting by J. Spencer Cornwall: "The morning breaks, the shadows flee; Lo! Zion's standard is unfurled. The dawning of a brighter day, majestic rises on the world."

(Choir sang: "The Morning Breaks"—Cornwall)

Announcer: With music from the "Messiah" we hear next a sacred song written around a glorious text taken from Isaiah: "How beautiful are the feet of Him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace . . . that publisheth salvation, that saith unto Zion Thy God reigneth."

(Choir sang: "How Beautiful are the Feet"—Handel)

Announcer: With Alexander Schreiner at the organ we turn an urgent utterance of time's passing and of endless undisclosed events as symbolized by Louis Vierne in an impelling impressionistic piece: "Westminster Chimes."

(Organist selection: "Westminster Chimes"—Vierne)

Announcer: A sacred song by Tschesnokoff on the heralding of the message to all men is sung now by the choir: "Their voice is gone out into all the earth and their words unto the very ends of the world."

(Choir sang: "Their Voice is Gone Out"—Tschesnokoff)

THE SPOKEN WORD

Sometimes we become impatient with the present. We see its evils, its uncertainties, its imperfections, and eagerly we wish for the day when things will be different. It is proper and expected that immortal man would hope for and have faith in a finer future—but of utmost importance also is the power to appreciate the present. No matter what far futures lie before us (and we earnestly believe that they are limitless and everlasting), yet always we live in the present. We may sometimes rebel at all the uncertainties and at all the undisclosed events, but those who would always force the future, who are overly impatient for it to unfold, may let the happiness and opportunities and obligations of the present pass them by. Even if we could positively foresee the road far ahead, this wouldn't alter the fact that we always live now. And happiness, after all, isn't so much a matter of rushing the future as it is of learning to "respect . . . the present hour." To be blind and indifferent to the possibilities for happiness today, is too much like closing our eyes on an endless journey, and always wondering when we are going to "get there." There is always that which leads us on, that which keeps us full of faith concerning the everlasting future, but an important part of happiness comes with learning to live each day—in the quiet companionship of loved ones, with useful and well-loved work willingly done, and with gratitude for friends, for food, for each day's protection, and for each day's endurance. Whatever we would alter, whatever evils we would outlaw, this is our day, our generation, and we had better learn to live and to "labor while it is called today," being mindful of each day's opportunities and obligations. The far future may be better. We doubt not that it will. But when the future comes, it will be called the "present." When tomorrow comes, it will be called "today." "This . . . is the day for men to perform their labors." And one of the great gifts of life—one of the surest sources of happiness—is the power to appreciate the present.

(Without announcement: Men's Chorus sang: "Guide Me to Thee"—Huish-Cornwall)

Announcer: We have heard the men's chorus of the Tabernacle Choir recall a hymn by O. P. Huish, as arranged by Mr. Cornwall, "Guide Me To Thee."

And now Alexander Schreiner turns to a hymn tune by Joseph J. Daynes: "Great God Attend While Zion Sings."

(Organ selection: "Great God Attend While Zion Sings.")

Announcer: In closing from Temple Square the choir selects a sacred song from the writings of Camille Saints-Saens, on words paraphrased from scripture: "Arise, Shine, Thy Light is Come . . . Behold, thy King cometh . . . Rejoice with all thy heart."

(Choir sang: "Arise, Shine, Thy Light is Come"—Saints-Saens-Rogers)

Announcer: Once more we leave you within the shadows of the everlasting hills. May peace be with you, this day—and always.

This concludes the eleven hundred and second presentation continuing the 22nd year of this traditional broadcast from the Mormon Tabernacle on Temple Square, brought to you by the Columbia network and its affiliated stations, originating with Radio Station KSL in Salt Lake City.

J. Spencer Cornwall conducted the singing of the Tabernacle Choir. Alexander Schreiner was at the organ. The Spoken word by Richard Evans.

Immediately following the conclusion of the Tabernacle Choir and Organ Broadcast, the proceedings of the fifth session of the Conference commenced.

President George Albert Smith:

We welcome everybody to Conference this morning.

This is the fifth session of the One-Hundred Twenty-first Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square, Salt Lake City, Utah.

These services will be broadcast in the Assembly Hall and in Barratt Hall (60 North Main Street) over a loud speaking system and by television.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over station KSL of Salt Lake City, and by arrangement through KSL over the stations named in the first session of the Conference.

This session will also be televised over the KSL television station, channel five.

The choir singing for this morning's session of the Conference will be by the Tabernacle Choir, with Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting and with Elder Alexander Schreiner at the organ.

We will begin the services by the congregation and the Tabernacle Choir singing "We Thank Thee, O God, For a Prophet."

The opening prayer will be offered by President John L. Clarke, Rexburg Stake, Idaho.

Singing by the choir and congregation, "We Thank Thee, O God, For a Prophet."

President John L. Clarke of the Rexburg Stake offered the invocation.

The Tabernacle Choir sang the hymn, "Joseph Smith's First Prayer."

PRESIDENT DAVID O. McKAYSecond Counselor in the First Presidency*

With President Smith and others of the brethren and with all of you I miss President George F. Richards, and our other close associate, Brother Frank Evans. However, who knows but that they may be nearer to us than we think.

TEXT

"And the two disciples heard him speak, and they followed Jesus.

"Then Jesus turned, and saw them following, and saith unto them, What seek ye? They said unto him, Rabbi, (which is to say, being interpreted, Master,) where dwellest thou?" (John 1:37-38.)

About forty years ago, a stranger sat in this Tabernacle and listened to a message such as those messages to which we have listened throughout this conference. My informant didn't tell me who spoke on that occasion, but he thought it was President Charles W. Penrose. As the stranger and his host walked out from that meeting, the visitor said to his companion, I would give all that I possess if I knew that what that man has said this afternoon is true."

Well, he would not have to give all that he possessed to know that; if he had but followed the example of these two disciples, he might have learned, as they, the truth of what President Penrose, or whoever it was, gave on that occasion.

PATH TO KNOWLEDGE

With your cooperative help and the inspiration of the Lord, I should like to mark out that path.

"What seek ye?" and the answer, "Master, where dwellest thou?" And thereby, "Come and see." These two disciples sought Jesus upon the testimony of John the Baptist, whom they had been following, and who only a day or so before, seeing Jesus walking near Jordan, said, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." (John 1:29.) It seems that none left John's side, at that time, but the next day John repeated his testimony, and these two disciples, one of whom was Andrew, Simon Peter's brother, followed Jesus. We can only conjecture how clearly or deeply they sensed the fact that in thus seeking the Son of Man they were taking the first step toward eternal life. But this we do know, that the Savior has given the divine assurance that "... this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." (John 17:3.)

QUESTS DETERMINE SUCCESSES

Man's success or failure, happiness or misery, depends upon what he seeks and what he chooses. What a man is, what a nation is, may largely be determined by his or its dominant quest. It is a tragic thing to carry through life a low concept of it.

The great writer Carlyle says, "The thing a man does practically believe, the thing a man does practically lay to heart, and know for certain concerning his vital relations to this mysterious universe, and his duty and destiny there, that is in all cases the primary thing for him, and creatively determines all the rest. This is his religion; or it may be his mere skepticism and no religion; the manner it is in which he feels himself to be spiritually related to the unseen world or no world. I say if you tell me what that is, you tell me to a very great extent what the man is, what the kind of things he will do is."

THE ALL-IMPORTANT QUEST

The disciples' answer to the question, "What seek ye?" gives a key to man's highest and noblest quest: "Master, where dwellest thou?" saying in effect, We desire to know thee and thy teachings. They stayed with Jesus all that day, for it was the ninth hour. And later Andrew sought his brother Simon and said, "... we have found the Messiah, which is, being interpreted, the Christ." (John 1:41.) "If ... thou seek the Lord thy God," is the promise coming down through the ages, "thou shalt find him, if thou seek him with all thy heart and with all thy soul." (Deut. 4:29.)

This, then, brethren and sisters, is the all-important quest of life: To seek God and Jesus Christ, to know whom is eternal life.

HOW WE MAY KNOW GOD

The messages given in this conference have directly and indirectly answered the question of how we may know him. Jesus expressed it clearly on one occasion when, attending the Feast of the Tabernacles in Jerusalem, he declared to the Jews who marveled at his preaching, "My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me.

"If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself." (John 7:16-17.)

In his Sermon on the Mount, he expressed the same thought in these words: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father, which is in heaven." (Matt. 7:21.)

HIS WILL

These statements awaken in the mind of the honest investigator the great question, "What is God's will?" If we knew it, surely we would obey it.

Well, Christ has not left us with that question unanswered. His will is summarized in the memorable reply he gave to the lawyer who asked him the question with a desire to entrap him, "Master, which is the great commandment in the law?"

Answered the Savior: ". . . Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind.

"This is the first and great commandment.

"And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets." (Matt. 22-36-39.)

Further, regarding the will of God, the Apostle Peter particularized when, on the Day of Pentecost, with one accord the people asked him and the other Apostles, ". . . Men and brethren, what shall we do?"

"Repent," answered Peter, "and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.

"For this promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off even as many as the Lord our God shall call." (Acts 2:37-39.)

To repent—this we should note carefully—is to feel regret, contrition, or compunction for what one has done or omitted to do. It means to change one's mind in regard to past or intended actions or conduct on account of regret or dissatisfaction. It means to conquer selfishness, greed, jealousy, fault-finding, and slander. It means to control one's temper. It means to rise above the sordid things which pure nature would prompt us to do to gratify our appetites and passions, and to enter into the higher or spiritual realm.

Thus we become, in the words of Peter, ". . . partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust." (II Peter 1:4.) Then Peter adds, "And beside this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge;

"And to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness;

"And to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity." (Ibid., 1:5-7.)

Now note this great promise: "For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ." (Ibid., 1:8.)

JOY FOLLOWS OBEDIENCE

These are the signposts along life's highway which if followed, will lead any man to do the Lord's will, to know his Son, the Redeemer of the world, to know whom is eternal life. And while we are gaining this great knowledge which leads to immortality, we find the greatest joy in mortality that can be experienced by the human soul.

"The best of all men are they who realize in daily life their luminous hours and transmute their ideals into conduct and character. These are the soul architects who build their thoughts and deeds into a plan, who travel forward not aimlessly but toward a destination." All the happiness that comes with spiritual gifts may be theirs—love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance, friendship, communion with the infinite; I repeat, communion with the infinite. All these and a thousand other blessings that God gives free of charge are theirs.

"Earth gets its price for what earth gives us.

" 'Tis heaven alone that is given away,

" 'Tis only God may be had for the asking." (Lowell.)

LIFE'S GREAT EXEMPLAR

High in the scale of manhood stand those who ceaselessly aspire toward life's great Exemplar. This great Exemplar is Jesus Christ, who among all leaders in history has wielded the greatest influence upon the human family.

You have asked yourself, as have thousands of others, wherein lies the secret of his greatness? You have probably answered, "Why, it is in his divinity." Well, that is true, but he came to earth as you and I, took upon himself mortality, and he exerted an influence among his fellows, in keeping with the natural laws just as each individual here exerts a natural influence. Wherein is the secret of his greatness, aside from his divinity? He defeated the lawyer in argument, healed the sick where medicine failed, inspired the greatest music ever written, filled hundreds of thousands of libraries with books, inspired missionaries to go to all the world, even to the darkest depths of Africa; yet, in none of the realms in which men and women ordinarily win their laurels do you find historians referring to Christ as having succeeded.

SUPREME IN CHARACTER

"In the realm of character," writes Charles Jefferson, "he was supreme. The only thing which places a man above the beasts of the field is his possession of the spiritual gifts which develop that Christ-like character. Man's earthly existence is but a test as to whether he will concentrate his efforts, his mind, and his soul upon the things which contribute to the comfort and gratification of his physical instincts and passions, or whether he will make as his life's end and purpose the acquisition of spiritual qualities."

Aren't you students thrilled—I hope you are—with the recent tendency among the alleged best thinkers, and I think some of them are, particularly the man who wrote Man Does Not Stand Alone, in their appeal for humanity, for mankind to rise above the low, the sensual, and develop the spirit that is within man. I think we have made the turn from agnosticism into the realm of spirituality.

PRIESTHOOD MEANS SERVICE

Last night we had here in the Tabernacle, Assembly Hall, Barratt Hall, an estimated 14,000 men who hold the priesthood. I don't know that you can find a more inspirational gathering anywhere on earth. Just to be with them was an inspiration. To those 14,000 and to those 250,000 throughout the Church who hold the priesthood I should like to say: Our lives are wrapped up with the lives of others. We are happiest as we contribute to the lives of others. I say that because the priesthood you hold means that you are to serve others. You represent God in the field to which you are assigned. "Whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it." (Matt. 16:25.) This paradoxical saying of the Savior contains the crowning element of the upright character—crowning, I say. Here we touch an important phase of the gospel of Jesus Christ. Selfishness is subdued, in which greed and avarice must be subordinated to the higher principles of helpfulness and of kindliness.

"DO HIS WILL"

"If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself." (John 7:17.) Choosing the right with unvarying and unwavering determination, resisting temptations from within and from without, cheerfulness in the face of difficulties and experiences, reverence for God and respect for your fellow men, willingness to assist in the establishment of the kingdom of God—these, though you might miss some of the emoluments of the world, will bring peace and happiness to your soul, and through obedience to the principles and ordinances of the gospel, bring immortality and eternal life. Your soul will rise in ecstasy and clearer understanding of that great word of God given in modern revelation: "This is my work and my glory, to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man." (Moses 1:39.) That friend who said he would give all in the world if he knew it was true can know if he will follow the example set down by the Savior.

In conclusion, as sure as you can tune in on the radio and hear voices from afar, so sure am I that God our Father lives, and the soul of man can commune with him through the Holy Spirit. I give you that as my testimony; I know it. So sure am I that Jesus Christ is the Savior of the world, through whom and only through whom may mankind find happiness and peace. So sure am I that the gospel of Jesus Christ has been restored through Joseph Smith, and the authority to represent God on earth is again given to man. Oh, may he give us power to proclaim these truths to an unbelieving world, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER LEVI EDGAR YOUNG

Of the First Council of the Seventy

May my words express a love for God and mankind while I speak to you, my brethren and sisters. A few friends of mine from New York, members of the Episcopal Church, are in attendance at these services. At home they attend their services at the church of St. John the Divine, one of the most beautiful places of worship ever erected in America. We bid you welcome. We are glad to have you hear something of our beliefs, something of the great truths of the Living God. We respect you in your worship and your religious beliefs. It is one of the rich sayings of Joseph Smith, the Prophet, that we believe in worshipping God according to the dictates of our own consciences, and we allow every man the same privilege, let him worship how, where, or what he may. We honor you in your worship.

TESTIMONIES OF CHURCH MEMBERS

You will hear from this pulpit this morning the testimony of every Latter-day Saint who speaks. Far and wide in the world you will hear the same testimony concerning this latter-day work which was given to the world by the word of God to the Prophet Joseph Smith. We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son, Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost. It is our testimony that God has given us the gospel of Jesus Christ, and that Joseph Smith, the Prophet, was the founder of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Testimony with us is a very divine thing. It is a sacred trust and can come only to one who has opened his heart and mind to hallowed living with earnest prayer and deep faith in God and Jesus Christ. It is the most divine gift of all, and this testimony lies deep in the heart of every member of the Church.

A MODEL CITY

When the Latter-day Saints crossed the Mississippi River in the winter of 1846 and began their journey to the far west, they left the city of Nauvoo, a city of beauty and high religious and civic life. It had been built within a short period of time, but it came to be, under the direction of the Prophet of God, the greatest city, morally, in America. There was a civic consciousness that can well become the model of the cities of our country today.

The people were rich in the Spirit of God, and they had a culture all their own. The men and their families were reduced to humble circumstances. They had little to eat, but living in their wagons drawn by mules and oxen, they were making their way to their new home in the West. They carried copies of the Bible and the Book of Mormon with them. They had come to love books of literature and history, and they sang their psalmodes by night and by day.

HERITAGE OF AMERICAN INDIAN

We have heard some of the brethren speak of the American Indians in this conference. We are carrying the gospel to all the tribes of America, and we have become particularly interested in the traditions of these people. The Night Chant of the Navajo and the Hako of the Pawnees have been translated into English. They are mysterious but beautiful dramas. The Indians, if understood, developed fine artistic feeling; and it has been said that their traditions will yet become the foundation for the richest American literature and feeling. Everyone knows that the American Indian passed on to us, and through us to the world, a heritage of utility beyond the dreams of avarice. This was in such homely things as the inestimable food plants, which he had brought from the wild to a high state of domestication. Few seem to know that he has prepared a second heritage of beauty, a gift of fine arts, illusions, and immaterial creations which rise above mere utilities as the mountains rise above the plain. "The English find in the Arthurian romance a never-failing inspiration." Americans in the future will surely realize an epic grandeur in the song sequences and world stories of the first Americans. We know that they once had their testimony of the Living God and Jesus Christ, our Redeemer. The following short poem will give an idea of the beauty of their thoughts. It was written by a Tewa Indian:

Oh, our Mother, the Earth; oh, our Father, the Sky,
Your children are we, and with tired backs
We bring you the gifts that you love.
Then weave for us a garment of brightness;
May the warp be the white light of morning,
May the weft be the red light of evening,
May the fringes be the falling rain,
May the border be the standing rainbow.
Thus weave for us a garment of brightness
That we may walk fittingly where birds sing,
That we may walk fittingly where grass is green,
Oh, our Mother, the Earth; oh, our Father, the Sky!

HIGH REGARD FOR YOUTH

We Latter-day Saints have a high regard for the youth of the world. It is our desire to have our homes influenced by the Spirit of God, that our children may grow in a knowledge of what true religion is. I think we are all agreed that one great need of the hour is to bring back the fine concept of the faith in God which our forefathers had.

Yesterday Bishop Isaacson in his address referred with feeling to this Tabernacle. In the early days of this state, the Mormon pioneers built many public buildings and memorials that bore witness to their love of the beautiful. Everything that they did to create homes and cities showed a mingling of definite religious feeling with the creations, and they thought of it all as God's work. It was from their faith and trust that their genius developed in the days of hardship and toil. There was something of emotional color in what they did, a something that made them strive to unite the work of their daily duties with the light of heaven. It was Ruskin who said that

The power of the human mind had its growth in the wilderness; much more must the conception, the love of beauty be an image of God's daily work.

MORMON TABERNACLE

This Mormon Tabernacle expresses something of the strength of character and religious idealism of the Latter-day Saints. The only building of its kind in the world, it is unique in the history of American architecture. While its massiveness suggests a people strong in spirit, conviction, and purpose, its lines indicate a splendid adoption of scientific principles in architecture. It is a plain, oval-shaped building, studded with heavy entrance doors all the way around; there is no attempt at ornamentation of any kind. The building is a fine example of the utilizing of the resources of the land for the purpose of having a place for divine worship. The building impresses one as an immense, irresistible force, "humanly super-human," an expression of sovereign intelligence and feeling. It is as the great Ibsen has said of all art, "an illumination of life." The interior impresses one with its majestic, vaulted ceiling, and "the vastness of the place grows upon one and inspires one with mingled feelings of solemnity and admiration."

WORLD-FAMED ORGAN

The building of this world-famed organ is a dramatic story. It is inseparably connected with the name of Joseph Ridges, a native of England, who went to Australia as a youth and later emigrated to America. In Australia he worked in an organ factory; while in Sydney, Elder Ridges constructed a small pipe organ, and having joined the Church, he was advised to take his instrument to Utah. He immigrated to Utah, and shipped his little organ, in tin cases, to San Pedro in California; he afterwards brought it to Utah by ox team.

In the early sixties Elder Ridges was selected by President Brigham Young to build an organ in the Tabernacle. After submitting preliminary drafts to President Young and his counselors, Elder Ridges began making arrangements for the construction of the instrument and was assisted by his associates, Shure Olsen, Neils Johnson, Henry Taylor, Frank Woods, and others. Meetings were held with these men almost daily, and the reports of each man's work were heard. While one was collecting various specimens of wood from the canyons of Utah, another was making good tools with which to carve the wood, while still a third man was experimenting in making glue. Specimens of wood were sent by people from all over Utah, and it was finally decided that the best wood was found in the hills around Parowan and in Pine Valley, about three hundred miles south of Salt Lake City. It was a fine grain of white pine variety, free from knots and without much pitch or gum. For the large pipes, it was especially well-adapted.

The large pipes, some of which measure thirty-two feet, required thousands of feet of timber. Over the long, lonely roads labored the oxen, day by day, hauling the heavy logs to Salt Lake City. At times there were as many as twenty large wagons, each with three yoke of oxen drawing its loads. The roads were rough and dusty, and many streams had to be bridged that the wagons might pass over them without difficulty.

About one hundred men were employed constantly in the construction of the organ, and it was dedicated in October 1867. It is a majestic creation, and to this day, thousands come to listen to its melodious strains. It is one of the great instruments of the world.

STATUE OF MORONI

Casting your eye to the pinnacle of the center tower of the temple, you see Cyrus Dallin's statue of the Angel Moroni, a beautiful creation by that noted sculptor, who was a native of Springville, Utah, and who died recently in Boston. I had the honor of his acquaintance. He was one of the noblest men I ever knew. One time in discussing his work, he said:

To believe in angels marks one who lives near to his God. It is one of the most beautiful concepts a man can have. I am glad I came to believe that Moroni, whoever he was in history, came back to earth again as an angel from God's throne.

This is why Dallin created his masterpiece on yonder temple.

ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF PIONEERS

Wherever you go, you will find the buildings of pioneer days always great structures with artistic features. The State of Utah had its beginning over one hundred years ago when the pioneers arrived in this valley, and it was in 1850 that the Territory of Utah was organized. The people brought with them their ideals, which they had developed at Nauvoo. That city had a university and public schools. The people built a "Seventy's Hall of Science," which was to have a great library. This is what a Methodist minister, a Mr. Briar, wrote concerning the city before the Mormons had left it:

Instead of seeing a few miserable log cabins and mud hovels, which I expected to find, I was surprised to find one of the most romantic places I had visited in the west. The buildings, though many of them were small and of wood, bore the marks of neatness which I had not seen equalled in this country. The farspread plain at the bottom of the hill was dotted over with habitations of men with such majestic profusion that I was almost willing to believe myself mistaken; and instead of being in Nauvoo, Ill., among Mormons, that I was in Italy at the City of Leghorn. . . . I gazed for some time with fond admiration upon the plain below. Here and there arose a tall, majestic brick house, speaking loudly of the untiring labor of the inhabitants, who have snatched the place from the clutches of obscurity, and wrested it from the bonds of disease; and in two or three short years rescued it from a dreary waste to transform it into one of the first cities of the west. . . . I found all the people engaged in business—much more than any place I have visited since the hard times commenced. I sought in vain for anything that bore the marks of immorality. . . . I could see no loungers about the streets, nor any drunkards about the taverns. . . . I heard not an oath in the place. I saw not a gloomy countenance; all were cheerful, polite, and industrious. I conversed with many leading men and found them well-informed, hospitable and generous. I saw nothing but order and regulation in the society. . . .

Joseph Smith himself became a student of Greek and Hebrew, and classes in the ancient languages were organized in the Kirtland Temple, which the Prophet Joseph attended. The Mormon pioneers established schools in Utah at the beginning of their activities here. In 1850 they organized the first university west of the Missouri River, and in 1851 a library was brought across the plains by ox team. It had been purchased in New York City by Dr. John M. Bernhisel and was the finest collection of historical, philosophical, scientific, and literary works in the history of the American frontier. This collection contained the works of the classical writers of ancient Greece: Homer, Sophocles, Plato, Aristotle; the Latin writers, Virgil, Tacitus, and Herodotus; and the modern great writers, Shakespeare, Milton, and Bacon. These are just a few of the authors of the books that were brought in this great collection. The library from the beginning received copies of the New York Herald, New York Evening Post, the Philadelphia Saturday Courier, and the North American Review. Of the scientific works there were Newton's Principia, Herschel's Outlines of Astronomy, and Von Humboldt's Cosmos. The treatises on philosophy included the works of John Stuart Mill, Martin Luther, John Wesley, and Emanuel Swedenborg.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

The ideals and daily lives of a people are judged by their standards of amusements. Among the fine arts encouraged by the pioneers of Utah were music and the drama, and hardly had the colonizers planted their fields of grain and begun building their homes when they built a theater in this wilderness—a theater that in pioneer days noted actors visited, among whom was Sir George Pauncefort of Drury Lane Theatre in London. He played Hamlet, and from that time on great artists graced the stage of the old theatre, including

Edwin Booth, Lawrence Barrett, and many others. So successful were these early pioneers in carrying out their ideals that M. B. Leavitt, in his Fifty Years of Theatrical Management, says:

Sweeping as the statement may seem, I do not believe that the theater has ever rested on a higher plane, both as to its purpose and its offerings, than at Salt Lake City, the capital of Mormondom.

LOVE FOR BEAUTY AND TRUTH

Even when the early-day Missionaries went to England—and this as early as 1837—they went with open minds to learn everything they could that would be conducive of the ways of God. Let me here recite to you an example of love for beauty and truth when three missionaries from Salt Lake City in 1857 wended their way to the Missouri River, called as they were on missions to England. Seymour B. Young, Phillip Margetts, and David Wilkins pulled their hand-cart from Salt Lake City to the Missouri River, where they were able to take a train at Council Bluffs for New York. During that long journey on foot—for they walked all the way, camping at night on the streams of water—they would have their supper, consisting of dried meat and bread, and before rolling up in their blankets to get their rest, they always had their prayer to God. One night, we are told by one of these men in his journal, they sat by their fire, and Phillip Margetts, who became one of the noted actors of the Salt Lake stage and who was known in New York and London for his ability as an actor, recited the words of Hamlet:

. . . What a piece of work is man! how noble in reason! how infinite in faculties! in form and moving how express and admirable! in action how like an angel! in apprehension how like a god! the beauty of the world! the paragon of animals!

And then he gave another of his favorite quotations, from Macbeth:

Tomorrow, and tomorrow, and tomorrow
Creeps in this petty pace from day to day
To the last syllable of recorded time;
And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusty death. Out, out, brief candle!
Life's but a walking shadow, a poor player,
That struts and frets his hour upon the stage,
And then is heard no more. . .

APPRECIATION OF IDEALS

To the youth, to the boys and girls of the Church, if you could only realize how our forefathers expressed their ideals of culture and learn to abide by those ideals today, you would know what happiness means. If this appreciation could grow in your hearts, there would be a revival of the stage as we used to have it, which would be a revival of the plays of Shakespeare and Moliere and Corneille, and all the masters of the great literature of the past. There would be an appreciation of music and the drama, of literature and sculpture, and the old ideals would come back to us as expressed by the Prophet Joseph Smith:

Organize yourselves; prepare every needful thing; and establish a house, even a house of prayer, a house of fasting, a house of faith, a house of learning, a house of glory, a house of order, a house of God. (D. & C. 88:119.)

- - - - -

And do thou grant, Holy Father, that all those who shall worship in this house, may be taught words of wisdom out of the best books, and they may seek learning even by study, and also by faith, as thou hast said. (Ibid., 109:14.)

- - - - -

O Lord, we delight not in the destruction of our fellow men: their souls are precious before thee. (Ibid., 109:43.)

- - - - -

Remember the kings, the princes, the nobles, and the great ones of the earth, and all people, and the churches, all the poor, the needy, and the afflicted ones of the earth. (Ibid., 109:55.)

These are just a mere semblance of the teachings of Joseph Smith. Think of what they should mean to the students of universities and colleges. Think of what America will regain when nations accept this divine truth; as the Prophet Joseph Smith expressed it:

"I teach them correct principles and they govern themselves."

To the youth of this land I give these words of Sir Francis Drake, who sailed up the Pacific Coast at the close of the sixteenth century, and then on around the world:

Men pass away, but people abide. See that you hold fast the heritage we leave you, yea, and teach your children its value, that never in the coming centuries their hearts may fail them, or their hand grow weak. Hitherto we have been too much afraid. Henceforth, we will fear only God.

May God ever direct us all in our holy work, I ask in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

---

The Tabernacle Choir and the congregation sang the hymn, "The Spirit of God Like a Fire Is Burning."

President George Albert Smith

I am sure you will be interested in knowing that all of our friends who came to Conference today are not in this building. There are 2,850 in Barratt Hall and 2,021 in the Assembly Hall, in addition to the few that are in this building. (Laughter)

We will now hear from Elder Joseph F. Merrill, of the Council of the Twelve.

ELDER JOSEPH F. MERRILL

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

Many who are not visibly present may be listening to the proceedings of this conference by reason of the marvels of modern radio. I greet you all.

CAUSE OF TROUBLOUS CONDITIONS

Much is said and written these days about the troublous conditions prevailing locally, nationally, and internationally. The war in Korea during recent weeks has perhaps claimed most attention in newspaper headlines. But talk of war and rumors of war also has come from other quarters. Rising costs and prices have likewise claimed much attention. Labor-management troubles have shared in the headlines. Partisan politics have stirred up anger and bitterness. Looking in any direction you will see anything but harmony and peaceful conditions. Why all of this, one may ask. Are all these things necessary? Does God will them? In their ignorance some say, "Yes."

During the three years we traveled about Europe, 1933-36, we learned that the feeling was more or less general that there is no God whose children we are, and who loves us as a kindly parent loves his children; if so, he would not have permitted the great World War (the first one, we now call it). Such a statement implies that God is responsible for wars—something that is wholly false. God has given "free agency" to every child born into mortality, a priceless gift for which each recipient will be held accountable. God is not responsible for our wars nor for any other of our many troubles and sinful acts. This truth is one of the many characteristic teachings of Mormonism, defined as the teachings and doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

LAW OF CAUSE AND EFFECT

We bring our troubles upon ourselves, be it ignorantly or otherwise. We live in a world and a universe governed by immutable laws which, if fully obeyed, result in beautiful harmony and peace. This is true of both the material and the spiritual realms—so teach authorities in the fields of science and religion.

According to the Prophet Joseph Smith,

There is a law, irrevocably decreed in heaven before the foundations of this world, upon which all blessings are predicated—

And when we obtain any blessing from God, it is by obedience to that law upon which it is predicated. (D. & C. 130:20-21.)

Human experiences testify to the truth of these statements. Scientists have long taught that every phenomenon in nature is the result of antecedent causes. This fact is commonly known as the law of cause and effect.

RELIGION A WAY OF LIFE

Last April, a few days following the annual conference, a lady spoke to me on the street and asked how I dared to mix politics and religion in a conference address. My reply was that I understand our religion is essentially a way of life and therefore covers in a broad way the whole field of moral human relations as indicated by articles eleven, twelve, and thirteen of our faith. As you all know, we do not limit our religion to the teaching of a set of theological doctrines. One of our fundamental teachings is that faith without works is dead. (See James 2:14-26.)

Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven. (Matt. 7:21.)

So said Jesus in his great Sermon on the Mount.

On another occasion, a lawyer asked Jesus,

Master, which is the great commandment in the law?

Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind.

This is the first and great commandment.

And the second is like unto it. Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.

On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets. (Ibid., 22:36-40.)

These teachings we wholeheartedly accept. We interpret the word "neighbor" in this commandment as meaning our fellow men. In a brief amplification of the second commandment, Jesus said:

... whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets. (Ibid., 7:12.)

This requirement is generally called the Golden Rule. This requirement is implied in the thirteenth article of our faith, which is stated as follows:

We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men. . . .

REPENTANCE NEEDED

I began this talk by naming a few of the many troublous conditions that afflict this country. Why do these conditions exist? They are all man-made, hence could be eliminated if men had the desire and the will to eliminate them. But this will never be done until men repent of their evil ways and stop doing the things that have brought about these conditions. To be more specific, among other things we must control our selfishness, not an easy thing to do; for selfishness is an inherited weakness, an inborn quality that every man possesses to a greater or less degree. However, it may be manifest in ways that are commendable or damnable. In the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew is written a beautiful parable wherein the Lord said,

For I was an hungred, and ye gave me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink: . . .
Naked, and ye clothed me: I was sick, and ye visited me. . . .
(Matt. 25:35-36.)

Asked when they had done this, the Lord replied,

. . . Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me. (Ibid., 25:40.)

Yes, we serve the Lord by unselfishly and righteously serving our fellow men. And this is what our missionaries at home and abroad are trying to do. As a reward, they develop a deep love for the people among whom they labor and experience joys, delights, and satisfactions to a degree and of a nature that enables them to say truthfully they greatly enjoyed their missions and would gladly return to them if called to return. Yes, these missionaries were out there at their own expense giving their full time to unselfish efforts to deliver a message that if accepted and lived would be an everlasting blessing to the recipients.

CAUSE OF TROUBLES

Many different answers may be given to the question: Why is the world—people in every land and clime—in an uncertain, troubled condition? The nature of current troubles is such that many people are looking ahead with fear and almost hopeless despair as to the outcome. There are intelligent and informed people who see the third world war as imminent and certain to come in the not distant future. And hearing or knowing something of the enormous destructiveness of current implements of war, they have reason to feel panicky by thoughts of World War III.

But why is there danger of such a war breaking? One answer is the inordinate, wicked selfishness of men in positions of power. Was there a more selfish, greedy, ambitious national head than Adolph Hitler at the outbreak of World War II? If uncontrolled, the selfishness of men in power will lead to the deadliest war this world has ever known.

But most of our perplexing troubles are not of an international nature. They arise in our homes, communities, and nation, and many of them are also due to some type of wicked selfishness.

What is the basic cause of the inflationary tendencies of the last few years? I know the answer that economists usually give. It is more or less stereotyped. I am not an economist, only a layman, but I have an answer, and I believe it is a correct one. The basic cause is selfishness. But selfishness may be commendable or damnable. It is commendable selfishness that motivates our missionaries—their desire to help and bless their fellow men. They are activated by the spirit of the Golden Rule. But selfishness ceases to be commendable when it goes beyond the limits of the Golden Rule. It then becomes more or less sinful, depending, of course, on the circumstances.

WAGE AND PRICE INCREASES

About the time of the surrender of Japan in 1945, the officers of some labor unions began to stir up an agitation for an increase in wages. They insisted that their members should continue to have the same weekly income as they received during the war—the same for forty hours each week as previously received for forty-eight hours. Hence a demand was made for a wage increase of thirty cents an hour. But they insisted there should be no increase in prices, no increase in the cost of living—an absurdity. When the cost of production goes up, must not prices also go up if business is to continue? Well, what was the outcome? There were demands, strikes, disturbances, etc., and finally a settlement was made, on the recommendation of the President, giving a wage increase of eighteen and one-half cents an hour. This increase became general in all the big production industries. How about prices? Of course they rose—the cost of living went up. On this account, the following year there were more demands, agitations, strikes, and finally settlements giving a second wage increase, followed by another rise in the cost of living. This was essentially the story of the third year, of the fourth year, and now of the fifth year, the result being an inflationary spiral, which still continues, with the highest wages in history for labor in the productive industries and a corresponding increase in the cost of living. It seems, therefore, that increased wages are largely responsible for inflation in this country during recent years. But a sad part of the story is that the majority of workers in the country have been wronged by the inflation that has followed wage increases—their incomes have not increased as fast as prices have risen.

INFLATION HURTS MILLIONS

In another way, inflation has hurt the millions of loyal, thrifty Americans who invested their savings in war bonds. A depreciation of the purchasing power of the dollar has resulted in the loss of many billions of dollars to those who bought the bonds. The many millions of insurance policies of all kinds have been deflated, of course. And these facts seem not to have bothered in the least those who are running the government. At any rate, I have not heard of it. As a matter of justice to all, should not the government do everything feasible to keep the purchasing power of the dollar constant? Who has been benefited by inflation? Certainly the vast majority have been hurt.

TAFT-HARTLEY LAW

I spoke of labor union bosses. There are undoubtedly officers of labor unions who are good, honorable men who are willing to do what is fair, right, and just in their dealings. And certainly the majority of members of the labor unions are good, loyal Americans and would not knowingly be guilty of doing things hurtful to their fellow men. But it appears that multitudes of these are misinformed by some of their crafty leaders who have told them, for instance, that the Taft-Hartley labor law enslaves labor and that all its congressional supporters should be defeated in the coming November election. But if I understand the matter aright, this law does limit the power of selfish union bosses, but gives a correspondingly larger measure of freedom to union members than they hitherto had. I am willing to trust informed, honest, loyal American workers. All I ask union members to do before they vote for candidates demanding the repeal of this law is to make a study of the law that their leaders demand shall be repealed and then vote conscientiously. In this country the ballot is secret. Everyone has the God-given right of free agency, but God will hold him responsible for how he uses it.

LABOR UNION BOSSES

Speaking of labor union bosses, may I ask if you read the Deseret News editorial published September 24, 1950, entitled "John L. Lewis Bares Fangs Again With a Grisly Grin and Growl." In that editorial attention was called to an epistle written by Lewis in which he says:

Taft was born encased in velvet pants and has lived to rivet an iron collar around the necks of millions of Americans. He is the relentless, albeit witless, tool of the oppressors of labor.

Do you see why I urge all members of labor unions to become familiar with the provisions of the Taft-Hartley law before they vote? Let them see for themselves if the law does not give them freedom rather than enslavement.

Here is another illustration of dogmatic selfishness shown by union bosses. During several weeks recently, the General Electric Company was trying to negotiate new contracts with one of the unions (a new one) representing its employees. In the company's News Letter of August 4 were these statements:

The burden of I.U.E.'s argument is now admittedly that it just doesn't count whenever we willingly offer or put into effect any benefits that do not publicly appear to have been wrung out of us by the union. . . . And I.U.E. argues that it can't afford to credit us with anything we are willing to do voluntarily. . . . I.U.E. inferred that others had never been rugged enough in collectively bargaining with us.

Do these statements show any desire to be fair?

PRICE INCREASES UNWARRANTED

Speaking again of sinful selfishness as the chief factor in producing inflation, may I suggest that most of us are more or less guilty of sinful selfishness—we go beyond the limits of the Golden Rule in promoting our own interests. This is understandable but hardly justifiable in the light of our teachings. To the extent that we do thus go, we violate the second great commandment, do we not?

When the Korean war broke, prices immediately went up. Why? Because of the sinful selfishness of those who had things to sell. When goods become scarce, their price is increased. Why? For the same reason. In such cases the production costs have not increased, but the selfishness of vendors must be satisfied.

About forty-seven years ago Cache Valley in northern Utah had a long winter. The price of hay for cattle rose sharply. Marriner W. Merrill, president of the Logan Temple, was told by the manager of his farm affairs that he had several tons of hay to spare. The demand was keen. Fifteen dollars a ton and more was being offered. Brother Merrill was silent for a few moments and then advised that as much hay be sold as could be spared. And the price? Eight dollars a ton. That, he added, is a fair price for the cost of production, but do not let more than one ton go to the same individual. If the spirit he indicated prevailed throughout all America, how much better it would be for all of us and how much greater our happiness! Then officials of corporations and labor unions would be motivated to be fair and honest in all their negotiations.

LIVE THE GOLDEN RULE

Yes, among the troublous situations that America faces are inflation, communism, and the monopoly of labor union bosses; and the most imminent of these three are inflation and monopoly. Both of these would disappear overnight if all concerned would immediately repent and live the Golden Rule. And this all members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints are obliged to do by the covenants they made in the waters of baptism and in partaking of the holy sacrament.

TESTIMONY

Now in conclusion, may I say that three years ago last April I stood in this pulpit and asked the question: "Did Joseph Smith, the fourteen-year old boy out in the woods actually and really see two highly glorious heavenly personages, God the Father and Jesus Christ the Son, and hear the voice of each one?" If a fair, openminded, competent judge were required to make a thorough study of all relative material and then give answer to the question, it undoubtedly would be affirmative—so strong is the evidence. For myself I am very sure that just as certainly as you are sitting there and I am standing here, I know that God lives and that this is his Church. He, himself, through the Holy Ghost, has revealed this to me. In answer to prayer I have been the happy recipient several times of revelation direct from God, given verbally, once orally. Hence I positively know that he lives. In recent years I have publically related some of these experiences many times. Many thousands of other Latter-day Saints have testimonies as strong as mine. But all true Latter-day Saints are firm in our precious faith. May all of us let it be our guiding light and keep us loyal to the leadership of the First Presidency of the Church, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER MARION G. ROMNEY

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I earnestly invite each of you, my brethren and sisters, to say a prayer that while I stand before you, you may get something out of what I say that will do you good, and that what I say will inspire what you get. I rely wholly upon the Spirit of the Lord to direct me on this occasion.

TEACHINGS NOT NEW

During this conference I have listened intently to everything that has been said. What has been said has thrilled me, although I have not heard anything much that is new. During the past weeks I have read many conference addresses given from this pulpit during the last twenty-one years, and I have not found much in those addresses that was new, but I thrilled with every one of them.

Truth, sufficient to guide us through our lives and back into the very presence of God, was revealed through the Prophet Joseph Smith during the early years of this last dispensation. The Lord counseled the brethren in that day that they were to pretend to no new revelation. They were to speak and teach what had been revealed through the Prophet Joseph Smith. In the main, that is what we are still doing.

I know, of course, that there have been new revelations given since the days of the Prophet Joseph Smith. I know that every man who has stood at the head of the Church from then until now has received revelations from the Lord. I know President Smith receives them today. But not many new doctrines have been revealed since the Prophet's time.

BUILD-UP OF SPIRITS

What we get out of general conference is a build-up of our spirits as we listen to those particular principles and practices of the gospel which the Lord inspires the present leadership of the Church to bring to our attention at the time. He knows why he inspired

Brother Joseph F. Merrill to give the talk he just gave. He knows why he inspired the other brethren who have talked in this conference to say what they have said. It is our high privilege to hear, through these men, what the Lord would say if he were here. If we do not agree with what they say, it is because we are out of harmony with the Spirit of the Lord.

WELFARE WORK

I desire to say a word or two about the work that I give a great deal of my time to, the welfare work. I hope they will be worth remembering. There are few of the brethren who so consistently go to all the stakes in the Church as I. I go because I am sent. I feel very humble in it and very grateful that the brethren have enough confidence in me to send me about the Church to tell the stake presidents, bishops, Relief Society presidents, and other welfare workers some things about the welfare program.

I thank you, my brethren and sisters, for your faithfulness in coming to the regional and stake welfare meetings that we call. I have never called one, and I never shall call one that is not authorized by the Presidency of the Church. Last year, of the 173 stake presidents invited to attend the welfare budget meetings, 163 attended. Of the 172 Relief Society stake presidents invited, 163 attended. That made the attendance record of the Relief Society presidents about 55/100ths of one percent better than the record of the stake presidents. The record of attendance of the bishops and the independent branch presidents was, however, 61/100ths of one percent better than the record of attendance of ward and independent branch Relief Society presidents. Thus the attendance record of the brethren was about 5/100ths of one percent better than that of the women—quite a record for men. Welfare workers who attended those meetings traveled 488,323 man-miles coming and going. You have, my brethren and sisters, made a marvelous record of loyalty to the welfare plan.

1951 WELFARE BUDGET

Just now we are in the midst of touring the Church with the proposed 1951 welfare production budget. We are not inviting so many people to the meetings this year as we did last year, because we want to get down in our conferences with you to the discussion of some of the details of the welfare operations. We do not feel we need to promote the welfare program as an idea so much as we have done in the past, because we believe that most of the people are now converted. But we do need to perfect its operation.

First, we want to get to the point in the program just as soon as possible where the necessity to call upon the Saints for cash contributions to meet the annual Church welfare production budget is eliminated. We are presently doing two things to accomplish this. In the first place, under the direction of the brethren we have taken out of the proposed budget a couple of items which required the raising of cash: transportation of coal and cash for the purchase of cloth. As a result, the 1951 welfare production budget will be $132,000 less than it would have been with these two items left in.

Second, with these items eliminated, we are urging that the budget be produced in commodities and not in cash. This can only be done by getting in hand the means with which to produce the commodities—permanent welfare production projects. We have nearly enough projects to produce our budget needs, but we are a little out of balance. Some projects are larger than they need be, while in some places there are no production projects. If, somehow, those who have no projects could buy into the larger projects, so that all the production could be turned into the welfare program, it would help. All those who have no projects will, of course, need to get them. We are stressing this matter as we go about the Church.

NOT A DOLE

Another thing we are doing is emphasizing the counsel given by the brethren from the beginning that the welfare program must not become a dole. Our people must be given the opportunity to work for what they get. In the spirit of the Master let us give them an opportunity to work so that we do not violate the primary purpose of the welfare plan. When they set it up, the brethren said, "Our primary purpose was to set up, insofar as it might be possible, a system under which the curse of idleness would be done away with, the evils of a dole abolished, and independence, industry, thrift, and self-respect be once more established among our people. . . . Work is to be re-enthroned as the ruling principle of the lives of our Church membership."

PRINCIPLE OF THE FAST

Now one more point: We desire to encourage throughout the Church the principle of the fast—abstaining from the eating of two meals on fast day and giving the equivalent thereof to the bishop. A minimum fast offering is the equivalent of the two meals, and a maximum fast offering may be measured by the greatness of one's heart. God bless you that you may continue in this great program with all the energy of your souls.

If I had time, I would like to give you a lesson on it out of the first six verses of the 105th section of the Doctrine and Covenants, but I do not have time. I will simply say this: The reason the Saints did not go back into Jackson County, Missouri, and redeem Zion at the time the Prophet came from Kirtland with Zion's Camp was because the members of the Church in Zion would not impart of their substance, as becometh Saints, to the poor and afflicted among them. We may find that just such a consequence rests upon our performance.

God bless you, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER HAROLD B. LEE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

As another great conference of the Church draws near its closing session, it remains for each here in attendance at the conference or listening on the air to formulate for himself that which to him has been the cardinal teaching and central theme of the conference and then to apply it in his own practice. As I have sat here, I have tried to do that for myself. I would like to tell you what my feelings are about that which has transpired in this conference.

INFLUENCE OF PRESIDENT RICHARDS

The first thing which has characterized it has been the feeling, particularly among the members of the Twelve and to some degree by all the General Authorities, and put into words by President McKay this morning, that this conference has been greatly influenced by President George F. Richards, and likewise, perhaps, in a degree, by all those who have departed this life as leaders of the Church. President George F. Richards was one of the noblest among them. I have felt his influence as President McKay has expressed our feelings.

FALSE PROPHETS TO DECEIVE

The second thing, that to me has been the cardinal theme, is that we must prepare to meet that of which the Master warned when the disciples asked him how they would know that his coming again was nigh at hand. He said to them:

For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall shew great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect. (Matthew 24:24.)

The Prophet Joseph Smith, in his inspired version of that same scripture, added these significant words: "who are the elect, according to the covenant." This is what has been said, in effect, in this conference: Unless every member of this Church gains for himself an unshakable testimony of the divinity of this Church, he will be among those who will be deceived in this day when the "elect according to the covenant" are going to be tried and tested. Only those will survive who have gained for themselves that testimony.

CONCERN OF MISSIONARY

I heard from a young man up in the Northwestern States Mission, who had only been there a few months—a fine, stalwart, handsome young man—he had just received what he had interpreted to himself as a testimony. He told how he had been anxious in the circle where he had lived, because members of his own household and the circle of his friends had ridiculed oftentimes, after the conference had ended, what had been said in those conferences, and he had been shocked about it. Then he said, as the tears filled his eyes after he had borne his own testimony, "If I could hear my own father and mother stand up and bear their own testimonies, it would be the greatest thrill of my life."

CRITICISM OF AUTHORITIES

The other day one of the bishops from the Big Horn country of Wyoming came to my office, and told me that frequently there came to their conferences visiting brethren who talked about those who criticize the General Authorities of the Church, and about the "isms" that are springing up in apostate groups. He said, "You know, Brother Lee, our people don't know what these brethren are talking about up there in our ward. We never hear these criticisms. They accept you brethren as the representatives of the Living God, and we don't hear what they say is happening elsewhere."

As I thought of that bishop's statement, I remembered the words of Brigham Young:

Were your faith concentrated upon the proper object, your confidence unshaken, your lives pure and holy, every one fulfilling the duty of his or her calling according to the priesthood and capacity bestowed upon you, you would be filled with the Holy Ghost, and it would be as impossible for any man to deceive and to lead you to destruction as for a feather to remain unconsumed in the midst of intense heat.

And then this:

I am more afraid that this people have so much confidence in their leaders that they will not inquire for themselves of God whether they are being led by him. I am fearful they settle down in a state of blind security, trusting their eternal destiny in the hands of their leaders with a reckless confidence that in itself would thwart the purposes of God in their salvation, and weaken that influence they could give their leaders if they know for themselves by the revelations of Jesus Christ that they are led in the right way. Let every man and woman know by the whisperings of the Spirit of God to themselves whether their leaders are walking in the way the Lord dictates or not.

DIVINE APPOINTMENT OF LEADERS

To me, there is a tremendous truth. It is not alone sufficient for us as Latter-day Saints to follow our leaders and to accept their counsel, but we have the greater obligation to gain for ourselves the unshakable testimony of the divine appointment of these men and the witness that what they have told us is the will of our Heavenly Father.

I had a shock and a startling truth borne in upon me by an experience six months ago, when following April conference, the General Authorities and their wives met in a semi-annual party and dinner up at our Institute of Religion near the University of Utah. As a part of the program, the committee in charge had arranged for a recital of the conferences a hundred years ago, from the preceding October. They read the minutes from the conference of 1849. They then brought quotations from the sermons delivered by the First Presidency and the Council of the Twelve in October 1899. Then they reproduced on the public address system quotations from the sermons of every one of the present Presidency and the Council of the Twelve. When they put into my hands the quotation from the one in that other Council fifty years ago, whose place I was now filling, I was startled, for I was to read the last recorded statement of a man who lost his standing in the Council and later his membership in the Church of Jesus Christ. And I was more startled when I read this statement from his last recorded sermon. This is what he had said:

I know that the children of men never were converted till they saw that the power of God rested upon his servants, and the spirit of God went down into their hearts like fire.

He knew, and he came to know by the bitter experience of his own apostasy that the thing which lost him his standing in the Church was that he lost his testimony of the divine appointment of the prophets of God, and that the fire which once burned in his heart had gone out. When I realized that one like him had failed, and that I was now sitting in the chair once occupied by him, it gave me a tremendous feeling of responsibility and a fear lest I might fall, by foolishness and because of the deceit and cunning which I have come to believe may overtake any of us. False prophets and christs, as foretold by the Savior, may come to deceive us not alone in the name of religion, but if we can believe the history of Italy and Germany and Russia, they may come under the label of politicians or of social planners or so-called economists, deceitful in their offerings of a kind of salvation which may come under such guise.

PERSONAL TESTIMONY

Five years ago, following the death and burial of President Heber J. Grant, the Council of the Twelve met in one of the most solemn meetings I have ever attended as one of the junior members of the Council, in one of the upper rooms in the Salt Lake Temple. They had met there to consider the appointment of a succeeding President of the Church. The chairs usually occupied by the First Presidency were vacant, and for hours the members of the Twelve, each in his turn, expressed his feelings fully on the matter of the new appointment. After the decision was made, President George Albert Smith took his place and called to his side President Clark and President McKay. There was something that happened to me in that meeting. I was willing then, as always, to listen to the brethren and to follow them, but as they took their places at the front of our council room, there came into my heart a testimony and an assurance that these were the men who had been chosen by God's appointment, and I knew it because of the revelation of the Spirit to my own soul.

May I close with only this one thought taken from one of our own hymns:

Soon the earth will hear the warning,
Then the judgments will descend!
Oh! before the days of sorrow,
Make the Lord of Hosts your friend.

Then, when dangers are around you,
And the wicked are distressed,
You, with all the Saints of Zion,
Shall enjoy eternal rest.

From "See, the Mighty Angel Flying"

God help us to gain that divine, assuring testimony which I have in my soul. I know that God lives and know that this is his work. I know that these men are divinely appointed servants of God. And I bear you this testimony in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President George Albert Smith

We have a good many people come here, but not many have the privilege you have had of sitting and listening to men whose lives are devoted to the service of the Master.

Brother Harold B. Lee, of the Council of the Twelve, has just spoken to us and he will be our last speaker this morning.

I never come to this Tabernacle that I do not feel an unusual presence, when I think of how it was erected and how the people struggled to prepare a place for worship, and the temple to the east of us, the Assembly Hall, all these walls that hold these buildings—there is not anything in all the world like them. Many people would like to take down these walls. I want to say these walls are sacred to me because I have played around them ever since I was a child and I have seen hundreds of men come and go, working around here.

This morning we are in comfort. The houses that we are in, and the adjoining houses, are kept in order. The beautiful grounds with flowers and shrubs, hundreds of people remark they have never seen anything like it in all the world, and yet this has all been done by men, and some women, who desired to make the place where we worship our Heavenly Father as comfortable and delightful as possible.

By the way, that brings to my mind the fact that one of the most faithful workers we have had on this block, looking after this building and other things, Brother Ben Handley, is at home sick, unable to be with us. He has always been here, always been on hand, and I wonder sometimes if we realize how much one person may mean.

As I look through the congregation this morning I see Aunt Mary Smith, the widow of President Joseph F. Smith, one of the older people of the Church. She nearly always sits in the same place, or about the same place, and I am delighted to see her here this morning. I also miss Sister Ruth May Fox, who is past ninety years of age and not able to be here, but I am satisfied she will be listening in. I hope she will hear her name mentioned from this House of the Lord. We must not only appreciate our own blessings and our privileges, but we should keep in mind the others who need us, and I am sure if we do we will continue to enjoy what we have now and the Lord will add to it.

The Tabernacle Choir will now sing the "Hallelujah Chorus" from the "Mount of Olives."

The closing prayer will be offered by President Shirley M. Palmer, Oneida Stake, Idaho, after which the Conference will stand adjourned until two o'clock this afternoon.

The proceedings of that session will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City, and by arrangement through KSL, over the stations named in the first session of the Conference. That session will also be televised over the KSL television station, channel five.

Important messages and calls coming to us for persons supposed to be in attendance at Conference will be announced at the dismissal of this meeting over the loudspeaking system on the grounds.

The choir music for this session has been furnished by the Tabernacle Choir, with Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting and Elder Alexander Schreiner at the organ.

After singing and prayer we will be dismissed until 2 o'clock.

Brethren and sisters, let us take from this house to our homes, and wherever we may go, the influence that comes from our Heavenly Father and that is always here when we meet in worship, and keep it with us during the remainder of our lives.

---

Singing by the choir, "Hallelujah Chorus."

The benediction was offered by President Shirley M. Palmer of the Oneida Stake.

Conference adjourned until 2 p.m.

THIRD DAY

AFTERNOON MEETING

The concluding session of the Conference was held in the Tabernacle at 2:00 p.m.

President George Albert Smith presided and conducted the services.

The Salt Lake Tabernacle Choir furnished the choral singing for this session.

President George Albert Smith:

This is the closing session of the One Hundred Twenty-first Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square, Salt Lake City, Utah.

These services will be broadcast in the Assembly Hall and in Barratt Hall (60 North Main) over a loud speaking system and by television.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over station KSL at Salt Lake City, and by arrangement through KSL, over the stations named in the first session of the Conference.

This session will also be televised over the KSL television station, channel five.

The choir music for this session will be rendered by the Tabernacle Choir, Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting and Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ.

We will begin this service by the Tabernacle Choir singing "Father, Be Ever Near Us."

The opening prayer will be offered by President Perry Edward Tingey of the Sacramento Stake, California.

---

Singing by the choir, "Father Be Ever Near Us."

The invocation was offered by President Perry Edward Tingey of the Sacramento Stake.

President George Albert Smith:

We mentioned the names of one or two people this morning that have passed away, and I think we should call attention to one person whose name was not mentioned, whom all of you do not know, but many of you do, and that is Roscoe W. Eardley, one of the most faithful workers in the Welfare Organization. It so happened that he had his first breakdown several years ago when I was with him at a stake conference, and I did not know that he was going to get well again, but the Lord blessed him and he came along and did a wonderful work after that time.

I also wish to mention Sister Augusta Grant. She has always been here when it was possible for her to do so. It is not possible for her to be out of the house and I am sure we all remember her as one of the lovely souls who have given cheer wherever they have gone. She is way past ninety years of age and I presume we might expect she would not have much strength at that age.

The Tabernacle Choir will now sing "Jesus, Name of Wondrous Love," after which Elder Alma Sonne, one of the Assistants to the Twelve will address us.

ELDER ALMA SONNE

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My brethren and sisters, I have been full of anxiety during all the sessions of this conference. It has been said that everything comes to him who waits. I have been waiting and waiting, and here I stand well-nigh exhausted. It reminds me of a young man who stood before his fellow missionaries over in Norway to bear his testimony for the first time. He said, "I am told when you are weak, you are strong; but when I am weak, I'm just weak."

EXPANSION OF CHURCH

I rejoice with you in the growth and expansion of the Church, in the marvelous progress which it has made since it was organized in the year 1830. I am proud of the achievements of the men and women who first planted their feet in these Rocky Mountains and laid the foundation for all we have and are. I am also proud of the men and women who built the great city of Nauvoo and erected there a temple of the Lord. I am equally proud of those who built the Kirtland Temple in times of great hardship and adversity. I rejoice in the success which has attended the Latter-day Saints in this dispensation, and particularly in the success of the great missionary enterprise which is going forward in the world. I tell you the opposition is crumbling, and the Lord's work is going forward. Never before have we had the friendly reception which we are receiving today in all the nations of Europe. Our message is being listened to by people everywhere, and the Lord is preparing the hearts of men and women for the gospel message; and so I view the situation throughout with optimism and delight, so far as the Church is concerned.

WORLD ATTITUDE CHANGING

Just before leaving London, I purchased a book. Its author is Dr. Ernest William Barnes, the famous Bishop of Birmingham, England. I did not get time to read the book as thoroughly and carefully as I should have done, but I noticed as I scanned through its pages the learned man called attention to this one thing, namely that infant baptism was unknown in the days of Jesus Christ and his Apostles. In another place, he quoted the words of Paul, the Apostle:

Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? Why are they then baptized for the dead? (1 Cor. 15:29.)

He then concluded that there can be no question but that the early Christians were baptized for their dead relatives and friends. Why is the attitude of the world changing respecting these doctrines? Because, brethren and sisters, the endeavors of the humble men and women who have gone forth as missionaries have been eminently successful, and people in all the walks of life are reading our literature. About a year ago I rode on the train from northern England to London. When we came to the city of Darlington, the door to our compartment opened, and a minister of the Church of England entered. He looked us over rather carefully and finally said, "I am curious to know why you Americans should come from a land of plenty to a land of scarcity."

My companion, a young missionary, who was always eager for a gospel conversation, turned to him and replied, "We are missionaries of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints," and then with characteristic bluntness, "commonly called Mormons."

ARTICLES OF FAITH

The minister was not shocked, I think perhaps he had surmised who we were. The young missionary, true to form in all respects, reached into his pocket and produced a little card on which were printed the Articles of Faith. The minister read the articles very carefully and handed them back to the missionary with the remark, "I can believe most of these fine declarations of faith." And then good naturedly, "Of course, I am not prepared to believe that Zion is to be built upon the American continent." But he went on to talk about these thirteen Articles of Faith and referred to them as "a great religious document."

I have always said, and I now repeat it, there is something more than man's genius back of these thirteen Articles of Faith. How could anyone devise a better introduction to a gospel conversation for our missionaries? These articles are not antagonistic. One follows the other in proper sequence. They are sound and scriptural and have a strong appeal to those who are familiar with the Holy Bible. They are neither dogmatic nor unfriendly. The Prophet showed great wisdom, it seems to me, and a rare insight into human nature, when he used the words, "we believe," in presenting this powerful message to the world. Is it any wonder that they have been translated into so many languages? They are not only well-stated, but they are also well-selected from all the beliefs of the Latter-day Saints. They have stood the test of one hundred years, during which time they have been analyzed and scrutinized by thousands of investigators. Not a single alteration has been necessary. These declarations are an important part of the Prophet's literary and scriptural productions. They are neither threadbare nor obsolete.

REACTION TO TRACTS

When our minister had finally finished reading them, my missionary companion handed him another of our tracts. It was the one entitled "What Is Mormonism?" written years ago by Elder John A. Widtsoe. He read it from beginning to end. It was much longer. It took him an hour to read it. He was equally complimentary when he returned it to us. "It is one of the best religious papers I have read," he said. Then my companion did a bold thing. He reached into his brief case and took from it another tract called Joseph Smith Tells His Own Story. Our friend read it, but the expression on his face changed. His attitude was different. His friendliness disappeared. He handed it back without comment except to say, "The answer to that gospel tract is either 'yes' or 'no.'" And I believe he was right. There is no middle ground upon which you can consider the claims of Joseph Smith. He was either prophet or fraud, for he did his work like one called of God.

EXPLANATION OF JOSEPH SMITH

I also picked up in England another book, written by Dr. James Black of Edinburgh, Scotland. He was a prominent clergyman in the Church of England in Edinburgh. He wrote numerous articles against the Latter-day Saints over a period of fifteen or twenty years. These articles were bitter and were directed primarily against the leaders of the Church and against the missionaries who were then in England. One chapter in his book is devoted to the Mormons in Utah, and in it the reverend gentleman made a confession that he has failed after years of study to understand Joseph Smith. Said he in his statement:

The real problem in Mormonism is how an ill-educated man like Joseph Smith could have invented an elaborate system of rules and ideas with many historical references, ingenious speculations and imaginative flights, and moreover, how he could have expounded them in a style of writing apparently foreign to his ordinary speech and range of culture.

He goes on:

On the other hand, the charge of his enemies that the whole system is merely an invention and a fraud does not touch the problem, for this charge does not explain and cannot explain how such an ill-educated man could produce such an elaborate system. This is a bigger problem than most people imagine. It requires an exceedingly able scholar to foist a highly wrought-out fraud to last for over a century upon the public.

Who will explain Joseph Smith? Is there any explanation of this great prophet of the latter days? Only one, brethren and sisters, and that is the one which he himself gave. No one will explain this prophet of the nineteenth century except those who accept him as a prophet of God.

May the Lord bless this great work which has been established upon the earth in the last days. May he bless his servants and hand-maidens who are going forth in the world to present this gospel of salvation, and may we live so that our lives may shine like a beacon light to lead the world towards the truth, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

We have just heard from Elder Alma Sonne, of the Assistants to the Twelve. President Richard L. Evans of the First Council of Seventy, will now address us, and following him Elder Ezra Taft Benson, of the Council of the Twelve. President Evans is a man whose voice is heard more than that of any other man in the country.

ELDER RICHARD L. EVANS

Of the First Council of Seventy

I am sure that no one knows as well as I know how much I need help as I face this congregation here and those who may be listening and looking on the air, and I earnestly hope that I may have it.

I have jotted down from time to time mentally or actually, these past three days, things that I think it might have been well for me to have said at this conference, and I have repeatedly scratched them out as others have said them. They make a rather long list.

I heard some weeks ago a set of figures presented by Brother A. Z. Richards, which I felt deserved wider circulation as a point of historical perspective. I should like to extract a few of these figures from a longer list:

FIGURES QUOTED

When Joseph Smith was born, the population of the United States was about one-half the present population of California.

In 1820, the population of the entire United States was about the population of New York City today.

In 1830, when the Church was organized, New York City was about one-third larger than Salt Lake City is today.

In 1837, when our missionaries first went to Great Britain, New York City was smaller than Denver is today.

In 1847, there were only two United States cities larger than Salt Lake City today; they were New York and Manhattan, both of which are now part of the present greater New York.

When Martin Harris went to New York with the Book of Mormon characters, New York City was only slightly larger than Salt Lake City is today.

Before Nauvoo was abandoned by our people, Washington, D. C., was about the same size as Nauvoo, but Nauvoo had been only three or four years in the making while Washington, D. C. had been designated as the seat of national government more than a half-century before that time.

I think these latter figures, and others which might be presented here, bring to us with some considerable force the kind of people that our pioneer forefathers were—people of great courage and conviction. I think we can see from these figures, too, something of the basis of the concern of some of their neighbors—with all of the social, religious, political, and economic implications inherent in growth of this people, and the vigor and purpose they displayed in rising repeatedly from their poverty.

Two more figures I think may be of interest to you: In 1850, the population of Utah has been recorded in official records as being about 11,380. Three years later our people started building the magnificent temple which now stands to the east of us.

MEN OF COURAGE AND FAITH

In 1860, the population of this state has been recorded as being about 40,273. Three years later than that they began to build the Tabernacle in which we meet today, which, when it was projected, probably would have seated about one out of every five people in the entire state. If we were to do likewise today, proportionately, we should have to project ourselves to the building of an auditorium that would seat considerably more than a hundred thousand people.

Men of courage, men of faith in the future in spite of all the uncertainties and the drivings and the depredations that they experienced, they began again and again, and rose from their poverty again and again, to produce what we see before us and what we are the beneficiaries of. These walls and these buildings on Temple Square are part of the evidence of their purpose and their faith, and I hope and earnestly believe that something of their spirit still lingers here.

UNCERTAINTIES TODAY

Now times have changed, but human nature hasn't changed very much. We face other uncertainties today, and sympathy and appeals for faith and prayers and for encouragement to our young people who face the uncertainties of our generation have been expressed repeatedly in this conference. I should like to add my appeal for faith, for prayers, and for understanding for these young people who live in confusion and suspense, and who wonder when they are going to be relieved of all this uncertainty, when they can settle down, what they can count on for the future, whether to pursue their education and their preparations for professions or to give it all up.

What can they count on? Well, I think it was Heber C. Kimball or one of his associates who said that he had started all over again seven different times and left his home and all behind him. I hope this generation will not be faced with any such extremities, but I do know that we must have faith in the future, and when we see what our forefathers did with what they had, and the conditions under which they did it, I feel sure that we can surmise something of what might be expected of us, and of what might be accomplished by us, in faith, in that unity of which President Clark so often speaks, and in righteous purpose. There is much expected of us with what we have, compared with what our pioneer fathers did with what was theirs.

YEAR OF ANNIVERSARIES

They did some other things also: It has been mentioned that this is a year of anniversaries. For one thing, it is the centennial of the University of Deseret, now the University of Utah. The second act of the territorial legislature, as I recall, was the founding of this educational institution. This month we also observe the seventy-fifth anniversary of the founding of Brigham Young University. Did the founders of these institutions have their eyes on the future? They believed in seeking knowledge out of the best books. They believed that "the glory of God is intelligence," and "that whatever principle of intelligence we attain to in this life, it will rise with us in the resurrection." (D. & C. 130:18.) And they established institutions of learning wherever they went. The pursuit of learning was an important part of their lives.

ACCEPTANCE OF TRUTH

I am aware today, not only of those who are facing uncertainties in the armed forces, to whom our hearts and prayers go out, but of those who are pursuing knowledge in institutions of learning, who sometimes run into areas of confusion and seeming conflict in their pursuits. I am grateful to belong to a Church that has committed itself to the acceptance of all truth, that encourages its people to pursue truth and to push farther and farther the frontiers of human knowledge. And I am grateful also (and I have said this before) that the things I don't understand don't destroy my faith in the things that I do understand.

There is so much that men don't know that we can afford to wait for all the answers where there seem to be areas of conflict and confusion in the pursuit of knowledge.

OBSERVATIONS AT MT. PALOMAR

I was reading recently an article on the new telescopes lately put into service on Mount Palomar, California—the Schmidt telescope, a smaller one of rather radical design with forty-eight-inch lens and the much larger one with a 200-inch lens. Since early 1949, so says the writer, the smaller of these two telescopes has provided new clues on the creation of the universe," "has already revealed hundreds of thousands of island universes and millions of stars . . . which had never been seen before," and can see and photograph "clear, undistorted distances of three hundred million light years away or about two thousand billion-billion miles!" And the larger telescope penetrates about a billion light years away! "What is man that thou art mindful of him!"

And shall we say that these millions of stars that have just been "seen" within recent months did not exist before we could see them with the aid of these more acute instruments? I think we should ask ourselves some of the questions that were asked of Job by the Voice out of the whirlwind, and see how many we can answer, when we run into some of these areas of seeming conflict. If we were to sit down and list those things which have been discovered even in our own generation, which were not before known, and then think of infinity and of all that is not yet known by man, we should be humble indeed in our small knowledge, even the most learned among us.

CLING TO ETERNAL VERITIES

I should like to say to our young people: Keep your lives well-balanced. Pursuing any narrow field of knowledge or activity to the exclusion of all others will reach a point of diminishing returns. Give some of your time to the things of the spirit, and always reserve some of your means to the purposes of your Father in heaven. Look broadly as well as intently, and keep your lives well-balanced in your pursuits.

I would say today to those who are in the classroom, to farmers in the field, to the laborers in factories, to men pursuing professions, to young men in military service, to all of us in life, whatever the discouragements, whatever the seeming areas of conflict and confusion, whatever the infinite area of things we don't understand, cling to these eternal verities always: that God lives, that men were made in his image, that life is purposeful, that men are immortal. Cling to the commandments and give observance to them and to the knowledge that it is our Father's plan and purpose to bring immortality and eternal life to man. If we will cling to these eternal verities in simplicity and truth and keep our lives well-balanced in all our pursuits, we shall reach a glorious end, with ever-growing knowledge. By all means seek knowledge out of the best books, in all fields of thought and learning that are constructive, and, if possible, it would be wonderful to push the frontiers of knowledge beyond where they are now. But always keep lives well-balanced and reserve some time for the things of the spirit.

PURSUE PURPOSES OF LIFE

Now as to this discouragement and confusion: I think the enemy of men's souls wouldn't care too much what means he used to render our lives ineffective, just so long as he did render them ineffective. I don't think he would care too much whether it was by indolence or indifference or by withholding willing work, or by doubt, or by discouragement, or by uncertainty—so long as he could render us ineffective, it would please him. And it must be our purpose to see that we pursue our purposes regardless of the things we don't know which we hope sometime to know. It must be our purpose to pursue with all earnestness every righteous purpose.

No matter how much we may be discouraged or how often we are set back, we must begin again and again, if necessary, and earnestly pursue the purposes of life, full of faith for the future. Enduring to the end is exceedingly important. Pursuing the opportunities and the duties of every day is exceedingly important, and repenting while there is still time to repent is also exceedingly important.

PRAYER FOR YOUTH

I hope that we may set our lives in order, and that our Father will bless these young people of ours, whether they be called to the service of their country or whatever in righteousness they may be called upon to do, and give them strength and faith, and let them be of good courage, and help them to keep their lives well-balanced and always to keep their feet firmly on solid rock. May he bless all of us with all our problems, with our families, with our professions, with our work, and with all that is ours to undertake in life.

I wish to express to you the conviction in my soul as to the reality of those things which have been spoken of here in this conference, that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, that the gospel has been restored, that it has within it the answers to the problems that beset this generation, and the only answers to permanent peace. May we pursue it in unity and with righteous purpose, ever keeping the commandments and bringing our young people with us, full of faith, understanding, and courage. I pray in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER EZRA TAFT BENSON

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I come to you, my brethren and sisters, as we approach the close of this glorious conference, in a spirit of fasting and prayer, in the hope that the Lord will see fit to sustain me during the few moments I stand before you. As I have been contemplating with anxiety this sobering experience, I have had reason to thank the Lord many times for his blessings.

SUPPORT OF FAMILY

While I was sitting alone in a room at my home following the morning session today, one of my boys came into the room and said, "Dad, I've observed you've been fasting and praying a good deal during this conference. I just wanted to come in to tell you that I have been doing the same. The Lord bless you."

As I left the room, I was met by my good wife, ever loyal and devoted, who said, "The younger children have suggested that it might be well if we kneel in family prayer." Then she added, "We had prayer this morning, but they'd like to join with you in prayer now." I am grateful, my brothers and sisters, for the support of our families.

GRATITUDE FOR BRETHREN

I am grateful for the spirit of this great latter-day work. I am grateful for my brethren among whom I labor—for their support, their confidence, and their faith. My heart has responded to every message given at this conference and every testimony that has been borne.

My soul echoed the sentiments expressed in behalf of our great leader, President George F. Richards. I loved him almost as a son loves a father. I recall vividly standing in his presence—alone with him in his office—just before I left for the shores of war-torn Europe. I recall his last words of counsel. I shall never forget them and the sweet embrace which he gave me as I was about to leave on that emergency mission under the direction of the First Presidency.

I was happy to hear the words spoken regarding my good friend and brother, Frank Evans, whom I have loved many years and who was not only loved in the Church but also was loved by the people throughout rural America.

I am happy, my brethren and sisters, in the appointment of Brother Stapley to our Council, and I'd like to say to him, and I'm sure I echo the feeling of all of my associates, that he will see and feel and witness a love that is not excelled among men anywhere in the world as he sits in the Council of the First Presidency and the Quorum of the Twelve. I am grateful for these rich blessings.

I am thrilled, my brethren and sisters, with the sweet summary of the conference given by Brother Lee this morning and particularly with his testimony. I thank God that he has implanted in the hearts of men—strong men, good men—a burning testimony of the divinity of this great latter-day work.

SPIRIT OF BROTHERHOOD

There is a real spirit of brotherhood and fellowship in the Church. It's a very powerful thing, somewhat intangible, but very real. I feel it, as do my associates, as we travel throughout the stakes and wards of Zion and throughout the missions of the earth. It matters not where we go. We may meet in a group with the priesthood, in one of the stakes, or out in one of the missions, but there is always that feeling of fellowship and brotherhood. It is one of the sweet things in connection with membership in the Church and kingdom of God. I have felt it way up in Alaska as I met with our brethren and sisters there. I felt it far up in East Prussia, throughout the missions of Europe, down in Mexico, in some of the islands of the sea, and throughout this land of Zion. It is very real. Oh, I know, my brethren and sisters, it isn't what it should be; it isn't what it could be; it isn't what the Lord would have it be, but nevertheless, there is nothing like it in all the world. It is one of the marks of the divinity of this great latter-day work, and I rejoice in it. The most important thing of all, to me, is the spirit of this great work in which we are engaged. It is that spirit which brings to our souls a conviction of the divinity of this work. One cannot fully explain it, and yet it is very powerful and very real.

SPIRITUAL UPLIFT EXPERIENCED

One of my non-Mormon friends who passed away only a few days ago, who was rather prominently known, who wrote for national magazines, and was chairman of the board of trustees of one of our great universities, some months ago came to this city to address a meeting of dairymen, most of whom were members of the Church. After the meeting was over, he came up to my home for the purpose of a visit and a renewal of friendship. As I drove him back to the hotel that night, he turned to me, after being quiet for several moments, and said, "I don't know what it is, but each time I come among your people I experience something that I never experience anywhere else in the world. It's an intangible thing, but it's very real." He added, "I've tried to analyze it; I've tried to describe it; but the best thing I can do is to say that every time I come among your people, I get a spiritual uplift. What is it that gives me that feeling which I get nowhere else?"

Brethren and sisters, what is it? You feel it. We feel it in these great conferences of the Church. We feel it out in the stakes of Zion. We feel it in little branch meetings or in meetings with missionaries in the far parts of the earth. It's a sweet thing. It's a priceless thing. It is a mark of the divinity of this great work in which we are engaged.

I recall while living in the East some years ago, I invited one of my good friends, not a member of the Church, to attend our sacrament meeting. He promised that he would sometime. Weeks went by; I met him on the street one day following a Rotary luncheon, and he said, "I was up to your meeting last Sunday night, but you weren't there." I explained that I was visiting another ward, and then he said in answer to my inquiry as to whether he enjoyed the meeting, "Yes, I enjoyed it, especially the spirit of it, but," he said, "I wish you would tell me one thing. Why is it that when your people come to the end of a meeting and the benediction is said that they don't seem to have any place to go?" He said, "That group stood up, recognizing the meeting was over, but they just stood there and visited and visited until I thought I was never going to get out of that building. Finally, when I got into the foyer, it was more congested than ever." Well, that is a further evidence of this spirit—this spirit of love, this spirit of brotherhood that is so real, my brethren and sisters, in the Church.

IMPELLING FORCE OF GOSPEL

We witness it in our missionary activities. I recall vividly, and it was called to my mind by the remarks of Brother Sonne this afternoon, standing on the shores of war-torn Europe following the war and watching the mission presidents—several of whom are here before me this afternoon—come back to the shores of Europe. I wondered in my heart, What is it that causes them to leave the comforts of their homes and come over to these war-torn lands where there is a shortage of everything necessary for civilized living? What is it that causes a man to sell his grocery business and come way up into Norway on his third mission? What is it that causes a man to sell his business down in California and go up to Sweden? What is it that caused a man to turn over his furniture business in Salt Lake City and come over to the shores of war-torn Holland, where there was shortage of food, shortage of clothing, shortage of fuel and transportation, and where there were practically no comforts? What is it that causes a man to leave his chair in a university surrounded by all the comforts earned by a long life of service and go back into war-torn France? And so on. I tell you, my brethren and sisters, it is marvelous. There isn't anything like it anywhere.

What is it that causes our young missionaries to want to go out and serve without any hope of material reward? I interviewed one of them down in a California stake recently. We couldn't accept him because he wasn't old enough. He broke down and cried. He said, "Brother Benson, ever since I was a deacon I've wanted to go on a mission." He stated, "The last few months my fiancée and I have been planning my mission and what would follow, and what support she would give while I was out in the field." And he told how his parents had prayed that the time might come that he would be considered worthy to go out and represent the Church in the world. Nearly six thousand of them are out in the world as we meet here today. What is the impelling force back of it?

How did the Prophet Joseph know as a young man that men and women would respond to the call to fill missions, to go out into the world representing an unpopular cause, to carry this glorious message? How did he know that the Saints, when and if they accepted the gospel, would respond to the call of gathering and come to Zion. Yes, the spirit of this work, my brethren and sisters, is a marvelous and a priceless thing.

CRITICAL PERIOD

Now during this critical period, and it is a critical period that we are passing through, I hope that we will keep ever burning in our hearts the spirit of this great work which we represent. If we do so, we'll have no anxiety; we'll have no fear; we'll not worry about the future because the Lord has given us the assurance that if we live righteously, if we keep his commandments, if we humble ourselves before him, all will be well. I turn to two passages of scripture today which I'd like to read:

... Be strong and of good courage; be not afraid, neither be thou dismayed: for the Lord thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest. (Joshua 1:9.)

This was the Lord's admonition to his son, Joshua, encouraging him to trust in God. Joshua answered that admonition in counsel to his people in these words:

... choose you this day whom ye will serve: ... but as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord. (Ibid., 24:15.)

ESSENTIALS FOR SECURITY

Embodied in these two passages of scripture are the two principal essentials for security and peace: first, trust in God; and second, a determination to keep the commandments, to serve the Lord, to do that which is right. Latter-day Saints who live according to these two admonitions—trust in God and keep the commandments—have nothing to fear.

The Lord has made it very clear in the revelations that even though times become perilous, even though we be surrounded by temptation and sin, even though there be a feeling of insecurity, even though men's hearts may fail them and anxiety fill their souls, if we only trust in God and keep his commandments we need have no fear.

In modern revelation the Lord has pointed this out very clearly. Even before the Church was organized, when there were only a handful of people following the leadership of the boy Prophet, the Lord said to his Saints,

Therefore, fear not, little flock; do good; let earth and hell combine against you, for if ye are built upon my rock, they cannot prevail. ...

Look unto me in every thought; doubt not, fear not. (D. & C. 6:34, 36.)

He has also said,

... it is my purpose to provide for my saints, for all things are mine. (Ibid., 104:15.)

REAL DEDICATION REQUIRED

My brethren and sisters, it is not going to be enough just passively to accept the teachings, standards, and ideals of the Church. It will require real activity, real dedication to the principles of righteousness if we are to face the future unafraid. But if we have the courage, sound judgment, and the faith so to do, then no matter what happens we will be able to face any situation with courage and with faith and with the assurance that God will sustain us. I know this to be true, my brethren and sisters. I know that now is the time probably more than any other time in our lives to live the gospel. We should not be lulled away into a false security as Nephi said many would be in the last days. We should not be pacified and feel in our hearts that we can sin a little, that we can attend to our meetings part of the time, that we can pay a token tithing, that we can live the gospel when it is convenient, and all will be well. We must not be "at ease in Zion" and say, "Zion prospereth, all is well." But we must live the gospel plan every day of our lives in its fulness. Therein is safety. Therein will come a satisfaction which comes from righteous living which will enter our hearts, give us the courage and the strength that we need. There is no security in unrighteousness. The sinful always live in despair.

NEED FOR RIGHTEOUSNESS

We have a great mission. We must be prepared, both young and old. We must stand as a leaven among the nations, true to the principles of righteousness.

We need to be humble. We need to be grateful. We need as families to kneel in family prayer, night and morning. Just a few words added to the blessing on the food, which is becoming the custom in some parts, is not enough. We need to get onto our knees in prayer and gratitude, as Alma admonished. (See Alma 34.) We need the spirit of reverence in our houses of worship referred to by President McKay in his beautiful address last night at Priesthood meeting. We need to keep the Sabbath day holy. We need to close our businesses on Sunday, and as Latter-day Saints, refrain from making purchases on the Sabbath except in cases of emergency. We need to refrain from going to moving pictures on the Sabbath, and if we are operating show houses, we should close them on Sunday. We should not seek pleasure in any form on the Sabbath day. We should stand firm in opposition to Sunday baseball and other amusements regardless of what much of the Christian world may do. We should oppose gambling in all of its forms including the parimutuel betting at horse races referred to so effectively by Brother Moyle. We should refrain from the habit of card playing against which we have been counseled by the leaders of the Church. We should stand united in opposition to the wider distribution and use of alcohol and other things declared by the Lord to be harmful.

COMMANDMENTS TO OBSERVE

If we keep the commandments, we will refrain from joining secret orders and lodges. Our first allegiance will be to the Church and the priesthood quorums. We will attend our meetings. We will take our families with us to the sacrament meeting and sit with them and worship with them. If we keep the commandments, we will pay our tithes and offerings, our fast offerings, and our welfare contributions. We will respond to the calls in the Church, and we will not resign from office when called under the authority of the Holy Priesthood. We will follow the counsel of the leadership of the Church and call our families together periodically in home evenings in order that the home might be safeguarded and the solidarity of the family increased. We will read the scriptures in our homes as the Lord has admonished us. We will not violate the sacred covenants we have taken upon ourselves in the waters of baptism and in the temples of the Lord, nor will we desecrate or cast to one side the garments of the Holy Priesthood. We will attend to our temple work. We will become saviors on Mount Zion in very deed.

GOOD CITIZENSHIP

If we keep the commandments we'll be good citizens. We'll exercise our right to vote. We'll follow the counsel which the Lord has given in the revelations regarding our obligation to seek out "honest men and wise men" (D. & C. 98:8-10) who will stand for principle, men who will put principle ahead of political expediency. We will seek men of faith who believe the Constitution was inspired and that this nation has a spiritual foundation. If we are living the gospel, we will feel in our hearts that the First Presidency of the Church not only have the right, but are also duty bound under heaven to give counsel on any subject which affects the temporal or spiritual welfare of the Latter-day Saints, regardless of whether or not some men may think such counsel may have political implications.

We must stand firm for that which we know to be right, my brothers and sisters, and uphold these men who have been sustained as our leaders in modern Israel. All this we will do, and more, if we live the gospel. We will keep ourselves clean and unspotted from the world. We will live lives of purity. We will be true to our wives and families. We will live according to the gospel plan.

BLESSING

May God bless us, my brothers and sisters, that we may trust in God and keep his commandments. That is all the Lord expects of us. Joy and happiness will enter our hearts as we do so. It is the wicked who flee when no man pursueth. The righteous are bold as a lion. People who live righteously have nothing to fear. In spite of the turmoil, anxiety, and insecurity which may seem to be everywhere, we will be able to stand erect and go forward with courage and faith. We must not compromise with evil. "They enslave their children's children who make compromise with sin."

God bless us to live the gospel, to be grateful for all that we have and are, and for all that we enjoy, in this the kingdom of God, I humbly pray, and I bear fervent testimony to you to the truth of the words that have been spoken at this conference, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

Brother Ezra Taft Benson, of the Council of the Twelve, has just addressed us and we will now join the Tabernacle Choir in singing "High On The Mountain Top," conducted by Elder Richard P. Condie.

After the singing we will hear from Bishop LeGrand Richards, Presiding Bishop of the Church, and one of the members of the family of the man about whom so many have spoken so affectionately here today, President George F. Richards.

---

The choir and congregation sang the hymn "High On The Mountain Top."

BISHOP LEGRAND RICHARDS

Presiding Bishop

My brothers and sisters, from the depths of my soul I thank the Lord for the privilege of being here to worship with you in the sessions of this conference. I think of the words of the Master when he was tempted to turn the stone into bread to prove that he was the Son of God. He replied, "It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." (Matt. 4:4.) And I am sure we have been fed the bread of life eternal during the sessions of this conference.

APPRECIATION OF FATHER

President Smith has already indicated that I am a son of George F. Richards. I would like to take this occasion, representing his family, to express appreciation to those who have paid tribute to Father during the sessions of this conference and the many, many friends who have written their tributes since Father's passing away. Many have said that they thought he was one of the finest men that ever lived. As his son, I would like to tell you that I don't know of any man that I think lived nearer the Lord than my father. When he spoke in prayer, he just talked to the Lord. And when he made a promise to me, it was just the same as if the Lord had made it. He has left us a great heritage and a great responsibility, and I hope his posterity will not fail him.

I should like also to mention Brother Roscoe Eardley. Brother Roscoe and I had much in common. We each filled two missions in Holland; we each presided over that mission. Roscoe was a great missionary, and the Dutch people loved him. He loved the Church, and he was loyal to it in every way. I also worked side by side with Brother Frank Evans in the Church offices, and I think he was one of the grandest men it has ever been my privilege to know. And I thank God for the presence of Brother Thomas E. McKay in this meeting. We have been praying for you, Brother McKay, for months, and we thank the Lord that you are here to worship with us on this occasion.

FAITH COMMENDED

While riding to my conference a week ago last Saturday, one of my companions said, "Bishop, what do the Saints need to be told more than anything else?" I answered, "The one thing they ought to be told is how wonderful they are in the payment of their tithes and their offerings, in helping to build meetinghouses, in sending their boys into the mission field, in helping with the great welfare program of the Church, in the buying of projects and helping with the budget, in maintaining their wards, and in the other things they have been asked to help with, such as the Primary Children's hospital, the Relief Society building, and the BYU fieldhouse." I tell you, my heart goes out in admiration, in thanksgiving to God for the faith of the Latter-day Saints, and I love them. For over twelve years now I have had to do with the financial affairs of this Church, and we haven't passed one year that the Saints haven't paid a greater tithing than the year before. We are already away ahead this year over last year. I don't think they are making undue sacrifices, because of the faith I have that every effort they put forth in the building up of the kingdom of God shall be in the words of the prophet, as bread cast upon the water which after many days shall return.

When I was a boy, my father said, "My son, there is no organization or corporation or institution in this world that will pay you as great dividends on the investment of your time and your talents and your means as the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints." After nearly fifty years since my father made me that promise, I stand before you to say that I have seen it verified in the lives of the Latter-day Saints and the lives of my own family, and of my own loved ones. And so I say, God bless the Saints for their faith and for their integrity.

SACRIFICES OF SAINTS

Brother Benson has just talked of the marvelous sacrifices being made to carry on the great missionary work of the Church; then there is the building of meetinghouses. We have about four hundred of them in the course of construction at the present time, and the way the Saints sacrifice in order to raise their portion of the money, to me, is a marvelous thing. My daughter called me a few nights ago after I had retired. She said, "Daddy, I was afraid you were in bed, but we just came from our ward, and we raised tonight fifteen thousand dollars to make the final payment on our meetinghouse." And she added, "To cap the climax, the bishop gave another thousand." I say God bless the Saints and leaders like that.

This same daughter was sent out to collect money. She went into the home of one student. He'd given his part, but they had to have more. The building cost more than they had anticipated. He said, "Well, now, I don't know where I can get it tonight, but give me a few days; come back again." He gathered up his books that he had finished using at school and took them to the university and sold them to get money to pay another contribution on the meetinghouse.

Sister Richards and I were in Idaho a few weeks ago to dedicate a meetinghouse. When we heard the stories of those Saints, how they had sacrificed, we were thrilled. One good sister told how she had taken her cow and had it killed and cut up, and had stood on the street corner of the little town selling beef sandwiches in order to raise her portion for that meetinghouse. There isn't time to tell you more of these stories. But I do want to say that just as long as the Lord will keep putting that kind of faith in the hearts of the Latter-day Saints, you just can't stop the kingdom from growing. No power under heaven can do it. And I thank God for your faith.

SPIRIT OF DARKNESS

Now, as I love the Saints for their faithfulness, I also feel remorse and sorrow for those who fail to have that kind of faith, for those who are not willing to do their part, for those who have discontinued attending their meetings. Brigham Young said that when we fail to attend our sacrament meetings and observe our prayers, the Spirit of the Lord will withdraw himself, and a spirit of darkness will come over us. Now there are a great many people in our midst who have ceased attending their meetings, and who do not observe their prayers. Some of them are near to us, some of them are dear to us, but the Lord does withdraw his Spirit. Just within the last week I had a woman in my office who told me how her husband had quit doing his duty and how the Lord had withdrawn his Spirit. She said, "Sometimes I think he is almost possessed of the devil." Well, the Lord knew that we could not be disobedient to his commandments and still enjoy his Spirit. I want to read the twelfth verse of the ninety-fifth section of the Doctrine and Covenants.

If you keep not my commandments, the love of the Father shall not continue with you, therefore, you shall walk in darkness.

And when people walk in darkness, they cannot love the brethren; they cannot love the Lord; they cannot love the people; they cannot love this great Latter-day cause, the greatest movement the world has ever known, aside from the great atonement of the Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. At least that is my appraisal of it. I think that is what the Lord had in mind when he said in a revelation to the Prophet Joseph Smith:

But behold, verily I say unto you, that there are many who have been ordained among you, whom I have called but few of them are chosen.

They who are not chosen have sinned a very grievous sin, in that they are walking in darkness at noon-day. (D. & C. 95:5-6.)

The noonday is the brightest period of the day, and with all this glorious truth about us, some walk in darkness.

LORD'S SPIRIT WITHDRAWN

When the Lord has withdrawn his Spirit, and one walks in darkness, he says: "Well, I'm not religious."

We represent the adult group of the Aaronic Priesthood, many of whom are indifferent. One good brother wrote in and inquired: "How can a man effect a complete annihilation of his soul and his body?" Why, because he has not observed the commandments of God. He was not attending his meetings. He was not praying; so the Spirit of the Lord withdrew and left him walking in darkness; and when a man walks in darkness, he has little hope to look forward to.

When a man says he is not religious, does he mean that he believes that when he dies that will end it all? In the words of the Savior, speaking of the days of Noah, he said: "They shall say, come, let us eat, drink, and make merry, for tomorrow we die." Does it mean that he believes that will end it all? Paul said that "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." (I Cor. 15:19.) And the Savior said,

For what shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul? (Mark 8:36-37.)

Oh, I tell you, brothers and sisters, the glorious gospel that we have is worth more than all the wealth in the world.

MEANING OF RELIGION

When a man says he is not religious, does he mean that he would not be interested if religion could tell him where he came from, why he is here, and where he is going? Does he mean that he is not interested in these things, when he says he is not religious? Suppose you had never seen your own father, and yet you had had communications from him from Europe or elsewhere, and he had been kind to you, but conditions hadn't been such that you could visit him. Wouldn't you want to see your own father? Wouldn't you some day want to be acquainted with him and enjoy his association?

Paul tells us that ... we have had fathers of our flesh which corrected us, and we gave them reverence: shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits, and live? (Heb. 12:9.)

When religion can teach us that we are the very offspring of God the Eternal Father, how could any of us not look forward longingly to the day when he will take us by the hand and say, "... Well done, thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord." (Matt. 25:21.)

ADDED UPON

If what we read in the Pearl of Great Price is true, that those who were faithful in keeping their first estate should be added upon, (and there isn't time to discuss how marvelously those who have kept their first estate have been added upon) but that more blessed is he who keeps his second estate, for he shall be added upon forever and forever, does a man mean when he says, "I am not religious," that he would not like to be added upon forever and forever? There is an eternal life, and we have that right awaiting us if we will just live for it.

Does a man mean, when he says he is not religious, that he does not care whether his wife and his children belong to him throughout the countless ages of eternity, that they mean nothing to him?

I was in the Arizona Temple not so long ago. We spent a day there, and the Primary teachers of one of the wards brought their children to do baptismal work for the dead. While the children were doing this work, we held a testimony meeting with the teachers, and in that meeting sister after sister stood up (their husbands were not active in the Church), and with tears in their eyes, they bore their testimonies and said that the greatest desire of their hearts was for the day to come when their husbands could take them into the temple of God and be sealed to them for time and all eternity, that they might have claim on them and their children.

Do we mean when we say we are not religious that we do not care anything about such matters?

THE RICH MAN AND LAZARUS

How are we going to find out these things? You remember the story of the rich man and Lazarus, how Lazarus died and was received into Abraham's bosom and the rich man into torment. He called to father Abraham and said: "Have mercy on me, and send Lazarus, that he may dip the tip of his finger in water, and cool my tongue; for I am tormented in this flame." Father Abraham explained that there was a gulf between them. Then the rich man's thoughts turned to his five brothers who were still upon the earth, and he said, "I pray thee therefore, Father, that thou wouldest send him to my father's house:

"For I have five brethren; that he may testify unto them, lest they also come into this place of torment."

Abraham saith unto him, "They have Moses and the prophets; let them hear them."

And the rich man said: "Nay, Father Abraham: but if one went unto them from the dead, they will repent."

Father Abraham said: "If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead." (See Luke 16:22-31.)

I pray that God will put it into the hearts of our loved ones and those of the Saints of Zion who are not as faithful as they should be, who do not think they are religious, that they will realize that we do not only have Moses and the prophets, but also the living prophets of God who are sent to show us the way; that they will listen unto them. When I think of all the Lord has revealed in the establishment of his Church and kingdom on the earth in these later days, to me it is all Isaiah described it to be when he said the Lord would proceed to do a marvelous work and a wonder, and the wisdom of their wise men should perish, and the understanding of their prudent men should be hid. God help us to touch the hearts of those who cannot see and who are walking in darkness, and God bless you faithful Latter-day Saints for your integrity and your devotion to his great cause, I humbly pray in the name of the Lord, Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

You have just listened to the Presiding Bishop of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, LeGrand Richards, and while he has been talking, I have been thinking of this great audience. Reference has been made repeatedly to missionary work. We have been told that we have nearly six thousand missionaries out in the world today. Of course they are coming and going all the time. For a small church, such as we are, having membership a little more than a million, approximately six thousand missionaries is a marvelous record. As I sit here looking at the faces of the men and women that I know here, and I can see people here from all over, it came into my mind to ask the question: How many of you have filled a two-year or longer mission during your lifetime? Raise your hands. Thank you very much. This is a missionary Church. Sometimes people might think, from the way we refer to finance, that we are a bank, but we are not. Think of the buildings that are on this block, every one of them built many years ago. This tabernacle and the temple were built in the very poverty of our people when they were trying to make homes here in the valleys of these mountains. But the Lord said, "Seek ye first,"—not last—"... seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." (Matt. 6:33.)

COMFORTS AND BLESSINGS

When I travel, as I have, approximately a million miles in the world, in many nations and places in the world, and come back here, I do not know of any place where people have more comforts and blessings than we do right here in this place that 103 years ago was a desert land, with only one tree growing in this valley. My grandfather came with the first company of pioneers. There were 143 men, three women, and two children. After he had been here for five or six years, one of his non-Mormon friends asked him, "President Smith, why did you leave Nauvoo and all that fine country back there in New York and Missouri and come out to this God-forsaken land?"

The reply of my grandfather was, "Why, we came here willingly, because we had to."

In other words, the people, about twenty thousand of them, when they were expelled from Illinois, had their choice. They could have stayed there and lived with so-called Christians (I want to emphasize that), or they could leave and come out here and live with the Indians. That was their choice. They preferred the Indians. Now that was not because our people did not believe in Christianity. I know of no people in the world who believe as firmly in the divine mission of Jesus Christ as do the membership of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. I remember I have had many people say to me, "Why, you people do not even believe in Jesus Christ."

I have said, "What is the matter with you? If we do not believe in Jesus Christ, why do we call the Church, the Church of Jesus Christ?"

"Oh, I didn't know you called it that, I thought it was called the Mormon Church," they have replied.

DIVINE MISSION OF JESUS CHRIST

I remember I attended a conference in Canada once, and it so happened that I referred in my remarks during the evening to our faith in the divine mission of Jesus Christ, that we believed that the Lord prepared the way for the coming of Jesus of Nazareth; prepared Mary to be his mother and Joseph to act as his earthly father. And then Herod, in an attempt to destroy him, sent out a decree that the children in Bethlehem and the country round about who were two years old and under were to be slain, and he became one of the greatest butchers of all time. Joseph and Mary took Jesus and departed from the land of their birth and their home and went down into Egypt. They returned later when that wicked king had died, and the boy grew up in Nazareth and other places in that section. When he was twelve years old, he went with his parents to the temple. They were there to perform services in the temple as was customary with those good Hebrew people in those days. When Joseph and Mary started home, they missed the boy. They returned to Jerusalem and found him reasoning with the wise men in the temple. When he was reproached by his parents for causing them such anxiety, his answer was, ". . . wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" (Luke 2:49.) Remember he was only twelve years old.

When Jesus became a man, he went to the River Jordan where John was baptizing "because there was much water there," and he needed more than a teacup or a basin full—Jesus of Nazareth, who was to become the Savior of the world, went to John and applied for baptism, and John recognizing him as an unusual character, said, ". . . I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me?"

"And Jesus answering said unto him, Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness. Then he suffered him." (Matt. 3:14-15.) And Jesus of Nazareth went down into the water and was baptized by John, and when he came up out of the water, the Holy Ghost came and descended upon him in the form of a dove.

And a voice from heaven said, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." (Ibid., 3:17.) Could there be anything more definite than that? Our wonderful Bible contains all that information and much more, of course. When people say or think that we do not believe in the divine mission of Jesus Christ, let them know that we believe all that the Bible teaches in reference to him. We believe the story of how he organized his people and taught them, and how eventually, at the insistence of his own people, he was crucified by the representatives of the Roman government; not for any wrong he had done, but because he was too good to live among that people.

THE RESURRECTION

We believe all that. But that was not the end. The Bible tells us that he had been taken down from the cross where he had been crucified and placed in the tomb of Joseph of Arimathea. After three days, when the women went to the tomb with spices and other things to prepare his body for burial as was customary, they found that the tomb was empty. They began looking around. Mary was standing near the sepulchre weeping when she saw someone who she thought was the gardener. She asked where Jesus was, and He said, "Mary," and she recognized his voice. I suppose Mary would have embraced him, but he said, "Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to my Father" (John 20:17)—that was three days after his crucifixion—but to go and tell his brethren, and gave her other instructions.

Not very long after that, his disciples were gathered together in a room; because of their fear of their enemies, the door was closed. All at once he materialized in that room—he did not have to wait for a door or a window to open. Thomas, who had not been present at the time of the previous appearance of Jesus, had been told by the disciples. Realizing that there was some doubt in the mind of Thomas, Jesus said, "... Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side." (Ibid., 20:27.)

And when Thomas had done it, he cried out, "My Lord and my God." (Ibid., 20:28.) He identified the body as the one he had seen on the cross. And then the Savior said, "Thomas, because thou hast seen me, thou hast believed: blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed." (Ibid., 20:29.) But that was not the end. He said to his disciples, "And other sheep I have, which are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd." (Ibid., 10:16.)

VISIT TO OTHER SHEEP

What did he mean? We do not know from the Bible, but there is another glorious record, the history of the ancestors of the American Indians, another scripture, the Book of Mormon, and in this scripture is recorded how he fulfilled that promise of going to his other sheep. At the time of his crucifixion this earth was rent, and the mountains were made valleys, the valleys were made mountains, and buildings were destroyed, and many of the people who lived on the land lost their lives. They had been looking for the time when the Savior should come, for Samuel, the Lamanite prophet, had told them about it and all that would occur. They were gathered around the temple; and all at once they heard a voice, but they did not understand it. And they heard it a second time; and still they could not tell where it came from. And then they heard it the third time, and this time they understood, and looking up, saw the heavens open, and a glorified Being came down and stood among them. Had there been any doubt in their minds as to who it was, he dispelled it, because he said, "Behold, I am Jesus Christ, whom the prophets testified shall come into the world." (III Nephi 11:10.)

Brethren and sisters, we have all the information that our Christian brothers and sisters do with regard to the life of the Savior in the Bible, and in addition to that, we have the story of his coming to the people on this western hemisphere, as recorded in the Book of Mormon. And when he came among them, he talked to them as he had to those in the old world. When he was ready to leave them, he blessed them, he healed their sick and took their children up in his arms and wept over them. And after being with them two or three days, coming and going, they saw him ascend into heaven.

EXPERIENCES OF JOSEPH SMITH

In 1820 Joseph Smith, the boy prophet not yet fifteen years of age, seeking to know what Church he should join because of the confusion in his neighborhood—his mother insisted he belong to one church and his father to another—went out in the woods to pray. This boy had read in the Bible, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him." (James 1:5.) He went out into the woods and put it to the test. As he knelt there, the adversary sought to overpower him and he was stricken, but suddenly a bright light appeared. Two glorified Beings were standing in the air above him in the woods near Palmyra, New York. He saw them, and they asked him what he wanted, and he asked which of all the churches he should join. One of them spoke to him and said, pointing to the other, "This is My Beloved Son, Hear Him!" (Pearl of Great Price, Joseph Smith 2:17.) Almost the same language that was used by the Father when Jesus came up out of the waters of baptism—"This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." (Matthew 3:17.) So when Joseph the boy wanted to know what to do, he was told by the Savior himself.

Sunday, October 1Third Day

ADDITIONAL LIGHT

I say to you we not only have all that the world has with regard to the divinity of the mission of Jesus Christ as recorded in the Bible, but also we have the story of another book, known as the Book of Mormon, and the account of his appearing in this western hemisphere, the tradition of which has been among the Indians ever since; and we also have the story of another man who gave his life as a witness that he knew that God lives and Jesus is the Christ. I refer to the Prophet Joseph Smith.

My brothers and sisters, if men and women, with all the truth that they have, would retain all the wonderful things that have been passed on through the prophets of God, and then let us share with them the additional information the Lord has revealed since the Holy Bible was made accessible to the world, what a difference it would make. I remember a very fine doctor, who was a good member of the Jewish church in Atlanta, Georgia, and who read the Book of Mormon. I became well-acquainted with him, and he said to me one day, "There isn't a man living in the world today that could write the Book of Mormon. It must be something more than the work of man." I have known many people, who, having read it, and prayed about it, have received a witness that it is true.

INSPIRATION OF ALMIGHTY

What I want to emphasize is this: Not only do we have all that is contained in these sacred records, but also when you have received the gospel, been baptized, had the hands of the servants of the Lord laid upon your head and received the Holy Ghost, you have a right to the inspiration of the Almighty if you live to be worthy of it. Ought we not to be grateful for our many blessings? What a wonderful thing to live in a land like America and to have all the advantages that we have. I feel so grateful for my privileges in the Church of Jesus Christ, for my companionship with the men and women of this Church and of other churches. I am grateful to have a host of friends in the various churches of the world, scattered in different places. I am grateful for those friendships, but I will not be satisfied until I can share with them some of the things which they have not yet received. And that is the thing we must keep in our minds; it is our responsibility to bear the word. Let us do the things the Lord wants us to do and keep his commandments and be worthy of the blessings that we enjoy that are superior to those of most people in all the world.

OBEDIENCE BRINGS BLESSINGS

This is the closing session of this great conference. It will be another six months before we are again brought together in this capacity, as far as we know now. But in that six months we do not know what may occur. Reference has been made to the fact that many of our boys and some of our girls are already being taken away preparatory for another war. War is the result of sin, not righteousness. And if we want to avoid war and avoid the responsibilities that come, our duty is to keep the commandments of God, and he has promised that if we will do that we will enjoy blessings that we cannot enjoy in any other way.

I am happy to be with you today. We have had a wonderful time. We are grateful to this wonderful choir that sings to the world every Sunday, a choir that has rendered 1102 programs, broadcast to the world. We are not depending entirely upon the nearly six thousand missionaries. We also have the radio, and thousands of people listen in to the program that is given each week by this wonderful choir, an unpaid organization that is doing missionary work for the blessings of mankind.

Now are you happy? If you are keeping the commandments of God, I am sure you are happy. We have much to do. You have heard something about preparing a temple at Los Angeles.

PLANS AND ACCOMPLISHMENTS

The first plans have been approved so that the temple may be constructed just as soon as the detailed plans are prepared. It will add another temple. We are the only people in the world who know what temples are for, and how wonderful it is that we can build a temple without feeling the loss of the expense. We have been building temples and building meetinghouses all these years. Since the war, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, the people that belong to this organization, have sent 130-odd carloads of food, bedding, and clothing to the people across the sea because they needed it, and they were made a present of it. Yet our granaries are filled today. Our root cellars are being filled now. Our little workshops where clothing is made and where second-hand clothing is repaired and made desirable are filling up again, and I want to say that I do not know of any people in the world that are more richly blessed than we, notwithstanding our constant giving that has been referred to here. They who give to the poor, but lend to the Lord, and he is a wonderful paymaster.

Brethren and sisters, let us do our part. Harken to the advice that has come to us here during these sessions of conference. This is the Lord's house. His Spirit has been here, and we have been uplifted and blessed thereby. I pray that the power of our Heavenly Father may go with you workers of this Church, you members, wherever you go, that your homes may be the abiding place of the spirit of our Heavenly Father, that your sons and daughters may grow up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, that you may love your neighbors, and that means members of the Church and those that are not: That means all who seek to be what the Lord would have them be. I pray that each of us may feel day by day the assurance that so many of you have, that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, that Joseph Smith was a prophet of the Living God. I know that as well as I know that I live, and I bear that witness to you in humility, and realizing the seriousness of such a statement if it were not true, I still bear this testimony to you in the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

The Tabernacle Choir will now sing "Behold, God the Lord Passed By."

The closing prayer will be offered by President Walter Adolph Hunzeker of the Montpelier Stake, Idaho, after which this Conference will adjourn sine die.

The Deseret Sunday School Conference will convene in this building at 7:00 P. M. tonight. All Sunday School workers will wish to be in attendance.

All calls that come to us will be announced at the dismissal of this meeting over the loud speaking system on the grounds.

The choir music for today's sessions of the Conference has been furnished by the Tabernacle Choir, with Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting and Alexander Schreiner at the organ for the morning session, and Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ for the afternoon session.

I wish to take this occasion to thank this fine choir and the organists and the other choirs too, that have been singing for us during the Conference. Go where you will in all the world and you will find no such choir as the one that sings in this building accompanied by the great organ we all think so much of.

And now again, brethren and sisters, peace, love, kindness and the blessings of our Heavenly Father be with you henceforth and forever, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

The Tabernacle Choir sang "Behold, God the Lord Passed By."

The benediction was offered by President Walter Adolph Hunzeker of the Montpelier Stake.

Conference adjourned sine die.

GENERAL PRIESTHOOD MEETING

The General Priesthood meeting of the Church convened in the Tabernacle at 7:00 p.m., Saturday, September 30, 1950.

President George Albert Smith was present and conducted the services.

President George Albert Smith:

There are two buildings being filled besides this. Surely Zion is growing!

We will start our meeting by the Male Chorus of the Tabernacle Choir, Elder J. Spencer Cornwall, director, and Elder Alexander Schreiner at the organ, joining with the congregation in singing as an opening song—I want you to notice the title of it—"Do What Is Right."

---

The Tabernacle Choir Male Chorus and the congregation joined in singing the hymn, "Do What Is Right."

President James A. Criddle of the Portneuf Stake offered the opening prayer.

The Tabernacle Choir Male Chorus sang the hymn "I Know That My Redeemer Lives."

President George Albert Smith:

I think, brethren, that this is our largest group of men at a Priesthood meeting. Zion seems to be growing.

We have met tonight to wait upon the Lord. We are not here out of curiosity and we are not here to get in out of the weather. We are here in this comfortable mansion of our Heavenly Father to wait upon him, and I am sure if we will exercise our faith and prayers the Lord will bless us and we will be fed the bread of life.

Our first speaker tonight will be President David O. McKay.

PRESIDENT DAVID O. McKAYSecond Counselor in the First Presidency*

When we realize that the twelve thousand or more members of the priesthood quorums assembled here tonight can say, each one in his own heart, "I know that my Redeemer lives," we can sense at least dimly the strength of this Church, for upon the priesthood rests the structure, the entire structure of the Church of Jesus Christ.

EVIDENCES OF PROGRESS

We have cause to be thankful that we have many evidences today of the marvelous growth of this work. In the mission fields, we have more missionaries than we have ever had before, nearly six thousand, not counting the missionaries in the stakes of Zion; tithing is greater than ever and increasing; baptisms in the field are greater; only within the last two weeks we had reports of a hundred and fifty baptisms in one mission in August; another, in the same month, two hundred and sixty-three, and these are converts, not children. The stakes and wards are increasing. More Church edifices are now under construction than we have ever had before in the history of the Church. All these are sure evidences of progress; and this attendance tonight is another,—one of the most encouraging. As President Smith has said, you are not here out of curiosity. You are not here because of any special attraction. You are here because you respect your calling. You honor your priesthood because of the sense of the responsibility that you carry. Each of you who holds the priesthood carries a certain amount of responsibility for the success of God's work. That realization, that willingness to respond to duty, has brought together tonight, on this September 30, 1950, the largest assembly of priesthood, I believe, ever held in the Church at a priesthood meeting.

The assembly of itself is an inspiration, especially when you contemplate its significance, and realize that in the brotherhood of Christ we are all one, supporting one another. It is sublime.

I pray for your sympathy, for your faith and prayers, and above all, for the inspiration of the Lord, that what I may say may be of worth, of interest, and contributive to the advancement of God's work.

NEED OF REVERENCE

I have, really, on my mind but one message. I am going to say one appeal for this vast audience of leaders. I believe there is one great need in the Church which you presidencies of stakes, bishoprics of wards, presidencies of quorums, and officers in auxiliaries, can supply. I have in mind the need of more reverence in our houses of worship, better order and discipline in our classrooms, in quorum meetings and in auxiliary groups.

The more we try to cultivate the attributes of the Savior, the stronger we become in character and in spirituality, and those are the two great purposes of life, so to live that we may be susceptible to the inspiration of the Holy Ghost and to his guidance.

OVERCOME EVIL TENDENCIES

I do not know who it was who wrote many years ago that the whole purpose of life might be summed up in these words: "To subdue matter that we might realize the ideal."

When I first read that I thought I could paraphrase it and say, "The whole purpose of life is to bring under subjection the animal passions, proclivities and tendencies, that we might realize the companionship, always, of God's Holy Spirit." I think that is the ideal. One chief purpose of life is to overcome evil tendencies, to govern our appetites, to control our passions,—anger, hatred, jealousy, immorality. We have to overcome them; we have to subject them, conquer them, because God has said: "My spirit will not dwell in unclean tabernacles, nor will it always strive with man."

A DIVINE ATTRIBUTE

The principle of self-control lies at the basis of reverence and good order in classrooms. I do not know how to define reverence, but I do know how to classify or to place it as one of the objectives of nobility, indeed, one of the attributes of deity.

Love is the divinest attribute of the human soul. I am not so sure but sympathy is next to it,—sympathy for the afflicted, for suffering animals, for our brethren and sisters. That is a God-like virtue.

Kindness is also a sublime virtue. The first sentence in what is now known as the Psalm of Love is this: "Love suffereth long and is kind."

However, in my thought tonight, I am prompted to place reverence next to Love. Jesus mentioned it first in the Lord's prayer: "Our Father which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name . . ." Hallow—to make holy—to hold in reverence.

When Jesus cleansed the temple, he was filled with reverent indignation because men were desecrating his Father's house, selling doves and lambs to be offered as sacrifice. Money changers were there for the convenience of those who came from other countries, so they could give in local currency their temple contributions. Seemingly, in their own eyes, they were justified, but they were doing these things in the House of God. We are told that he overturned the money changers' tables, and said to the sellers of doves, "Take these things hence. Make not my Father's house a house of merchandise."

REVERENCE DEFINED

"Reverence," wrote Ruskin, "is the noblest state in which a man can live in the world. Reverence is one of the signs of strength; irreverence one of the surest indications of weakness. No man will rise high who jeers at sacred things. The fine loyalties of life must be revered or they will be foresworn in the day of trial."

Charles Jefferson, the author of "The Character of Jesus" writes: "Men in many circles are clever, interesting, brilliant, but they lack one of the three dimensions of life. They have no reach upward. Their conversation sparkles, but it is frivolous and often flippant. Their talk is witty, but the wit is often at the expense of high and sacred things."

You can tell a true soul of wit by the things of which he makes light. The best humorous writers avoid making light of religion, or of sacred things.

Jefferson continues: "One finds this lack of reverence even in the church. In every community there are those who treat the House of God as they treat a streetcar, entering it and leaving it when they please. Even habitual church attendants often surprise and shock one by their irreverent behavior in the House of Prayer. Those persons are not ignoramuses or barbarians; they are simply undeveloped in the virtue of reverence."

ORDER IN CLASSROOMS

Our classrooms are sometimes places of boisterousness. Here is where we need good teachers. A teacher who can present a lesson interestingly will have good order, and when he or she finds students who are rebellious, flipping papers, paying no attention, stumbling, kicking one another, he or she may know that the lesson is not being properly presented. Perhaps it was not even properly prepared.

One of our mothers recently went to a Sunday School class to try to find out why her son was losing interest. There was so much boisterousness, so much confusion, so much noise, that she felt heart-sick; and as she arose to leave she said to the teacher: "I thought this was a Sunday School class, not bedlam!"

SELF-CONTROL EXEMPLIFIED

I have said something about self-control, self-mastery, as being one of the fundamental purposes of life. You see it exemplified in the life of the Savior, on the Mount of Temptation, when he resisted the tempter, who said: "If thou be the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread,"—an appeal to his appetite. "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

"If thou be the Son of God," again strong in his taunting, "Cast thyself down; for it is written"—he quotes scripture—"He shall give his angels charge concerning thee, and in their hands they shall bear thee up, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone."

"It is written," said the Savior, "Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God."

In the next temptation Satan is not taunting, but pleading. "All these things will I give thee," showing him the kingdoms of the world, "if thou wilt fall down and worship me."

That is a lesson of life. The tempter was foiled, taunting at first, strong in his assurance that he could tempt, but at last pleading, and finally banished. "Get thee hence, Satan, for it is written, thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve." And angels came and administered to him.

Now then, there is a lesson of life to us all. Satan tauntingly tempts us, and unless we resist and have in mind a higher goal than the mere indulgence or gratification of the physical, we are going to weaken, and the tempter will gain in strength.

TO BEGIN IN CHILDHOOD

The lesson of self-control should begin in childhood, in the home. Little children should have a sense of freedom to do as they wish up to a certain point. Beyond that point they cannot go, and that is when that freedom interferes with the rights, comfort or convenience of another member of the family.

I have told before about an incident that occurred in a zoo. It is simple, and some probably may think we should not go to the monkeys for lessons. I think they can teach us some. Sister McKay and I stood one day, I believe it was at San Diego, watching a mother monkey with a new born babe. She was guarding it, her quick eye watching the other monkeys in the cage; but the little babe was free to do just as it pleased, hopping around, weak in its infancy, getting hold of the bars, starting to climb. When it would reach a certain place, the mother would reach up and bring it back. When it got into a danger point, that mother instinctively guarded it and said, "Back this way." And then the babe was free again, but only within certain limits.

I said to Sister McKay, "There is a lesson of life in guiding children."

RIGHTS OF OTHERS

In the classrooms children should be taught, should be free to discuss, free to speak, free to participate in classwork, but no member of the class has the right to distract another student by jostling or making light and frivolous remarks. And I think in this Church, in the priesthood quorums and classes and in auxiliaries, teachers and superintendents ought not to permit it. Disorder injures the child who makes it. He should learn that when he is in society there are certain things which he cannot do with impunity. He cannot trespass upon the rights of his associates.

Let children learn this lesson in youth because when they get out in society and try to trespass against the law, they will feel the restraining hand and probably suffer punishment.

Good order in the classroom is essential to instill into the hearts and lives of young men and young women the principle of self-control. They want to talk and they want to whisper, but they cannot do it because it will disturb somebody else. Learn the power and lesson of self-mastery.

Reverence should be particularly manifest in sacrament meeting, in quorum meetings, in Sunday School, in M.I.A., in Primary, yes, and in Relief Society. This is a missionary Church. People come here for light and knowledge, for instruction, and they have a right to find it when they come.

EXTRACT FROM LETTER

The following extract from a letter that came to the First Presidency last week will illustrate my point:

"About one month ago two of your missionaries came to my door with a Book of Mormon. Since I am a Catholic, and a Catholic writer for our press, and since I am fully acquainted with Catholic doctrine and our Holy Bible, I at first refused the offer of the Book of Mormon. They, however, persisted, and as I have permission to read other books, it being given me by my pastor since I am a writer, I finally took the book. Of course you might well guess what happened. Having been trained during my sixteen years as a Catholic to recognize the truth when I see, hear or read it, I could not very well fail to recognize also that the Book of Mormon is true. This was even more the case when they later brought what might be termed its companion book, The Doctrine and Covenants.

"Surely this is not the kindly, gentle Jesus, as most Catholics are taught to know him, but just as surely in the Doctrine and Covenants this is the voice of Jesus as he spoke to the Apostles, the Pharisees and scribes, and all the people during his three years of public ministry on earth. Consequently, I began taking instructions, and your missionaries came twice a week to hold cottage meetings.

"Then I was taken to some Church meetings over in Rodeo, three miles from here, and I must admit that each time I have returned home broken-hearted and mourning to myself, 'Oh, poor Jesus, surely you have made the most miserable failure in your life in trying to establish your Church anew with these people.'

"During the distribution of the bread and water I can discern no spirit of prayer or prayerful reception among the congregation. They are just as liable to be smiling and whispering together as not, scarcely discerning the body of the Lord."

"Your own defects to know,
Make use of every friend and every foe."

IRREVERENCE IN SERVICES

On September 13 there came to my desk this letter from one of our stake workers:

"I refer to pronounced irreverence in our church services, with the noise, laughter and confusion that often accompanies such a condition. This is responsible for considerable criticism and dissatisfaction and results in absenting many members from the meetings. Our home, stake missionaries, are seriously handicapped in their work as many fear to bring investigators to our meetings while this condition of irreverence prevails.

"The trouble is often intensified by reason of frivolous remarks by speakers on the stand, and outbursts of laughter from the audience, in which the children feel free to participate. This is a sad admission in connection with the true Church of Jesus Christ.

"Irreverence in God's house is not conducive to the best interests of the sacrament administration and God must be displeased with the insincerity of his children who partake of the sacred emblems carelessly, devoid of reverence that should characterize true worship."

IMPROVEMENT NOTED

I should like to say here that my observation leads me to believe that we have made a wonderful step in that. I have not been in a house of worship, either in Sunday School or in sacrament meeting, where the order during the administering of the sacrament has not been just as perfect as it is at this moment in this building. A baby's voice, perhaps, somewhere, but God is not displeased with a baby's voice, when the parents and others are reverently thinking of the covenants they are making. However, the writer of this letter seems to have had a different experience.

I plead with you to develop this Christ-like attribute of reverence in our houses of worship and better discipline in our classrooms. And I believe that you brethren can lead in it.

ELDERS' EXAMPLE FOLLOWED

I remember in 1923, attending a conference at Burnley, Liverpool Conference. Brothers and sisters came from various parts of the district, and happy to see one another as you missionaries know they are, shaking hands, members of the Church happy to see the elders, shaking hands with them, and the elders joining in social greetings.

The meeting was held on the third floor of a public hall. In the adjoining room the sisters were preparing the lunch. We could hear the rattle of tin pans and of other receptacles. Ten o'clock came and there was still noise. It was fully five minutes before there was order.

Six months from that time when we held a meeting with the elders in that district, prior to the opening of the conference, we said: "Brethren, the Lord is not displeased with our greetings, expressions of love and brotherhood, but he is displeased with the irreverent attitude, and we have some choice people, strangers who are not used to this free intercourse of greetings so characteristic of Latter-day Saint meetings. So tomorrow morning, after you have greeted your friends from various places, without any announcement, at seven minutes to ten o'clock, you quietly take your seats. Do not say a word. You just go to your assigned places."

They did so and at four minutes to ten o'clock every member of that district in attendance at the conference, following the example of the missionaries, was in his or her seat, and there was order even before the hour of opening arrived.

REVERENCE ENJOINED

It is said that "Where two or three are gathered in my name, there will I be to bless them," and I tell you when he is present we should be reverent.

Someone said if Shakespeare were to enter this hall tonight, we should all stand up to greet him, but if Christ entered, we should fall on our knees and worship him.

God bless you, brethren, as leaders in Israel, as guides to youth, to increase your influence with those among whom you labor. The Lord help us to sanctify our houses of worship, that our chapels may be indeed sacred places in which we meet to worship God, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Male Chorus of the Tabernacle Choir and the Congregation joined in singing the hymn, "Redeemer of Israel."

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

First Counselor in the First Presidency

My brethren, again I sense that this is a great privilege to stand before you for a few minutes, and to say something to you that I hope may be helpful. Before I finish I shall want to return to my solo on the G string, "Unity," but I want to say a little something beforehand, and I trust the Lord will be with me that what I say may be in harmony with what He would have said.

THE PRIESTHOOD

The question of the priesthood has always been to me an alluring question, and not only alluring, but more or less elusive. We use the word priesthood apparently in at least two, if not three, senses. We use it sometimes to mean the power of the priesthood. I suppose in fact the priesthood is power. We use it sometimes to indicate the organization through which the priesthood operates, and we use it sometimes, apparently, to indicate the service which the priesthood is to render.

I am going to read two or three extracts from the brethren of the past regarding the priesthood. The Prophet Joseph said: "The priesthood is an everlasting principle and existed with God from eternity, and will to eternity, without beginning of days or end of years. The keys have to be brought from heaven whenever the gospel is sent. When they are revealed from heaven it is by Adam's authority."

On another occasion the Prophet said that Adam received the priesthood before the world was created.

PRE-EXISTENT CALLING

You may remember that as the account is given in the Pearl of Great Price, Book of Abraham, the Father told Abraham that sometime he had come down and organized the spirits, and then he told Abraham that when he came down among them he found many that were great and good, and further on he said to Abraham, and I will read this to you:

"... there were many of the noble and great ones; And God saw these souls that they were good, and he stood in the midst of them, and he said: These I will make my rulers; for he stood among those that were spirits, and he saw that they were good; and he said unto me: Abraham, thou art one of them; thou wast chosen before thou wast born."

Following upon this general principle, the Prophet Joseph said: "Every man who has a calling," every man, "to minister to the inhabitants of the world was ordained to that very purpose in the grand council of heaven before this world was. I suppose," said he, "that I was ordained to this very office in that grand council."

BRIGHAM YOUNG QUOTED

Now I think I might read two statements from Brigham Young: "If anybody wants to know what the priesthood of the Son of God is, it is the law by which the worlds are, were and will continue forever and ever. It is that system which brings worlds into existence and peoples them, gives them their revolutions, their days, weeks, months, years, their seasons and times, and by which they are rolled up as a scroll, as it were, and grown to a higher state of existence."

And on another occasion he declared the priesthood to be "a perfect system of government, of laws and ordinances, by which we can be prepared to pass from one gate to another and from one sentinel to another until we go into the presence of our Father and God."

These various quotations must inevitably lead us to a great deal of reflection, and as I have indicated, to me they suggest we are using the term, priesthood, in the manner that I have spoken about.

ANALOGY MADE

Now, I have often wondered if I could find an analogy to the priesthood, and the best I have been able to do is to liken the priesthood to citizenship. Potentially every citizen of the United States is a president of the United States, speaking generally and disregarding the limitations as to who may be president, but we are not all presidents. Every one of us may be a senator or a congressman. We have that power as citizens. We may be governors; we may be state legislators; we may be city councilmen; we may be county commissioners; we may be judges. All of these or each of them or any of them may come to any citizen, but in order to exercise any particular function we must be duly appointed to it or duly elected to it.

Now there are many differences between citizenship and priesthood, many. One that occurs to one offhand is that a man elected to be a judge in one locality, one jurisdiction, loses that power when he moves to another jurisdiction. That is not true of the priesthood. A man remains a deacon wherever he goes, or a high priest, and may perform his functions under certain limitations and rules.

But we do not now have the keys to do some of the things which Brother Brigham said the priesthood was to do, or that the priesthood did, for example, the creation and the governing of worlds. I can think of this situation, this power in terms of human government, civil government; the powers of sovereignty that rest in the people and that are delegated to government, to be exercised, by this man as a governor, by that man as a senator, and by another man as a president of the United States. So do we in the priesthood. Each one of us, as it seems to me, has certain functions of the whole priesthood. A deacon has his, the teacher has his, the priest his, and so on. And while under the priesthood, a man in a high place may perform all the functions of those who are below, the one in the lower bracket may not perform the functions of anybody in the higher bracket. This principle does not of course obtain in our civil government.

ORDINATION IN GRAND COUNCIL

I do not know whether we have a right to interpret the Prophet's statement, "Every man who has a calling to administer to the inhabitants of the world was ordained to that very purpose in the grand council of heaven, before the world was." I do not know that we may interpret that to mean any but those who have charge of dispensations or are leaders therein, but I like to think that it does include those of us of lesser calling and lesser stature. We have been told ever since I was old enough to remember that those who are coming forth among the Latter-day Saints were choice spirits, and I like to think that perhaps in that grand council something at least was said to us indicating what would be expected of us, and empowering us, subject to the re-confirmation here, to do certain things in building up the kingdom of God on earth.

EACH PART HAS OWN FUNCTION

Now the lesson that I would like to get out of that, has been referred to by President McKay, and that is that this whole priesthood organization—I am now using the term in the sense of organization—each part of it, has its own function, and each man belonging to the given order of priesthood, deacon, teacher, priest, and so on, has certain things to do. If a quorum fails in a ward, the ward is not carrying on as it should. If a member fails in a quorum, the quorum is not carrying on as it should. We are all bound together as one, and insofar as we fail, as individuals, to carry on the work which we are supposed to do, we are to that extent hindering the carrying on of the work of the Lord and to that extent we are responsible for the lack or fulness of growth that may occur on account of our failure.

There is no escape, as I see it, brethren, from that conclusion.

PERFECT SYSTEM OF GOVERNMENT

Now, before passing to the unity matter, I wish to call your attention to the fact that the Prophet said we had a perfect system, "the priesthood was a perfect system of government."

Have you ever thought, and if you have not I suggest you do think about it, that if the civil government of any of our communities were to be suddenly wiped out, that the Church organization could govern the community if it were given the necessary civil sanction. To illustrate, our teachers who are to keep the Church in order, could act as the police force. Our bishops are authorized to hold court, the high council and the president of the stake another court, both of appellate and of original jurisdiction, with an appeal to the Presidency of the Church from that decision. And in the First Presidency of the Church, the President of the Church resides the power and authority to make all necessary rules and regulations for the government of the people.

We have already, therefore, set up in this Church of ours, an organization of the Priesthood which could govern any community if it were given the necessary civil sanction, and if chaos should come, and if we travel along our present line far enough it will come, some of you may live to see the necessity of such an action as that.

INDIVIDUAL RESPONSIBILITY

Now, brethren, coming back to our individual responsibility for the welfare of the carrying on of the work of the Lord. Every man having his own place must, if he is to fulfill his full duty and perform his full functions, work with those about him. He cannot go off on a line of his own and still help to carry on the work of the Lord. The quorum must be united if it is to function properly, and united means seeing and working eye to eye. The ward and all the quorums in it must so function if the ward is to carry on and do its work as it should. So with the stake and so with the Church as a whole.

URGES UNITY

And now I will repeat to you, brethren, what I have said to you every time I have had the opportunity to talk to you, and that has been every time since I came into this position, and I believe I have attended every general priesthood meeting since then; if we were united there is nothing that the body of priesthood of this Church might not do within the functions of the priesthood, no matter what it is. And I say to you further that if we saw eye to eye on matters of civil government, which we are not likely to do, there is nothing we might not accomplish there within the places and jurisdictions where we live.

Now, brethren, I again pray, as I have always, that we will be united. The Lord has laid down with sufficient clearness that none of us needs have any doubt about it as to what his will is. He set up this government under his divine guidance, and so far as I am concerned, as I have said before so I say now, this government of ours under the Constitution, being thus set up by the Lord, is a part of my religion, and we shall not succeed, and we shall not preserve our independence, our free institutions, our liberties, unless we safeguard our rights under the Constitution.

This was said to us in the opening session of the conference by President George Albert Smith.

May God give us his power and his wisdom and his inspiration to help us do the things that we should do, to help us magnify the priesthood which we have, which is a delegation of the power of God himself—how greatly sobering that concept is—that we may bring to pass the things which he has declared we should do, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus, Amen.

PRESIDENT GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

Reference has been made to the responsibility of the priesthood, and I wonder if we fully appreciate what it means to have conferred upon us a portion of the authority of our Heavenly Father to officiate, and to teach the children of men. The condition of the world today is pitiable. Nobody knows what the outcome will be.

A train pulled out of one of the stations here this week with quite a large number of men, mostly young men, who are going out to take part as a portion of the armed forces of the United States. Every one of those men has lived where he could have received the priesthood, I am sure. I do not know how many of them have received it, but some of them have filled missions. History is repeating itself. War and distress are giving anxiety and deep sorrow to the peoples of this earth.

GROWTH OF CHURCH

In 1830 the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was organized with six members. Today the Church numbers more than a million souls. From the six men who were in that meeting when the Church was organized, and those who have followed, the Church has continued to grow and develop into a great organization. It may interest you to know that it is estimated that in Barratt Hall and the Assembly Hall and here in this building tonight there are approximately fourteen thousand men and boys who hold the authority of the priesthood. As has been intimated, this is the largest gathering of priesthood in a priesthood meeting that we have had, and the work continues to go forward.

There was a time when to be a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints brought ridicule and annoyance to the one who was recognized as such. How different it is today. Many offices in the states and territories and the Islands of the sea where our people are located are held by men who hold the priesthood.

I can remember a visit that I made in Washington at a time when our Representative from this state was not a member of the Church. I thought I would like to go and pay my respects to him, but when I called on him he was annoyed. I was only a young man at the time. Since then that great body that meets as a Congress in the United States has been honored by representatives of this Church and they have made friends for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, because of the dignity of their attitude among their fellows.

There is not any position, from the President of the United States down, that may not be held by a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints if the Lord wills.

POWER OF THE PRIESTHOOD

When I see this marvelous group of men and boys here tonight, I think, "what a power we have in the world that is not recognized by the world in many cases." I spoke of the political privileges that are ours, each of us having a right, if we have qualified, to cast our vote; and when we go to the Congress of the United States we find members of the Church there who receive us with consideration, and seek to look after our interests and keep us where we ought to be, not trailing along, but pushing forward.

The Priesthood is what I am thinking about. What a wonderful privilege it is to represent our Heavenly Father by holding the priesthood, and it does not prevent us from going anywhere in the world in honor, if we dignify our calling. There are those who do not like us. That is because they do not know who we are, but little by little, and very rapidly now, the men such as are sitting here tonight are going out into the world and mingling with the people, and it is remarkable what a host of friends there are scattered over the earth not members of the Church, who have been brought to realize the dignity and the worthwhile attitude of these men who have the priesthood.

THE VOICE OF WARNING

I want to read something from the First Section of the Doctrine and Covenants: "Hearken, O ye people of my church, saith the voice of him who dwells on high, and whose eyes are upon all men; yea, verily I say: Hearken ye people from afar; and ye that are upon the islands of the sea, listen together. For verily the voice of the Lord is unto all men, . . ."

That covers a good deal of territory, particularly when we realize that the voice of the Lord, the instructions of our Heavenly Father, must be carried by those who are authorized by Him to carry His messages. You see, we have a great responsibility.

"For verily the voice of the Lord is unto all men, and there is none to escape; and there is no eye that shall not see, neither ear that shall not hear, neither heart that shall not be penetrated. And the rebellious shall be pierced with much sorrow; for their iniquities shall be spoken upon the housetops, and their secret acts shall be revealed."

And then He goes on and says: "And the voice of warning shall be unto all people, by the mouths of my disciples, whom I have chosen in these last days. And they shall go forth and none shall stay them, for I the Lord have commanded them."

It is not a question of our choice. It is a question of following the instructions, and direction of our Heavenly Father.

"And they shall go forth and none shall stay them, . . . Behold, this is mine authority, and the authority of my servants, and my preface unto the book of my commandments, which I have given them to publish unto you, O inhabitants of the earth."

GOSPEL TO BE PREACHED

That is a portion of the First Section of the Doctrine and Covenants. We who are here tonight have been told that there are approximately six thousand of our missionaries scattered throughout the world, and yet that is not a drop in the bucket, but in the Lord's own way, and He says it will be done by those that He directs, all the people of the world must be reached if possible and the Gospel of Jesus Christ brought to them as far as we can go.

So we have a great responsibility, my brethren, a tremendous responsibility.

I remember when I was a child, I thought how few we were. At that time there were some difficulties and our people were being annoyed; but then somebody said: "Oh, never mind, the Lord and one man is a majority." So it is not a question of how many of us there are. We have the responsibility, and in order that we may carry that responsibility we will be placed in all kinds of positions of honor and trust, not only in the Congress of the United States, but in our great Universities, and at the head of our great businesses. It is marvelous how many things occur.

VISIT TO ALBANY

I think I will tell you a little incident that occurred many years ago. I was in Washington and so I wrote to the Governor of New York who at that time was Charles Seaman Whitman and told him that I was on my way home and if he was going to be in Albany on such and such a date, I think it was on Thursday as I remember it now, that I would be glad to get off the train and call and pay my respects and take the next train on home. I received a telegram in reply, reading, "Come right along. I will receive you here."

The result was that I got through in Washington a day earlier than I thought so I arrived in Albany a day ahead of time and went to the Hotel Teneyck, with the expectation of staying all night and filling my appointment the next day. I then telephoned the Governor's office and learned that he was out of town, and I told his secretary I had an appointment with him. He said: "Yes, I know and the governor will be here in time to fill his appointment tomorrow."

I thought, "why not do something in the meantime?" I have always found that I feel so much better when I am busy trying to disseminate the truth. The result was I went out and located two of our missionaries, just humble young men. They were about nineteen, possibly twenty, years of age. I found them and asked if there were some place we could spend the evening and do a little missionary work, and they said: "Yes, we will go and call on the photographer. He and his family are members of the Church, and they will be happy to have us come."

I said: "All right." I went into the office of the hotel and said to the clerk: "If by any chance anybody calls for me here, I am going out to spend the evening, but I would like to have them call me—I had the telephone number of the photographer—call me there."

CALL FROM GOVERNOR

The missionaries were delighted and we went down and were having a lovely visit. About nine o'clock the telephone rang and the good sister answered the telephone and then she came in, and my, her eyes were nearly popping out of her head. She said: "Why, Brother Smith, the Governor of New York wants to talk to you on the telephone."

Of course I was wonderfully surprised. So I went to the telephone and when I took it up I said: "Is this you, Governor?"

He said: "Yes."

I said: "This is George Albert Smith of Salt Lake City. I am glad to hear your voice."

"Well," he said, "I am glad to hear yours. You are coming to see me, aren't you?"

And I replied: "Well, I stopped here for that purpose. What time shall I come?"

He said: "Ten o'clock."

I asked: "Ten o'clock tomorrow morning?"

He said: "No, ten o'clock tonight."

I said: "I do not want to disturb you at your home. I thought I was going to go into your office and shake hands with you and visit a few minutes."

He said: "If you wait to get into my office we won't have any visit. Come on down tonight, at 10 o'clock."

VISIT AT GOVERNOR'S MANSION

I went back and excused myself from the family and said to the young missionaries: "Will one of you go and help me find the Mansion House?" I did not have any idea where it was. Elder Peterson went with me.

When we got down to the house—it was during World War number one and the house was surrounded by militia—they would not let us in the gates until I insisted that they go to the house and find out that I had an appointment. They did and came back and escorted us to the house. When we went there the Governor received us very graciously and said: "Come with me and we will go up to my den and we will have a good time together. Nobody will bother us up there, not even the telephone."

The young missionary was about as much surprised as anybody could be to be received in the home of the Governor like that. It was just like we were members of the family.

When we got upstairs, the Governor seated himself. By the way, it was in a room about fourteen feet square and there was a table on one side and all around the room were cupboards of books. It was the private office of the Governor, and when he wanted to be by himself that is where he went.

DISCUSSION OF WORLD WAR I

He sat in his chair, on one side of the table, and Elder Peterson and I sat opposite him. We had hardly gotten seated until the Governor said: "Do you folks know that there is a war on?"

I said, "Of course we know there is a war on."

He said: "You are way out there in Utah; I didn't think you would know." He continued: "You are out of danger; you cannot be reached out there."

I said, "Governor, we are American citizens and we are real Americans, and I want to tell you we have furnished our quota of men, and there has not been a draftee—everyone has volunteered." I said: "We have taken our full quota of bonds. We have paid our full share of Red Cross assessment. We have done everything we have been asked for. Now, why don't you think we know there is a war on?"

He replied: "You have done better than we have back here."

"Well," he repeated, "how is this war coming out?"

I answered: "Don't you know?"

He said: "No, I don't know who is going to win it."

"Where is your Book of Mormon?" I asked.

He just turned around in his swivel chair and reached in the cupboard behind him, took down a copy of the Book of Mormon and laid it on the table in front of me. Elder Peterson was astonished to see a copy of the Book of Mormon in the Governor's library.

I turned to the Book of Mormon and I said: "Governor, I am not going to take a lot of time, but you can find out right in here how this war is coming out." I said: "We are going to win the war," and then I read to him what is found in the Book of Mormon with reference to the people of this nation, in which the Lord told us: "And this land shall be a land of liberty unto the Gentiles, and there shall be no kings upon the land, who shall raise up unto the Gentiles. . . . I, the Lord, the king of heaven, will be their king," and then He refers to the fact that if we keep His commandments—that is what I want to bring home to us tonight—if we keep His commandments we have the promise from Him of His preservation and His watchcare.

The Governor said: "I had not seen that."

"Well," I said: "you are not doing a very good job reading your Book of Mormon."

SUBSEQUENT MEETING WITH MISSIONARY

He thanked me. We had a lovely visit. We went away and I did not see that missionary for a long time. In fact, I had forgotten what his name was, until about two years ago in the Hotel Utah when I attended a meeting of oil executives. I happened to be there as an invited guest, and I was made acquainted with some of those present, but when someone attempted to introduce me to one young man he said: "You cannot introduce me to President Smith. I know him and he knows me. We have done missionary work together."

I was puzzled. And then he told the story of how he took me to the Governor's home and then of course I remembered him. He is now the President of one of the great oil corporations in California. But one of the most interesting things was, after I had explained to the Governor that the Book of Mormon contained the word of the Lord; that it was not what Joseph Smith had said, but what the Lord had said—when I laid the book down, the missionary picked it up as quick as he could and looked to see how on earth it got into the Governor's office. On the front page was this inscription: "To the Honorable Charles Seaman Whitman, Governor of New York, with compliments and best wishes of George Albert Smith."

OPPORTUNITIES TO TEACH GOSPEL

Brethren, I have mentioned the Book of Mormon. I wonder how many of our families have read the Book of Mormon. There are a good many things in there that could be referred to, as well as this commandment or revelation of our Heavenly Father, of what we must do. We are distributing the literature of the Church where we can in all parts of the civilized world and we are not doing all that we will have to do because we have not reached very many people.

Our representatives in the various barracks, schools, and in the various state legislatures and the national legislature, members of the Church everywhere, all have an opportunity, and most of them take advantage of that opportunity, to explain to the people what the Gospel of Jesus Christ really means.

That is a large contract that we have. Each of us has the responsibility. We may begin by training our boys and girls at home so that they know what the Gospel is and then when opportunity comes they will be able to share it with others.

FRIENDLINESS EXPERIENCED

If I had time I could tell you many experiences I have had, similar to the one just related, and I have always found that the people who gave me an opportunity to sit and talk with them followed me up after that and went out of their way to be friendly. I may add that the Governor of New York used to send me an invitation to his public functions. I never had the opportunity to go but once and then I got stuck in the snow and could not get there.

People are friendly with us if we will give them a chance. It has not been very long since I was invited to offer the invocation at the opening of the United States Senate. This invitation was extended to a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, a stranger there except for the fact we had members and friends there who knew us. That could not have happened fifty years ago, but there is no end to the opportunity that is ours, and the thing for us to do, no matter where we are, is to seek to share with others the joyous teachings that have come to us from our Heavenly Father in all of the scriptures, the Old and the New Testament, Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, Pearl of Great Price. We have a marvelous library, brethren.

RESPONSIBILITY TO TEACH GOSPEL

I am not going to ask you to hold up your hands now, but I would like you to ask yourselves, how many of you have read anything to your families out of these books from time to time, called them together to teach them the things that they ought to know. I am afraid many of us would have to say we have been too busy.

The Gospel of Jesus Christ is on the earth, and think of the number of men there are here tonight who are authorized through the priesthood they hold to speak for our Heavenly Father and to teach his Gospel.

It is a joyous thing to me to know that the way is opening all the time, and it becomes easier and I say to you brethren, I do not suppose there is hardly a week passes, not a month anyhow, but somebody of prominence from these United States or from other parts of the world, comes into the office here, the President's office, to find out what we are doing.

VISIT OF RAILROAD PRESIDENT

Only last week the President of one of the great eastern railroads came in, the first time he has ever been here in Salt Lake City, and he came in and we sat down and visited for quite a long time. He asked questions and they were answered, and he went out, wanting to see what there was to see. He was leaving that night, but he said: "I never dreamed I would find what I have found here."

I could not go with him so some of the other brethren, Brother Haycock, my secretary, and one of the other brethren, saw to it that they found our welfare organization, saw the monument to the pioneers up here and other points of interest.

There is always something to interest them while we are teaching them the Gospel of Jesus Christ. So let us not lose our opportunity, let us not lose the privilege that the Lord has given to us to teach His truth. The more we teach it the more we will appreciate it, and the more we will be appreciated by those we associate with.

PRIESTHOOD MEETING A DELIGHT

Tonight, this great priesthood meeting is a delight to me. I am grateful to be able to be here. I am glad I can remember when I was just a young man, and I was a missionary in the Southern States. Some of the very finest people in the South would receive us if we would go to their homes in a dignified way. They were not always interested in the Gospel of Jesus Christ but they would treat us kindly, in most instances, but of course in some cases they were not so kind.

I am thinking of our opportunity. What are we going to do? Here we are, the representatives of the Church, a very great portion of the representatives of the priesthood of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints tonight, and our Heavenly Father has warned us that difficulties are coming. If I were to read more in the Doctrine and Covenants I could call attention to many things there that put us on notice that we have something more to do than to just go on and take it easy.

EXPERIENCES OF NOAH AND ABRAHAM

Remember that in the days of Noah, he preached the Gospel for approximately a hundred years and the people would not repent, but by and by, the warning that had been given to them was realized and they were all wiped out except the few that were in the ark.

You remember the experience of Abraham when he was visited by a holy being on the way to Sodom and Gomorrah to destroy the people, and he began to plead for them. He knew there were some good people there. He had relatives there. And so finally he asked: "Are you going to destroy the good people?"

"No, if there are good people there, enough of them, they can save the whole situation."

And then Abraham began: "Well, if there are fifty, will you save the cities?"

"Yes, if there are fifty."

"If there are forty?"

"Yes, if there are forty."

And Abraham kept on going until he got down as far as he thought he could go, I guess, and was told, that if ten righteous people could be found there in those two great cities that the cities would be spared. But he could not find them.

CONDITION OF AMERICA

Now I wonder what about America. What proportion of the population of the land we live in is a righteous portion. It is righteousness that will preserve us.

The Lord's promise to be our king and our law-giver is on the condition of righteousness, and my, what a wonderful opportunity He gives to us and how happy we ought to be to take advantage of it and bless our fellows by carrying the message to them.

DISBELIEF OF WORLD

The people of the world may not believe it. They did not believe it when the Savior came to John at the waters of Jordan. They did not believe He was the Savior of the world. When He came unto John and asked for baptism, John said: "I have need to be baptized of Thee and comest Thou to me?"

Jesus replied: "Suffer it to be so now for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." "And he suffered him."

Jesus of Nazareth, the Son of Mary, went down into the water, and when He came up out of the water, the Holy Ghost descended upon Him in the form of a dove. If John had had any doubt about what he had accomplished surely that would have brought him to a realization, and then a voice from heaven said: "This is my Beloved Son in whom I am well pleased."

John did not find fault with Jesus for letting him baptize Him. John was a very humble man. John then went his way and tried to save his own people, his own race. And they finally took his life and that has been the history of the world all the way down. There have been war and destruction and now we are faced, not with any ordinary situation, but we are faced with a war by Anti-Christ against the people who believe in the divine mission of the Savior.

SET HOMES IN ORDER

What are we going to do? We have our responsibility, and I am sure we will not disappoint those who have depended upon us to do our part. But the most important thing that we can do is set our own homes in order, to see if there is carelessness or indifference in them, teach our families, and unite them and make them happy in keeping the commandments of our Heavenly Father, because only on the condition of righteousness can even this great Church continue and endure to do the work that it has to do.

Brethren, you have come from many parts of the world, mostly, of course, from the Western Hemisphere, but you will be returning to your homes. Do not fail to appreciate that the Lord has given you a wonderful blessing, but it will only be a blessing to you on condition that you observe His laws and keep His commandments.

WAITING UPON THE LORD

We are all brethren here tonight, meeting together in the Lord's House, waiting upon Him, and I am sure we will have a happy time tomorrow in our meetings.

I trust everybody has a place to stay tonight. I hope that the adjustment has been made before this. We sometimes have had our people come from the outlying districts thinking they could go into a hotel at any time, only to find they could not get a place to stay. Now, if there are any of you people here tonight who live away, who haven't any place to stay, you see if you are sitting by a real Latter-day Saint or a make-believe, and tell your troubles to your neighbor, and if he cannot take you to his home he can find a place where you can stay, and you will be happy.

GRATITUDE FOR COMPANIONSHIP

I pray that the Lord will bless us all. I am so grateful for the companionship of such men as are sitting here tonight, grateful to be able to shake your hands and meet you wherever I find you, grateful to welcome another member into the Quorum of the Twelve. The Church continues to grow, and while Brother George F. Richards has filled a great mission, performed a great part, and the others that we have mentioned here, Brother Frank Evans and others, what they have done they will be blessed for, but if we want to be among those whose names are recorded in the Lamb's Book of Life as being entitled to a place in the Celestial Kingdom when this earth becomes that kingdom, we have got to earn that ourselves, individually. The Lord has given us the priesthood, given us the opportunity, given us all these wonderful revelations contained in the scriptures, and I am sure we are not going to waste our privileges and fail to do our part.

BLESSINGS ASKED

I pray that the Lord will bless us all, that we will be worthy to bear the priesthood that He has offered to us and conferred upon us, that wherever we go people will be able to say, "That man is a servant of the Lord."

When you go to our homes tonight, please be careful. It is dark. The automobiles are running in every direction, pretty near, except straight up, and we will have to be careful and not be hit. Be as careful as you can, and then when the conference is finished and you go to your homes, be equally careful, because somebody is losing his life as a result of unnecessary accidents practically every hour of the day.

I pray that the Lord will bless us, that we will be real brothers, and that if we have families that we will be real fathers and husbands in our homes, not just make-believes. Do not fail to have your family prayers, brethren, it brings a blessing that not anything else does.

That we may all so conduct ourselves that when the Lamb's Book of Life is opened disclosing those who are entitled to a place here upon this earth in the Celestial Kingdom, to live forever in the companionship of Jesus Christ, our Lord, and that all our names will be found recorded there and those we love, not one missing, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The Tabernacle Choir Male Chorus sang "The Long Day Closes," after which President A. Hale Holgate of the Duchesne Stake offered the benediction.

CHURCH OF THE AIR

The Church of the Air broadcast was presented Sunday morning, October 1, from 8:30 to 9:00 over radio station KSL and the Columbia Broadcasting System.

The Tabernacle Choir, under the leadership of J. Spencer Cornwall, furnished the music for this service. Elder Alexander Schreiner was at the organ. Richard L. Evans was the announcer.

Announcer: The Church of the Air is presented by CBS so that men of different faiths may bring their messages to a nationwide congregation of worshipers. Today's service comes to you from the Tabernacle on Temple Square, through the facilities of Station KSL in Salt Lake City. The speaker will be Dr. John A. Widtsoe, a member of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The title of Elder Widtsoe's talk is: BE OF GOOD COURAGE. Music is provided by the Tabernacle Choir under the direction of J. Spencer Cornwall with Alexander Schreiner at the organ.

The service opens with a sacred song by Bach: "My Faith Is Still Secure and Still I Love my God."

---

The Choir sang: "My Faith Is Still Secure"—Bach.

Announcer: We shall now hear on this Church of the Air service, Dr. John A. Widtsoe, scientist, educator, and author, and a member of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Dr. Widtsoe has titled his talk: BE OF GOOD COURAGE.

ELDER JOHN A. WIDTSOE

Dear Radio Friends: Our day is one of much confusion, uncertainty and fear. This unhappy condition is world-wide. Too many mature people look with sincere longing upon the past; youth on the threshold of life's activity are inclined to view the future with distrust. There is a feeling of helplessness in the air. The enthusiasms of life are vanishing.

This is neither natural nor normal. It darkens the day and clouds our every task. It develops slavery to unknown, dreaded forces. It is destructive of human joy.

This should not be so. The new world, our world, made one by audible, visual and physical communication, and by the free interchange of personal opinion, should yield days of such satisfactions as have not been known before.

There is evil in the world, ever designing to destroy humanity. That goes without saying. Evil offered itself to the first man; it will pound, however uselessly, on the ears of the last. Evil forces, in whatever disguise, must be fought, desperately if needs be, and brought to their knees; else life's sweetness will disappear. This battle between right and wrong, between good and bad, has been waged, and often has raged, through the generations of time, and will continue to the end.

Normal men, made in the image of God, have always accepted cheerfully the challenge of evil as a part of life. The battle really has given zest to existence. Moreover, and this gives courage to weak man, history records that in every struggle evil has gradually been defeated and at length has been beaten down.

Incarnate evil, despite its assiduous endeavors, has always lost ground. Finally victory has been on the side of right.

Thereby has come man's marvelous conquest over surrounding forces, and the steady improvement in the last few hundred years of the conditions of the human race. Always, if on the side of righteousness, man has managed to banish the gilded tyranny of evil.

Yet, despite the lessons of the past, fear, unnecessary fear, lurks in many human breasts. What of tomorrow? is shouted by the forces of evil. In the consequent din is forgotten the glorious promise that "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." (Matt. 6:34) Forgotten also is the ancient truth that fear is the devil's first and chief weapon. Make a man or a nation afraid, and his strength, like that of Samson shorn of his locks, is gone. He is no longer useful in the work of the world. He becomes a tool of the unholy forces which seek to destroy mankind.

Gideon, mighty man of ancient Israel, was called to rescue his people from a seven-year oppression by the Midianites and associated people. He raised therefore an army of thirty-two thousand men to fight the enemy. But in those days, as in ours, battles were won not by numbers but by men of quality. So he was commanded to proclaim:

"Whosoever is fearful and afraid let him return. And there returned of the people twenty and two thousand . . ."—(Judges 7:3)

It was a high percentage. It is probably as high in the world today. Nevertheless Gideon's army was stronger because the faithful ones were left. Fear never fails to lead a man or a group of people to weakness and to ultimate failure.

The fears of man are legion. They float to the surface from submerged corners in our consciousness. They are often the products of our imagination.

Really what have we to fear? Physical destruction perhaps, first. We are naturally afraid of pain. We look with dread, for example, upon the A-bomb, and the theoretical H-bomb, and other devices of somewhat lesser horror, produced by the misuse of powers placed in the hands of man. At the worst, their effects will be local, and minimized as the commonsense of the nations develops.

The frequent, recent fear arises that a day may come when the whole world will be annihilated by an atomic chain reaction. That is an idle fear. It is not yet within the power of man and may never be. The earth is old; the stars in the sky made of earth-like elements are old. Earth and stars have long hung in space. The universe is not going to explode into atomic rays—not in our day—of that we may be certain. That fear is groundless and with the accompanying dread should be cast out.

Civilized man needs food and clothing and shelter. In the turmoil of the new day, he fears that he may be deprived of these necessities. He forgets that the earth has not changed, except in spots. As the seasons come and go, the needs of man will be supplied by mother earth as in the past, if man does his part. It is easy to awaken a fear; as easy to banish it if reasonable thinking is used.

Then there is the fear of other men—people with the wrong conception of life, to whom a neighbor is but a tool with which to protect themselves, often to satisfy their lusts. To them life has no meaning beyond the flesh of the day. They do not know the spiritual world, which is the greater and more powerful world. Such travelers in the muck of life promise much to gain their ends, but keep no promise. Such men are more dangerous than material weapons, however horrible.

Usually evil philosophies use evil material tools. The great danger in these philosophies is, however, that they simulate truth. They are deceiving; and by their deceit often secure as adherents otherwise honest people. We should for our protection uncover these masked devils.

Here also, fear is futile. Righteous men if united are masters of their generation and can and should cast out all such fears, and should sternly set about to root out such weeds of existence. False teachings fall before truth.

It would be better for man's happiness to substitute for such fears a proper control of the use of his powers, whether of his natural endowment, or those that have been discovered by the patient searchers for truth.

For example, there should be less glibness about the use of atomic energy in warfare, and more about its possible use in peaceful arts. More should be said about the futility of war with its devilish destruction of human life and property. More should be said about the nobility of man, and his possible Godlike approach when he uses his time, talents and power to supply natural human needs. Whenever that is done, much fear will disappear. More should be said about the good earth and its willingness to yield bountifully to man's toil.

An evil philosophy of life can best be stifled when it is given no corner in the discussions of men. Clubs would do better to discuss the principles of our own free government than the remote doctrine of an ancient poet. Whether fear shall engulf us or not is a matter in our own hands.

Men who lay aside fear become the masters of the day.

It is a pity that many who allow themselves to fear seek refuge in the temporary forgetfulness that follows the satisfaction of unnatural appetites. Instead of a wise and intelligent approach to the apparently difficult problems of life, multitudes have turned to nerve-whipping drugs, which often have become daily companions, or to the shame of immorality, or to the mania of chance. To such persons, fear may temporarily be lost in the brutality or sinful indulgences, but it remains under cover to poison the full joy of life. There is no happy future for mankind, no removal of fear, while in the society of sin.

More terribly fear-begetting is the doctrine that the world in which we live is purposeless.

Freedom from fear comes only when the earth and all upon it are conceived to be expressions of a mighty divine purpose. The unhappy ones of this age, which is full of possible joy, usually can see no purpose in life. That is a great calamity, perhaps the greatest in human lives. The Lord placed his children on earth in his love for them and for their good. They are here in harmony with this mighty divine purpose.

Our purposeful world is under the direction of the Lord. It cannot be conceived that the Master would place his children on earth and then forget them! That is not the method of Divinity. Chance does not rule in the heavens or on earth. Men who harbor fear may rest assured that in the providences of the Lord, righteousness will triumph on earth. The Lord's purposes will prevail. That knowledge drives out fear. The highest attainable joy of man, of any man, is the certainty that he lives in a purposeful world made for his good. Fear cannot dwell with such a faith.

Those who do not believe in a purposeful world are to be pitied. They cast God out of their lives. They are atheists, creatures without home or anchorage. Thrown back upon themselves, upon their own weak powers, with no help but that of men, such persons are unspeakably lonely. Fears overtake them, and force them to seek unnatural excitements. The convictions of such men rest upon insecure foundations. They cannot be safely followed.

The confusion and contention, the uncertainty in the world, come from the failure to take God into partnership in the acts of our daily lives. We must battle for the right, if needs be. Give evil no quarter, To put trust in God, when we have done our best, is the final refuge of mortal man. Men must give heed to God's voice, as heard through the centuries. If that is done, all is well; but when the Lord is forgotten, disaster overflows the world.

All who have fear in their hearts should turn willingly to him who created the earth and all upon it. The wise ones of old have warned us. When ancient Israel was depressed, as many are today, Moses spoke to them:

Be strong and of good courage, fear not, nor be afraid of them: for the Lord thy God, He it is that doth go with thee; He will not fail thee, nor forsake thee.—(Deuteronomy 31:6.)

And David, king of Israel, completed the thought:

Wait on the Lord: be of good courage, and He shall strengthen thine heart: wait, I say, on the Lord.—(Psalms 27:14).

Though all this is true, all who seek to drive away fear, must be active in the battle. Evil, the cause of fear, will turn to good only as righteousness prevails. The Lord will solve all earthly problems only as man makes himself worthy of divine help. Men must be "anxiously engaged in a good cause," the cause of the Lord.

We must be vocal in our opposition to evil; we must be eager to cast evil out from among us. In the home circle, in our churches, in our places of toil, wherever we walk and talk, as members of society and as citizens of our land, we must stand as enemies of evil. There must be no yielding to the whisperings from the dungeons of existence. Then the Lord will add his power and his blessings; fear will flee.

We need everywhere throughout our sunlit land men who are strong enough for righteousness to face the enemy.

When Gideon of old was left with only ten thousand unafraid men, other tests were given this remainder of his large army. Gideon could take no chances. The cause, the freedom of his people, was too great. So he watched his men.

When the army, marching in the heat of the day, crossed a creek, some loitered, took their time, lay down to drink; others, however, only three hundred of the ten thousand, eager to meet the enemy could not wait; they merely cupped their hands and drank as they marched hurriedly along. They caused no delay. These three hundred became Gideon's army; the others were sent home. With these three hundred Gideon won glorious victories.

With such men, in any day, every fear vanishes.

The feeling of depression that bows down many of our people today should be replaced by a song of courageous gladness. The Lord is at the helm. Therefore, we should be full of courage. Our task is to keep the law of the Lord, to reject every evil offering, and to assist eagerly in the solution of present-day problems. Then we can safely trust the future. Then we shall no longer be afraid. Those who then may suffer will be those who will not do these things.

In the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

“THE ENIGMA OF PALMYRA”

For more than 100 years vigorous, but futile attempts have been made to explain him away, only to be rejected, discredited or abandoned.

One explanation survives the tests of time and truth. Read it, and its many-sided manifestations in these books:

The One Hundred Twenty-first Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints

The One Hundred Twenty-first Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was held in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Utah, Friday, Saturday, Sunday, and Monday, April 6, 7, 8, and 9, 1951.

President George Albert Smith, President of the Church, having passed away Wednesday, April 4, President Smith's funeral services were held in the Tabernacle Saturday, April 7, at 2:00 p.m., which services are included as a part of this Conference report.

General sessions of the Conference were held at 10:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m. Friday and Sunday and at 10:00 a.m. Monday. The General Priesthood meeting convened in the Tabernacle Saturday evening, April 7, at 7:00 p.m., with overflow assemblies in the Assembly Hall and Barratt Hall.

The session Monday morning at 10:00 was a solemn assembly, at which the First Presidency of the Church was reorganized, with David Oman McKay as President, Stephen L Richards as First Counselor, and Joshua Reuben Clark, Jr. as Second Counselor.

The full services of the General sessions of the Conference were broadcast over Station KSL, Salt Lake City, and by arrangement through KSL were broadcast over the following stations:

In Utah: KSUB at Cedar City, KSVC at Richfield, KJAM at Vernal, KBUH at Brigham City, and KVNU at Logan.

In Idaho: KGEM at Boise, KID at Idaho Falls, KEYY at Pocatello, KBIO in Burley, KVMV at Twin Falls, and KRXX at Rexburg.

The services of the general sessions were also broadcast in the Assembly Hall on the Tabernacle grounds and in Barratt Hall, 60 North Main, over a loud speaking system, and by television.

Columbia Broadcasting Company's Church of the Air program, on which Elder Stephen L Richards was the speaker, was presented in the Tabernacle Sunday morning, April 8, from 9:00 to 9:30. A full report of this service is also included in this record.

President David O. McKay, President of the Council of the Twelve, presided at the general sessions of the Conference. He conducted the Friday morning, Sunday morning, and Monday morning services. Elder J. Reuben Clark, Jr., of the Council of the Twelve, conducted the services at the Friday afternoon and Sunday afternoon sessions and also of the General Priesthood meeting.

FIRST DAY

MORNING MEETING

The opening session of the Conference convened Friday morning, April 6, at 10 o'clock, with President David O. McKay, President of the Council of the Twelve, presiding and conducting the services.

President David O. McKay

This is the opening session of the One Hundred Twenty-first Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City.

As you all know, through general announcement already given, last Wednesday, April 4, at 7:27 p.m., there came to a close, on his eighty-first birthday, the earthly career of our beloved leader, President George Albert Smith. A few moments after his heartbeat stopped one of his daughters—I am not clear this morning whether it was Emily or Edith—said, with aching heart, "This is the only way father could attend conference." Though his chair is vacant this morning let us hope that the influence of his Christ-like character will pervade every heart and his high ideals be an inspiration to us all. Truly he was a noble soul, happiest when he was making others happy. In his daily life he strove sincerely to apply the teachings of Jesus to "love the Lord thy God with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength . . . and thy neighbor as thyself."

President Smith's passing leaves the Quorum of the First Presidency disorganized, and the presiding authority of the Church now rests with the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles. At a meeting this morning at nine o'clock this Council requested that the counselors to President Smith conduct the exercises of this General Conference.

President Clark, will you please come forward and take your place?

(Elder J. Reuben Clark, Jr., then took a seat by President McKay on the upper stand.)

All of the General Authorities of the Church are in attendance.

Elder Joseph Anderson is the clerk of the conference.

These services, and all general sessions of the conference, will be broadcast in the Assembly Hall and in Barratt Hall over the loud speaking system and by television.

This service and all general sessions of the conference will be broadcast over station KSL, Salt Lake City, and by arrangement through KSL over the following stations:

In Utah: KSUB at Cedar City, KSVC at Richfield, KJAM at Vernal, KBUH, Brigham City, and KVNU at Logan.

In Idaho: KGEM at Boise, KID at Idaho Falls, KEYY at Pocatello, KBIO at Burley, KVMV at Twin Falls, and KRXX at Rexburg.

Friday, April 6First Day

We are grateful to the stations named for their cooperation in broadcasting these proceedings and we thank them for their services which will continue throughout the conference. In the interest of time, however, we shall not repeat this announcement at every session.

All general sessions will also be televised over the KSL television station, channel 5.

The choir singing for this morning's session will be by the Brigham Young University combined choruses with Elders Newell Weight and Crawford Gates conducting and with Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ.

We will begin the morning services by the Brigham Young University combined choruses singing: "Thanks Be To God," conducted by Elder Newell Weight.

The opening prayer will be offered by President Jared J. Trejo of the Southern Arizona Stake.

The University combined choruses sang: "Thanks Be To God." The opening prayer was offered by President Jared J. Trejo of the Southern Arizona Stake.

The Brigham Young University combined choruses then sang: "Awake, Ye Saints of God, Awake."

Elder Joseph Anderson, Clerk of the Conference, read the following reports:

President David O. McKay

You brethren and sisters who are here will understand that I am repeating these announcements for the benefit of the thousands who are listening over the radio.

Elder J. Reuben Clark, Jr., of the Council of the Twelve, will now present the financial statement for the Church for the year 1950 and a summarized report of the Welfare Program of the Church.

THE ANNUAL CHURCH FINANCIAL REPORT FOR THE YEAR 1950

Elder J. Reuben Clark, Jr. read the following report:

We will now give a summary of the Church financial report for the year 1950. The report itself will be published in full in the Deseret News.

The report is in the usual form. The material is given under the usual headings of expenditures heretofore used in such reports, and data are shown under the captions: Original Budget, Additions to Budget, Budget Funds Spent, and Budget Funds Not Spent.

A word may be said about the "Additions to Budget." It will be observed that in certain cases, where additions to the budget were made, more budget funds remain unspent than the amount of additions made to the budget in such cases. That is, the original budget for the general group was more without additions than the budget amounts spent for that general group, leaving an unspent balance of the original budget.

This comes about from the following situation. It is a principle of Church expenditures that allocations of Church funds may not be shifted from one item to another. The original allocation must stand and any deficiency of funds as to any item must be covered by an additional allocation and not by a shifting of funds to that account from an allocation made to some other item of expenditure. It not infrequently happens that where one particular class or general category of expenditure covers several accounts, one account may be exhausted and another account have a surplus. In such cases, an additional allocation of funds is made to the exhausted account, instead of transferring funds from some other account to the exhausted account. To meet such situations there was provided in the budget a so-called "Unallocated Reserve for Contingencies," from which these additional allocations to specific accounts could be made and to which, where needed, additional funds could be allocated.

The additional funds shown in the report are the net additions made as to the particular groups of expenditure affected.

The figures given will cover amounts disbursed from the Church general funds unless otherwise stated. Other figures will be added later in the report and so identified.

The original budget, plus additions, for the year 1950, came to $23,105,358. The expenditures from this fund came to $19,949,599, which was $224,034 more than was spent in 1949. The unexpended balance of the budget for 1950 was $3,155,759, but a million and a half of this amount is the sum regularly allocated to the schools as their budget for the first half of the calendar year 1951.

Taking the individual expenditure groups,—the following appears:

The administrative expenses of the office of the Corporation of the President came to $449,205 in 1950 against $380,935 for 1949, an increase for 1950 of $68,270. The expenditures of the Presiding Bishop's office for 1950 was $458,364.

These budgets of the two offices,—the office of the Corporation of the President and the office of the Corporation of the Presiding Bishop, to which may be added some $45,305 for miscellaneous administrative expenses,—are more than covered by the non-tithing income of the Church.

The amounts paid to the stakes and wards in 1950 came to $7,431,223, as compared with $7,529,460 for 1949,—or $98,237 less in 1950 than in 1949. There were 1541 wards and 180 stakes at the close of 1950, and 1,172 stake, ward, and branch buildings to be maintained. During the year, 259 buildings were under construction in the stakes and wards, and 8 buildings were purchased for use as meeting houses, of which number 50 were dedicated.

For the maintenance and operation of the missions of the Church, including return fares of missionaries, free literature, radio and publicity expense, and the building program of the various missions, $3,822,189 was spent in 1950, against $4,212,138, for 1949, a decrease for 1950 over 1949 of $389,949. During the year, 113 buildings were under construction in the missions, and 34 other buildings were purchased for meeting places, and missionary headquarters. Of these 147 buildings, some 60 were dedicated.

For the operating expenses of the 8 temples of the Church, including repairs, construction work, and maintenance, $696,862 was spent in 1950 and $589,331 in 1949, or an increase in 1950 of $107,531.

From the Church general funds there was expended for Church Welfare in 1950, $1,608,454 and in 1949, $1,714,280,—a decrease for 1950 of $105,826.

For general buildings and grounds at Church headquarters, including the Tabernacle and Assembly Hall, the buildings on Temple Block and on the block on which is located the Administration Building, including $635,834 granted to hospitals for new construction and improvements, $1,184,160 was expended for 1950 against $702,219 for 1949, an increase for 1950 of $481,941.

For schools and educational activities, including the Brigham Young University, Ricks College, Juarez Stake Schools, 17 institutes and 139 seminaries, the McCune School of Music, the Blanding Indian School, including the salaries of administrative officers and teachers, as well as funds for the erection and repair of buildings, and for purchase of building sites, there was expended during the calendar year 1950, $3,272,403 from Church general funds. To this figure should be added for 1950, expenditures of $2,432,820 of funds collected by the schools for tuition and other services, or a total of $5,705,223 spent for Church education, as against $3,086,136 for the calendar year 1949. There were enrolled in the Brigham Young University, the Ricks College, the L.D.S. Business College, and the Juarez Stake Academy, for the school year 1949-1950, some 11,437 students; 31,488 others received religious training and activity in the institutes and seminaries.

For the Genealogical Society there was expended the amount of $743,145 in 1950, as compared with $750,505 in 1949, a decrease of $7,360 for 1950. Included in these expenditures, in addition to sums for research and record-keeping work, are sums spent for microfilm records in 6 of our States and in 10 foreign countries, the total microfilm record so obtained having an equivalency of 57,705 volumes of approximately 385 pages per volume.

Other items of expense from the general Church funds will be found in the printed report, but call for no special comment here.

But in addition to the foregoing expenditures from the tithes and other income, there has come from the people on various accounts and been spent for Church purposes, buildings, and building maintenance, maintenance of missions, welfare, auxiliaries, hospitalization, and educational purposes (already noted), a little more than three fourths as much as spent from the general Church funds, or the sum of $15,130,536. This is $930,141 more than was similarly expended in 1949.

The total expenditure of both kinds for 1950 was $35,080,135. To this could properly be added, as coming from the people, some $3,000,000 which went from parents and others to maintain the missionary force in the field. For 1949, the total expenditure was $33,925,960, or an increase for 1950 of $1,154,175.

The total number of people (wards and stakes and missions) paying fast offerings and welfare contributions in 1950, is given as 215,052. The total amount of fast offerings and welfare contributions was $2,581,003, in 1950, and $2,153,434 in 1949, an increase of $427,569 for 1950. The increase came from both wards and stakes and the missions.

The total cash expenditures for the Welfare Program for the year 1950, was $3,399,951, all of which is included in the above grand total of the budget and other cash expenditures.

From 1938 to the end of 1950 more than 2,721 families have been helped to become self-supporting, and 17,829 families have been assisted in other ways. During this same period the Deseret Industries has provided continuous work for hundreds of handicapped and aged persons. During the year 1950 they had an average of 235 persons working in their plants. The Deseret Clothing Factory, another branch of the Welfare Plan, has provided continuous employment for from 30 to 60 individuals, many of whom were widows and elderly persons.

During the year 1950, 90,800 man days of work were donated in the production of the budget and 10,500 man days of work were donated in the construction of Bishops' storehouses and other buildings for the operation of Welfare Plan. In addition to these, 94 construction and remodeling projects were completed by the brethren for the benefit of less fortunate members.

Obedient to the command of the Lord that men should be self-supporting, looking to the Church for necessary help, 3,509 persons have, during the past eight years relinquished their position on government relief rolls. Of this number, 1,600 have been rehabilitated and are receiving no aid from the Church nor, so far as known, from any other gratuitous source; 1,221 are yet receiving part of their support from the Church; and 688 are receiving all their needs from the Church.

During 1950, 4,747 persons were given occupational counseling resulting in the solution of their employment problems, and 5,712 other persons were placed in remunerative employment. Reported unemployment has decreased 29% during the year.

Our expenditures are heavy, our activities are many, some of them of considerable size, but we are striving to expend Church funds with care, without waste, and so far as possible with the least amount of extravagance.

Welfare Report

The General Church Welfare Committee makes the following further report, indicating the production and distribution of bishops' storehouse commodities during the year 1950:

Production and Distribution of Commodities for Bishops' Storehouses

Production during the year 1950 was 5% lower than in 1949. The decrease was caused by the loss of the fruit crop. Storehouse commodities distributed increased 7% over 1949.

Assistance Rendered

There have been from 17,913 to 55,460 persons assisted through the Bishops' Storehouse Program each year since 1938. In 1950 there were 39,537 persons so assisted in the United States and Canada. This is an increase over 1949 of 1,257 persons.

From 1938 to the end of 1950 more than 2,721 families have been helped to become self-supporting and 17,829 families have been assisted in other ways. During this same period the Deseret Industries has provided continuous work for hundreds of handicapped and aged persons. During the year 1950 they had an average of 235 persons working in their plants. The Deseret Clothing Factory another branch of the Welfare Plan, has provided continuous employment for from 30 to 60 individuals, many of whom were widows and elderly persons.

Contributed Work and Construction Projects

During the year 1950, 90,800 man days of work were donated in the production of the budget and 10,500 man days of work were donated in the construction of Bishops' Storehouses and other buildings for the operation of the Welfare Plan. In addition to these, 94 construction and remodeling projects were completed by the brethren for the benefit of less fortunate members.

Persons Relinquishing Government Relief

Obedient to the command of the Lord that men should be self-supporting, looking to the Church for necessary help, 3,509 persons have, during the past eight years relinquished their position on government relief rolls. Of this number 1,600 have been rehabilitated and are receiving no aid from the Church nor, so far as known, from any other gratuitous source; 1,221 are yet receiving part of their support from the Church; and 688 are receiving all their needs from the Church.

Placement and Counseling Service

During 1950, 4,747 persons were given occupational counseling resulting in the solution of their employment problems, and 5,712 other persons were placed in remunerative employment. Reported unemployment has decreased 29% during the year.

President David O. McKay

Elder Orval W. Adams, Chairman of the Church Auditing Committee, will now read the report of the Church Auditors, after whom Elder Marion G. Romney, of the Assistants to the Twelve, will speak to us.

REPORT OF CHURCH AUDITING COMMITTEE

Elder Orval W. Adams read the following report:

President David O. McKay and Council of the Twelve
47 East South Temple Street
Salt Lake City, Utah

Dear Brethren:

The Church Auditing Committee has reviewed the annual financial report of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints for the year ending December 31, 1950.

The accounting system and records were found to be adequate, and are meticulously maintained. Disbursement of Church funds is controlled through a comprehensive budget system, which properly safeguards expenditures. The funds are being carefully conserved.

The Church is in strong financial position and free from debt.

Respectfully submitted,

Orval W. Adams
Albert E. Bowen
George S. Spencer
Harold H. Bennett

ELDER MARION G. ROMNEY

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

Ye fearful saints, fresh courage take;
The clouds ye so much dread
Are big with mercy, and shall break
In blessings on your head.

If I can enjoy the Spirit of the Lord, for which I earnestly pray, I desire to give you a message of hope and courage. I am prompted to this desire by the fact that in my recent travels among the people, I have sensed a growing spirit of uneasiness and foreboding.

SPIRIT OF UNEASINESS

Following a welfare meeting held a few months ago on the Pacific Coast, in which we had counseled the people to obtain permanent welfare production projects that they might produce the necessities to carry on our welfare work without calling upon the Saints year after year for cash contributions, a sister told me she was comforted by our advice, that she felt it would not have been given if the people were not to stay there permanently. She had been disturbed and worried by talk that bombs might be dropped in that area, necessitating their moving inland.

This brought to my mind the experiences of youth, when in the colonies of Old Mexico we were agitated over whether the troubles incident to the Madero Revolution would necessitate our leaving the country. At the peak of the disturbances, our stake president who was my uncle, Junius Romney—planted an orchard of young apple trees. I well remember how my mind was relieved by hearing people say that if we were facing expulsion, the stake president would not be planting trees which would take years to mature. Notwithstanding the comfort I got out of that assurance, we did have to leave.

NEED FOR HOPE AND COURAGE

I was, of course, unable to advise the good sister whether bombs would be dropped, nor did I know whether the city would have to be evacuated, but I did have a great desire to give her some comfort and courage which would ease her mind.

I remembered that President Joseph F. Smith had said that leaders in the Church "should be men not easily discouraged, not without hope, and not given to foreboding of all sorts of evils to come," that if they "sometimes feel the weight and anxiety of momentous times, they should be all the firmer and all the more resolute in those convictions which come from a God-fearing conscience and pure lives. It is a matter of the greatest importance," he concluded, "that the people be educated to appreciate and cultivate the bright side of life rather than to permit its darkness and shadows to hover over them." (Gospel Doctrine, p. 193.)

CALAMITIES AHEAD

I could not give her, nor can I extend to you, much hope and courage based upon an expectation that we are about to enter upon a period of world peace and security. I do not expect any such happy circumstances to prevail in the immediate future. As I read the signs of the times, in light of the revealed word of God, we are in line for something quite different.

A long time ago the Lord raised the curtain on the scene of destruction awaiting the inhabitants of the earth if they followed to the end the course they were then pursuing. More than a hundred years ago, he said that a desolating scourge should go forth among the inhabitants of the earth, and if they repented not, it should continue from time to time until the earth was empty and the inhabitants thereof utterly destroyed.

For all flesh is corrupted before me; and the powers of darkness prevail upon the earth, among the children of men.

. . . all eternity is pained, and the angels are waiting the great command to reap down the earth, to gather the tares that they may be burned. (D. & C. 38:11-12.)

I am convinced that the overwhelming majority of men have chosen to continue down the path they were then following. I can discern no change in their course sufficient to justify in me a hope that the calamities which the Lord said he knew would come upon the inhabitants of the earth will be turned aside.

COURAGE OF FAITH

But we Latter-day Saints must not let ourselves be so engulfed with forebodings that we fail to obtain and enjoy such hope and courage as is within our reach—the hope and courage born of faith in the power of righteousness to ultimately triumph. I have boundless confidence in that power. I am persuaded beyond all doubt that the destiny of men and nations is in the hands of the Almighty, who has respect for righteousness, and not in the hands of conniving politicians whose wisdom has perished, whose understanding has come to naught, and who have no respect for righteousness. If it were not so, I should be in utter despair. I believe that the record and the word of God justify us in so placing our hope.

CHARGE TO JOSHUA

I cite your attention to the calling of Joshua, the successor to Moses, whose mission it was to lead Israel over Jordan and divide among them the promised land which was then inhabited by an armed and hostile people. It was a difficult and arduous assignment. To strengthen him for it, the Lord gave Joshua a great promise and a great charge. This is the promise:

There shall not any man be able to stand before thee all the days of thy life: as I was with Moses, so I will be with thee: I will not fail thee, nor forsake thee.

And this is the charge:

Be strong and of a good courage: for unto this people shalt thou divide for an inheritance the land, which I sware unto their fathers to give them. Only be thou strong and very courageous. . . .

Now note with care how Joshua was directed to show his strength and courage, and also that prosperity was to follow his performance.

. . . that thou mayest observe to do according to all the law, which Moses my servant commanded thee: turn not from it to the right hand or to the left, that thou mayest prosper whithersoever thou goest.

Moses had been the living prophet during the days of Joshua.

This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth; but thou shalt meditate therein day and night, that thou mayest observe to do according to all that is written therein: for then thou shalt make thy way prosperous and then thou shalt have good success.

The book of the law was the standard church work of that day.

Have not I commanded thee? Be strong and of a good courage; be not afraid, neither be thou dismayed: for the Lord thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest. (Joshua 1:5-9.)

As I read this scripture, I felt that Joshua's obedience to the teachings of Moses and to the contents of the book of the law was the test of his strength and courage. The extent to which he was to prosper, be unafraid and undismayed, and have the Lord with him, depended upon his rating in that test.

We can demonstrate our strength and courage in the same way, and be unafraid and undismayed and have the Lord with us whithersoever we go, by observing the teachings of the living prophets and observing to do according to all that is written in the standard works of the Church.

TEACHINGS OF WILFORD WOODRUFF

During the last years of President Woodruff's life, his mind dwelt much upon the calamities which were coming upon the earth, and he gave many warnings of them. But he did not leave his hearers in despair. Always he held out to them hope and courage, conditioned on their righteousness. Here is a sample of his teachings:

Over the millions of people on this earth, there hangs a cloud of darkness almost entirely upon their shoulders. Can you tell me where the people are who will be shielded and protected from these great calamities and judgments which are even now at our doors? I'll tell you. The priesthood of God who honor their priesthood, and who are worthy of their blessings, are the only ones who shall have their safety and protection. They are the only mortal beings. No other people have a right to be shielded from these judgments. They are at our very doors; not even this people will escape them entirely. They will come down like the judgments of Sodom and Gomorrah. And none but the priesthood will be safe from their fury.

But he concluded with this note of assurance:

If you do your duty, and I do my duty, we shall have protection, and shall pass through the afflictions in peace and in safety. (The Improvement Era, Vol. 17, pp. 1164-1165.)

On another occasion he had this to say:

I will say to the Latter-day Saints, if they will be faithful, and do what they should do, and listen to the counsel given to them, they need not have any fears about anything, for the whole work is in the hands of God, the destinies of nations lie there. It is better for a people to be wise, to get righteousness, to be the friends of God, than to occupy any other positions in life. (J. D. 2, p. 199, February 25, 1855, Discourses of Wilford Woodruff, p. 6.)

PROTECTION OF RIGHTEOUS

Nephi, speaking of our day which by the power of God he had seen in vision, said the Lord would not suffer the wicked to destroy the righteous, but that he would "preserve the righteous by his power, even if it so be that the fulness of his wrath must come, and the righteous be preserved, even unto the destruction of their enemies by fire. Wherefore, the righteous need not fear." (1 Nephi 22:16-17.)

The Lord renewed this same promise of protection to the righteous in 1831 when he said he was angry with the wicked, that he was withholding his Spirit from the inhabitants of the earth, that he had decreed wars upon the face of the earth, and that the wicked should destroy the wicked.

And the saints also shall hardly escape; nevertheless, I, the Lord, am with them, and will come down in heaven from the presence of my Father and consume the wicked with unquenchable fire. (D. & C. 63:33-34.)

Two or three months later, he continued:

. . . the hour is not yet, but is nigh at hand, when peace shall be taken from the earth, and the devil shall have power over his own dominion.

And also the Lord shall have power over his saints, and shall reign in their midst. (Ibid., 1:35-36.)

I am persuaded that a complete surrender to the principles of righteousness would lift God's people out of the turmoil of this present world. Such has been the record in the past, as witness the experiences of Enoch and his people and the record of the Nephites following their visit from the risen Redeemer.

ZION A PLACE OF SAFETY

I believe a similar performance by us in our day would bring the same results. I not only believe, but I know it would, and that it will yet be done. I don't know just how soon, but I am looking forward with certainty to the fulfilment of the words spoken by the Lord to the Church in its infancy, when he directed the Saints to gather together their riches to purchase an inheritance in Zion, which he said was to be a land of peace, a city of refuge, a place of safety for the Saints of the most high God. There the glory of the Lord is to be a terror to the wicked and a comfort to the righteous. Zion's inhabitants are to be the only people that shall not be at war one with another, and every man that will not take up his sword against his neighbour must flee unto it for safety.

And it shall come to pass that the righteous shall be gathered out from among all nations, and shall come to Zion, singing with songs of everlasting joy. (Ibid., 45:71.)

HOPE IN THE FUTURE

Now, I know, my brothers and sisters, that we will have our souls tested before we reach these glories of the future, but if we have them in view and live righteously, we shall thereby be sustained for the trials we must endure. Paul said it was the glory set before Jesus for which he endured the cross, and President Young said it was the vision of Zion as it shall be which sustained the Saints as they pulled their covered wagons from ruts and mudholes and trudged across the plains. Therefore, with hope in the future, let us lift up our hearts and rejoice, and with strength and courage let us gird up our loins and take upon us the whole armour of righteousness, that we may be able to withstand these evil days, that having done all, we may be able to stand.

And as we journey through these anxious times,

The Lord bless thee, and keep thee:

The Lord make his face shine upon thee and be gracious unto thee:

The Lord lift up his countenance upon thee, and give thee peace. (Num. 6-24-26.)

This I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Combined Choruses of the Brigham Young University joined with the congregation in singing "High on the Mountain Top," conducted by Elder J. Spencer Cornwall.

ELDER ELDRED G. SMITH

Patriarch to the Church

My brothers and sisters, I wish to express my feelings along with others in this conference regarding the passing of our late President, George Albert Smith. I, for one, have lost a great friend. I don't think anyone has been more able to take the place of my earthly father than President George Albert Smith has done.

I think he emulated in his life all of the principles of the gospel, and no matter what subject is selected during this conference by the General Authorities or any of those who speak here, it will be a subject of which President George Albert Smith was an excellent example.

KEY TO HAPPINESS

And I pray the Lord will be with me as I express today what thought I have had in mind on the principles of the gospel and the foundation upon which we may have happiness in this life and happiness in the life to come; for no happiness comes without success, or without growth and progress.

Reading from the Doctrine and Covenants, Section twenty-nine, verses 36 to 40,

And it came to pass that Adam, being tempted of the devil—for, behold, the devil was before Adam, for he rebelled against me, saying, Give me thine honor, which is my power; and also a third part of the hosts of the heaven turned he away from me because of their agency;

And they were thrust down, and thus came the devil and his angels;

And, behold, there is a place prepared for them from the beginning, which place is hell.

And it must needs be that the devil should tempt the children of men, or they could not be agents unto themselves; for if they never should have bitter they could not know the sweet—

Wherefore, it came to pass that the devil tempted Adam, and he partook of the forbidden fruit and transgressed the commandment, wherein he became subject to the will of the devil, because he yielded unto temptation.

And reading from Moses:

And in that day the Holy Ghost fell upon Adam, which beareth record of the Father and the Son, saying: I am the only begotten of the Father from the beginning, henceforth and forever, that as thou hast fallen thou mayest be redeemed, and all mankind, even as many as will.

And in that day Adam blessed God and was filled, and began to prophesy concerning all the families of the earth, saying: Blessed be the name of God, for because of my transgression my eyes are opened, and in this life I shall have joy, and again in the flesh I shall see God.

And Eve, his wife, heard all these things and was glad, saying: Were it not for our transgression we never should have had seed, and never should have known good and evil, and the joy of our redemption, and the eternal life which God giveth unto all the obedient. (Moses 5:9-11.)

In both these references we are given the key to happiness in this life and happiness in the life to come to carry throughout all eternity.

Adam felt that men might be; and men are, that they might have joy. (II Nephi 2:25.)

PRESENCE OF GOOD AND EVIL

Joy comes as a result of progress, as a result of accomplishment for good. That is why we all shouted for joy when the opportunity was given to us to come to this earth and partake of the blessings through obedience, made possible to us through exercising free agency. For man to exercise free agency he must have both sides to choose from. In every decision made there must be both a good and an evil influence; for if we had all of the good or all of the evil we would be right in the same path which Satan tried to establish in the first place, that of predestination. And so there must be both sides to choose from in every case.

As the Lord said in the Doctrine and Covenants in the verse from which I previously read:

And it must needs be that the devil should tempt the children of men, or they could not be agents unto themselves; for if they never should have bitter they could not know the sweet. (D. & C. 29:39.)

Therefore, in all that we do we must be tempted. Then our growth depends upon our obedience. The first step in our progress for the eternities is accepting the gospel of Jesus Christ. We do not convert others; missionaries do not convert others. We teach them to think for themselves; and when they have a desire within themselves to receive knowledge and express that desire in action, by being obedient to the desires of God, then they have fulfilled that law upon which that blessing is predicated, which brings a knowledge of the gospel to them through the Holy Ghost.

Baptism is the fulfilling of an ordinance which is an act of testifying that we will be obedient in keeping the commandments of God.

Friday, April 6

First Day

The greatest blessing promised in the Word of Wisdom is that of knowledge. The promises given are:

And all saints who remember to keep and do these sayings, walking in obedience to the commandments, shall receive health in their navel and marrow to their bones;

And shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures. (D. & C. 89:18-19.)

DESIRE TO BE OBEDIENT

I am reminded of a story of a man who once tried to discontinue the use of tobacco. He became almost a nervous wreck. He worried himself sick about how much he was going without tobacco. It was on his mind constantly until he became so nervous and so shaky that he couldn't hold his hands still. Then later on, the elders—the missionaries—contacted him and told him about the Word of Wisdom and he said, "If that's what the Lord wants, then I'll do it." And with the idea in his mind that he was going to do it because of obedience to the commandments of the Lord, he discontinued the use of tobacco; and he held his hands out in front of the visitors with him and said, "Look how steady I am; I'm as steady as any of them and I have gone without tobacco for some months."

Our mental attitude has much to do with whether or not we want to be obedient to the commandments of the Lord.

The same is true in respect to paying tithing. If a man pays his tithing because he wants to be obedient to the commandments of God, he will receive more blessings as a result, and it will be much easier to pay. And so it is with all other requirements of the gospel; for example, attendance at sacrament meetings. What is said at Church is not always remembered, but we receive the blessing for being obedient. As a result we carry the Spirit of the Lord with us in our work between meetings and in our various activities until we again gather with the Saints.

BLESSINGS FOLLOW OBEDIENCE

Some people sacrifice all the blessings of the temple endowment and sealing, including the blessings of godhood and exaltation just because they do not want to be obedient in wearing the temple garment. The greatest blessing that comes from wearing the garment is the result of obedience. Then the Lord will bless us. The success of our entire earth life depends upon how well we learn to be obedient. There can be no obedience without free agency which gives us both good and evil to choose from. Thank God for the gospel plan and the power God gives us to resist evil and choose the right.

And may the Lord be with us and give us those blessings that we need, to carry us through these troubled times, for as long as we are obedient to his will and do that which is in our power, the Lord will take care of the rest of it. And we needn't worry about distressed times, for as long as we have the gospel plan and live it with the idea of being obedient to the desires of our Heavenly Father, his way is the best way, and all other things will be taken care of. Seek ye first the kingdom of heaven and all else shall be added unto it.

May the blessings of the Lord be upon this people and those at this conference and those who shall follow me in occupying the time here, I ask in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER LEVI EDGAR YOUNG

Of the First Council of the Seventy

Death has brought deep sorrow to us all this day. President George Albert Smith has been called to the great beyond, and though we know it was the will of our Father in heaven, yet his passing will be keenly felt by the thousands of people who had come under his influence. His life was one of noblest effort to attain a knowledge of the purposes of the Lord. He never held aught against his neighbor; and every day witnessed a divine act for someone who was in need. Could each one who knew him vow to do his little task even as he did his greater one, in the manner of a true man, not for a day but for eternity, what a better world we would have. He was the spirit he worked in. As an Apostle and President of the Church of Jesus Christ, he was a light unto his people and pointed the way by his purity of life and constancy to the divine purposes of his God. Traveling hopefully on day by day, he gave every hour of his life to the dream of establishing the kingdom of God upon the earth. According to the promise, he looked for a new heaven and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness. He lived ". . . to give light to them that sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, to guide our feet into the way of peace." Luke 1:79.)

His comforting word this day would have been:

Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee.

For, behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people: but the Lord shall arise upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee. (Isaiah 60:1-2.)

I should like to speak briefly to you seventies and to the priesthood of the Church in general.

PRESENT-DAY CONDITIONS

We are all greatly concerned with the present-day social and religious conditions of the world. For all the wrongs that are in the world today, for all the false teachings and terrible wars that we have experienced, all the tragedies and sufferings of humanity caused by sin and the loss of faith in God, our children will have to pay in the future. It was the historian Froude who wrote:

History is a voice forever sounding across the centuries the laws of right and wrong. Opinions alter, manners change, creeds rise and fall, but the moral law is written on the tablets of eternity. For every false word or unrighteous deed, for cruelty and oppression, for lust or vanity, the price has to be paid at last: not always by the chief offenders, but paid by some one. Justice and falsehood may be long-lived, but doomsday comes at last to them, in revolutions and other terrible ways.

Our civilization has arrived at its present state after ages of conflict between right and wrong. All its achievements and all its hopes of greater things are now in a critical hour for better or for worse. Many men and women in governmental affairs have no clear idea of their responsibility that humanity should have towards the future of mankind.

INSPIRED MEN

It is true that good men do rise to their responsibilities. They understand the great problems of the hour. There are men who in the hours of human history have messages from God. They have been inspired because they approached life with deep faith. Fortified by faith these men have gone quietly about teaching the world the dream of moral and spiritual perfection. Such men are few, but their messages are universal. You and I, my brother seventies, know deeply in our hearts the meaning of the gospel of Jesus Christ. We are deeply convinced that we have the insight to listen to the voice from heaven. You must become profoundly convinced of your divine mission, and you will also come to know that there are men living today whose lives are lives of revelation. It is from Christ, our Redeemer, that we learn the lesson of eternal life and become conscious of the immortality of spiritual values.

A DIVINE TITLE

The seventy of the Church bear a noble and divine title. To understand the words used to designate the meaning of our priesthood gives a better understanding of ancient life and thought. We sense more clearly the deeply religious atmosphere of Biblical life, which will awaken within us a more ardent missionary zeal. There was under Moses, and apparently in all ages, a senate or council of elders numbering seventy or seventy-two on whom lay a special responsibility as the advisers of the nation. Shortly after leaving Sinai, a council of seventy was chosen from among the elders or chiefs of all the tribes except Levi and solemnly set apart to their dignity by Moses, as a kind of senate to aid him by their counsel. After being confirmed in their dignity by the people, they assembled around the sacred tent, and the whole number broke out into prophetic enthusiasm under the influence of the Spirit of God. The seventy chosen from all the tribes anticipated, in their prophetic gifts, a characteristic of future generations. Says Geikie:

It is singular to notice the constant recurrence of the number Seven: Seven priests go before the Ark with seven trumpets, for seven days, going seven times round the city on the seventh day. The Passover and the Feast of Tabernacles each lasted seven days. To ratify an oath was to "seven it." The number seems to have been regarded as the symbol of completeness or perfection, and to have been as such, connected intimately with everything relating to God.

We recall the seven virtues or gifts of the Spirit, known in ancient times to the seventy elders. Balzac, the French historian, quotes Louis Lambert of whom he writes as declaring that the word "seven" is the "Formula of Heaven." Therefore as you live and express your thoughts, as you think, as you act, must be in accordance with the fundamental ideals of heaven. We see the beauty and the sacredness of the word "seven." We understand the meaning of the kingdom of God because we possess its power. We are reminded here of the saying above the door of the Harvard School of Music:

To charm, to strengthen, and to teach—these are the three great chords of might.

PEOPLE NEED THE GOSPEL

The people of the world need to be taught the gospel of our Lord and Savior. Teaching is unfolding the divine spark within every person into its fullest majestic purpose and scope. Teaching is from within out. A teacher must know something about the subject he is explaining to a listener. For this reason every missionary should be a student, and this means hard work. It means self-discipline and the desire to live the "simple life," the life that reaches out to God. Of course the missionaries are idealists, caring first for the welfare of men to awaken them to a sense of what life really means. No one can deny the force or the beauty of the desire for extending one's own belief and hopes to others, for imparting to them the comfort and light of one's own salvation. This was the thing that characterized the life of Paul the Apostle and that inspires the mighty hosts of missionaries of today. Life in the missionary's heart is made over, and no sooner has the faith and the hope of an illuminated future taken hold of him than he is desirous to disseminate this possession to all the world. It is the power of the gospel truth that gives him what he calls his "testimony." There is a splendor of spirit and often a grandeur of achievement which bring to him hallowed feelings and a grateful heart for what he, through the Spirit of God, has been able to accomplish.

CALLING OF THE TWELVE AND SEVENTY

At an early period in his ministry, Jesus, after a night of prayer in a lonely mountain spot, chose twelve men for his Apostles. It was an important event in history, for it indicated the design of the Master to organize his ministry that the work of teaching the gospel might be inaugurated at once. The Apostles were to go forth two by two that the Master might become known. They were to work miracles, heal the sick, and bless the lowly. Reverently does James in his epistle describe how they prayed and anointed the sick with oil in the name of the Lord. (See James 5:14-15.)

After choosing the Twelve, Jesus called the Seventy. We read in Luke 10:1, these words:

After these things the Lord appointed other seventy also, and sent them two and two before his face into every city and place, whither he himself would come.

When the Apostles and Seventy were chosen, it is natural to believe that a discourse on the ideal life, under the sovereignty of the Father, was delivered by Jesus. This was the Sermon on the Mount, for he wished to teach his disciples the way of life that they might enter into the true significance of his doctrines. It was an ideal of principles, and not a code of rules. This viewpoint, that the Sermon on the Mount was the ordination sermon, is that of Luke and many modern writers on the life of Christ.

Jesus founded his Church upon the rock of revelation, and he set forth in clearness that his Church is an organized reality, small in numbers, in its beginning, but destined to become a world movement. He inspired his Apostles and Seventies with a definite consciousness of unity. The men he called were not great men in the ordinary sense; they were representative of the common people, possessing neither wealth nor great learning. They were qualified for their calling by their deep desire for goodness and truth. In him they came to find the Word of Life.

TEACHERS OF RIGHTEOUSNESS

You seventies are the teachers of righteousness to all nations. You bear your faithful testimonies to the divine light of the gospel of Jesus Christ. The spirit with which you go forth is that of the Sermon on the Mount. The results of your teachings will be far-reaching.

The world of today is awakening and looking to the future with renewed faith and hope. A spiritual epoch is upon us and a spiritual freedom is being made by mankind. President Brigham Young once said that "the one way to scatter doubt is for all to begin work." Hopes are more real than fears; faith more potent than uncertainty. Beautiful were the words of the shepherds of old when they said: "Let us now go unto Bethlehem, and see this thing that has come to pass." The world must turn to Bethlehem.

May we Seventies come to a deeper realization of what our duties are, and so long as we are pure in heart and humble in spirit, the way will be made clear by our faith in God. I ask the blessings of the Lord upon us all, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay

Elder Harold B. Lee, of the Council of the Twelve, will now speak to us.

If President Heber Meeks, former president of the Southern States Mission, is in the audience, we should like him to come forward, and President Jean Wunderlich of the West German Mission also.

ELDER HAROLD B. LEE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I sincerely pray for the sustaining power of your faith and prayers for the few moments that I shall stand before you this morning.

THE HAND OF DEATH

As we sit this morning with the present reminder of the hand of death, all of us moved with a common impulse of feeling toward our great leader, I have recalled a remark that was made to Elder Lorenzo H. Hatch and myself, as we waited down at Las Vegas, Nevada, a few weeks ago for a late, delayed train. We chanced to be in conversation with a life insurance salesman who is reputed to be one of the outstanding salesmen in America. He expressed a sentiment that has intrigued me, and I want to repeat it to you because of the impression it made upon me. He said, "If you ever want to stir a man into action, you want to back up the hearse and let him smell the flowers prepared for his own service."

At first that seemed to be a terribly gruesome prospect, but as I thought about it the more, it seemed to me that after all it was but a crude way of stating a great eternal truth that has been thundered to us by the prophets from the beginning. All through the scriptures we have had a counsel given us that all that we should do, we should do with an eye single to the glory of God, which glory, the Lord declared to Moses, was to bring to pass immortality and eternal life, that very reminder that death draws nearer each day that we live. It was that same thought expressed by the Apostle Paul when he said:

If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable.

. . . For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive.
(1 Cor. 15:19-22.)

THE TIME TO PREPARE

It was also the great prophet Amulek's testimony in which he declared,

For behold, this life is the time for men to prepare to meet God; . . . [and] to perform their labors.

. . . for after this day of life, which is given us to prepare for eternity, behold, if we do not improve our time while in this life, then cometh the night of darkness wherein there can be no labor performed.

For behold, if ye have procrastinated the day of your repentance even until death, behold, ye have become subjected to the spirit of the devil, and he doth seal you his; therefore, the Spirit of the Lord hath withdrawn from you, and hath no place in you, and the devil hath all power over you; and this is the final state of the wicked. (Alma 34:32-33, 35.)

It was this very reminder that the Angel Moroni gave to the Prophet Joseph, which he records in that famous Wentworth letter when he quoted the Angel Moroni as saying that

. . . preparatory work for the second coming of the Messiah was speedily to commence; that the time was at hand for the gospel in all its fulness to be preached in power, unto all nations, that a people might be prepared for the Millennial reign. (D. H. C. IV:537.)

GOSPEL TO BE PREACHED

In making for that preparation, the Lord has defined certain great responsibilities for his Church. He said as one of the signs of his coming that the gospel of the kingdom was to be preached unto all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then should the end come, or the destruction of the wicked. (See Matt. 24:14.) That witness we have understood, was to be a witness of the mission of the Messiah. It was to be a witness of the divinity of his mission. It was to be a witness that the gospel of Jesus Christ had been restored in all its fulness, in this the Dispensation of the Fulness of Times.

A LIGHT TO THE WORLD

But there was something else that we were supposed to witness which is also spoken of in the revelations. Alma spoke of this to his people who were about to be baptized. As a part of the covenant which they were about to enter, he said that they were to stand as witnesses of God at all times and in all things, and in all places that they might be in, even until death. (Mosiah 18:9.) In one of the earliest revelations given in this dispensation, the Lord said,

And even so I have sent mine everlasting covenant into the world, to be a light to the world, and to be a standard for my people, and for the Gentiles to seek to it. (D. & C. 45:9.)

He again admonished us, on the day when he gave the name by which the Church was to be called. After giving us the name,

. . . thus shall my church be called in the last days, even The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Verily I say unto you all: Arise and shine forth, that they light may be a standard for the nations. (Ibid., 115:4-5.)

As I have thought of those scriptures, I have remembered a statement that was made by an official of the United States Steel Corporation after I had spent an hour or two with him and his company of officials down at Welfare Square. He said to me, "This is a practical demonstration of the gospel of Jesus Christ, in giving aid to the needy and the less fortunate."

WITNESSES BEFORE THE WORLD

That was a new concept to me, that in the welfare program we were standing as witnesses before the world of the divine way by which the Lord's work was to be done.

So, we witness in our missionary work the magnificent spectacle of young men and young women, for the most part, to all the ends of the earth, that by their unselfish services they stand as witnesses at all times and in all places of the divine responsibility upon the Church to teach the gospel.

So, in making sacrifice, in the payment of our tithes, and in fasting and paying our fast offerings, in raising money to pay for meetinghouses and temples, again we are witnessing that the law of sacrifice is required of all true Saints if we would claim kinship to him who gave his life that men might be.

In our social conduct, in our dancing, in our play, we must never forget that in that play we are witnessing also that we are his special witnesses of the divinity of the organizations who sponsor our play.

So, every boy in military service, and every girl in her social conduct, every businessman in his dealings with his neighbor, is a witness as to whether or not this work in which he believes is divine. The Church rises or falls on the tide of these personal witnesses.

A few weeks ago I sat in fast meeting in the South Eighteenth Ward (Salt Lake City) and heard a lovely girl in her mid-twenties stand to bear her testimony. It was a thrilling testimony of a beautiful Latter-day Saint girl. She told in her testimony about a morning out on the farm in a little country district where at four o'clock in the morning she went out with her father to milk the cows. And as the father and she went out towards the barn, her father took her by the hand and said, "My girl, you are the product of this Church of Jesus Christ, and you are also the product of a true Latter-day Saint home. If you fail, so far as you are concerned the Church has failed and your home has failed." That girl from that time has realized that she, as a member of the Church of Jesus Christ, was a witness of it to all the world either for good or for bad.

Friday, April 6First Day

Oh, the majesty of Joseph sold into Egypt, who shamed the beautiful but apparently unloved wife of Potiphar, when she would have tempted him to a serious sin, and he said, "My master trusts me, and thou art his wife. How can I do this great wickedness and sin against God?" (See Gen. 39:8.) He, too, felt his great responsibility in being a true witness of the divine truths which he professed to believe.

In one of the revelations the Lord said something else that to me has significance here. He said,

For Zion must increase in beauty, and in holiness; her borders must be enlarged; her stakes must be strengthened; yea, verily I say unto you, Zion must arise and put on her beautiful garments. (D. & C. 82:14.)

JAPANESE MISSIONARY GIRL

I heard a lovely Japanese missionary girl down at Kamuela on the island of Hawaii a few years ago make what I think was a personal application of that principle as it pertained to her home. There were few missionaries in that day, the war was not yet ended, and this young lady and her companion were two of the only four missionaries on that island. We had in the audience eighty-five United States marines, all Latter-day Saints, who were being trained there supposedly for an invasion off Japan, the homeland of these two lovely missionary girls. Our sister missionary was called to speak before that kind of audience. Tremblingly she stood at the pulpit, and this is what she said: "When my father came to me and told me that they wanted me to go on a mission, I said to him, 'No, Father, I can't go on a mission.'" He pressed her as to why, and she said, "Oh, I just can't." But he urged further, and then she said, "I can't go because if I go out into the mission field I'll be expected to preach certain principles of the gospel, principles which my own father and my own family are not living."

The father asked, "What are we not doing that you'd have to preach?"

"Well," replied his daughter, "I'll be expected to teach the law of sacrifice. You're not even paying your tithing. I'll be asked to teach them about family prayers, and we never have family prayers. I'll be expected to teach the Word of Wisdom; we're using coffee and tea in our home. I'll be expected to teach the importance of giving service in the Church, and you are shunning that service. No, Father, I can't go out and be a hypocrite."

I think that father spent a sleepless night. "The next morning," our Japanese sister said, "Father came to me and said, 'You go, my dear, and your father will try to live as his daughter will preach.'"

Two days later, I met her over at Honolulu at a missionary conference, and she had just been home for the first time in nearly two years. And during the course of the conference I whispered to her, "How did you find things at home?" She smiled, and tears were in her eyes as she said, "It's all right. Father is, and I'm happy."

Youth that we send out from us rarely ever will be stronger than the kind of homes and environment from which they come. The challenge of this time, what with military service of young men eighteen years, young girls disturbed in their social life, is to see that Zion is increased in holiness. We must increase in beauty. Our homes, our quorums, our wards, and our stakes must be strengthened. Zion must arise and put on her most beautiful garments.

COUNSEL OF SUSANNAH WESLEY

A short while ago I read wise counsel from a lovely mother, Susannah Wesley, mother of John Wesley, famed in religious circles. This was what this lovely mother said to her son, which was a criterion by which he could judge right and wrong, in pleasure, and for that matter in all the affairs of life. These were her words:

Would you judge the lawfulness or unlawfulness of pleasure? Then use this rule: Whatever weakens your reason, impairs the tenderness of your conscience, obscures your sight of God, takes from you your thirst for spiritual things, or increases the authority of your body over your mind, then that thing to you is evil. By this test you may detect evil no matter how subtly or how plausibly temptation may be presented to you.

Oh, I wish that every youth would use that rule and measure everything presented to him in order that he might choose the right. God grant that we may strengthen Zion within ourselves, that we might live nobly and prepare to present ourselves in honor at the close of our lives here, before him whose name we bear as members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, I humbly pray in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER HEBER MEEKS

Former President of the Southern States Mission

Our souls have been fed, our lives enriched, our spirits lifted up, by the inspired messages which have come to us from these servants of the Lord. And while there is darkness, confusion, and almost utter despair in the world, what a glorious thing it is that there is a place in the earth, where we may come, as it were, and sit at the feet of the living prophets of God and receive light and truth from the very throne of God. Our pathway is thus made sure, and we can walk among our fellow men in that quiet serenity born of the Holy Spirit of God, that Spirit which brings a peace to the human soul that surpasseth the understanding of men.

I bear witness to you, my brethren and sisters, that this Church, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, is the repository of those principles and ordinances and sacraments which will redeem the human soul, that within it is the power to bring the human soul to perfection, and that within this Church and only in this Church is the power and the authority to dispense the light of the everlasting Gospel and administer the ordinances and the sacraments of the Gospel to the salvation and exaltation of the human soul.

Sister Meeks and I enjoyed our approximately five years presiding in the Southern States Mission. We were there during some very strenuous times. We went into the mission field as our country went into World War II, and the missionaries were leaving the field. It was not very long until we were without the regular missionaries, and all of the responsibilities of carrying forward missionary work were placed upon the local people. It was a great blessing in a way, to the people of that mission. They not only carried forward in the work of the organized branches and districts, but they also carried forward faithfully in the missionary work. We had some five or six hundred of the local people set apart as missionaries to carry the Gospel message to the people. Hundreds of Book of Mormons were sold and distributed. As I recall, in 1947, 480 baptisms were performed in that Mission by our local missionaries, and it was a marvelous thing to see the growth and development that came to the local people as they assumed their responsibilities in the Priesthood, in presiding over the Districts and the Branches. We endeavored to carry out the full program of the Church, just as far as we could in the mission field. We qualified in the same year, in 1947, 34 of our lesser Priesthood quorums for the Standard Quorum Award; 85 of our Priesthood boys won the Individual Quorum Award. We endeavored to carry out the Welfare program of the Church. I was just talking a few moments ago with President Zappay, of the Holland Mission, to whom we shipped some 29 boxes of clothing, in which were hundreds of items of clothing, that went to those good people in Holland. We also sent to the European Saints some 10,000 cans of food, which was prepared under the Welfare program in the Mission. It was our great privilege to have two Stakes of Zion organized in the Mission, while we were presiding there, and two of the highlights of our service in the Mission field were the association we had with President Charles A. Callis and Elder Harold B. Lee in the organization of the Florida Stake, and with Brother Bowen and Brother Moyle in the organization of the South Carolina Stake, and I think largely through the efforts to carry out the full program of the Church these men and women were well qualified to become Stakes of Zion, and I think that the wonderful records which they have made since their organization is evidence of their qualifications.

We enjoyed laboring in the Southland among those wonderful people. It has always been a rich field for missionary service. I doubt if there is a Stake in Zion where there is not some of the blood of our southern people. It was one of the very early missionary fields of the Church, and has continued to be fruitful.

The first year that we were in the mission field, 1064 people were baptized, and that is about the average record of that mission throughout the years. We have rejoiced in the opportunity to carry the Gospel message to the people of the world, for the glorious privilege of witnessing the transformation of the human soul that accepts the Gospel of Jesus Christ, to see a life passing from darkness into light, into the light of the everlasting Gospel, to witness the influence and power of the Spirit of our Heavenly Father upon a human soul. It is a refining influence. The Spirit of our Heavenly Father is to the human soul what sunshine is to vine and flower, it brings the human soul to a full fruition, and that is one of the greatest miracles in all the world, the redemption and glorification of the human soul under the power and influence of the Spirit of God.

I rejoice in the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and the glorious message which it has brought to me, for it tells me that I do not have a common origin nor a common destiny with the beasts of the field, that birth into this life was not the beginning of my soul, and that death is not its oblivion. But it tells me that I am a son of God, an eternal being; that as a son of God, there is within me all the qualities, all the powers of my Father which is in Heaven, that there is within me the power to rise to Godhood, that I may share with God, my Father in Heaven, forever and ever, all His power and glory and dominion, through Jesus Christ, our Savior, Amen.

President David O. McKay

We have just listened to President Heber Meeks, former president of the Southern States Mission. We shall ask President Wunderlich to be prepared to be called this afternoon. We trust that the anticipation of this responsibility will not interfere with his luncheon.

We wish to express appreciation for the gift of these beautiful lillies. I am not sure who gave them, but I think they came from the Berkeley Stake in California.

We wish also to announce the presence of all the mission presidents laboring on the North American continent, and I believe we have the president of the Chinese Mission. If he has not arrived yet, we hope he will be here before the close of the conference.

We wish to acknowledge also the presence of State and City officials and the presence of the President of the University of Utah, President of the Brigham Young University and the President of the Utah State Agricultural College.

It is my pleasure also to announce the presence of President Israel A. Smith, President of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and I believe one or two of his associates or officials in that Church. We welcome them and will be very glad to do anything we can to make their visit a pleasant one, considering, of course, the death of their kinsman, President George Albert Smith.

We welcome others who have joined us this morning in this worship .

Friday, April 6First Day

The Brigham Young University combined choruses will now sing: "Jesu, Word of God," conducted by Elder Crawford Gates.

The closing prayer will be offered by President Hugh C. Smith of the San Fernando Stake of California, after which this conference will stand adjourned until two o'clock this afternoon. The proceedings of that session will be broadcast over KSL and by arrangement through KSL over the other stations named at the beginning of this session. The conference will also be broadcast over the television station of KSL, channel 5.

Important messages and calls coming to us for persons supposed to be in attendance at the conference will be announced at the dismissal of this meeting over the loud speaking system on the tabernacle grounds. Similar messages coming in will likewise be broadcast at the close of each general session of the conference.

The choir music for this session has been furnished by the Brigham Young University combined choruses, with Elders Newell Weight and Crawford Gates conducting and Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ.

After the singing the benediction will be offered by President Hugh C. Smith.

---

The Brigham Young University combined choruses sang: "Jesu, Word of God."

Elder Hugh C. Smith, President of the San Fernando Stake offered the closing prayer.

Conference adjourned until 2:00 p.m.

FIRST DAY

AFTERNOON MEETING

The second session of the Conference convened promptly at 2:00 p.m. President David O. McKay of the Council of the Twelve Apostles presided, Elder J. Reuben Clark, Jr. conducted the services.

Elder J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

This is the second session of the One Hundred Twenty-first Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City, Utah. President David O. McKay, President of the Council of the Twelve, is presiding, and he has asked me, as a courtesy to me, to conduct the services this afternoon.

These services, and all general sessions of the conference will be broadcast in the Assembly Hall and in Barratt Hall, 60 North Main, over a loud speaking system and by television.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over Station KSL at Salt Lake City, and by arrangement through KSL, over the stations named in the first session of the Conference.

This session will also be televised over the KSL television station, channel five.

The choir singing for this session will be by the Brigham Young University combined choruses, with Elders Clawson Cannon and Crawford Gates conducting and Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ.

We will begin the services by the Brigham Young University combined choruses singing: "O Be Joyful All Ye Lands," conducted by Elder Clawson Cannon.

The opening prayer will be offered by President Wilford H. Payne of the Seattle Stake, Washington.

The Brigham Young University combined choruses sang "O Be Joyful All Ye Lands."

The opening prayer was offered by President Wilford H. Payne of the Seattle Stake.

The Brigham Young University combined choruses sang: "All Creatures of Our God and King" conducted by Elder Clawson Cannon.

BISHOP LEGRAND RICHARDS

Presiding Bishop of the Church

My brothers and sisters, I feel humble as I stand here this day but grateful to the Lord for my association with his people and his great Church. I should like to express the love of my father's family and myself and my wife and children for our worthy president, President George Albert Smith. He has been a great friend to all of us, and we have loved him deeply, and we have honored him in his high and holy calling as the President of this Church.

What I say this afternoon, I pray the Lord will direct, that it will help to inspire others to want to live nearer to the Lord and keep his commandments and help to build his kingdom here in the earth.

VISIT OF YOUNG LADY

A few weeks ago, a young lady phoned me for an appointment; and when she came to the office, she sat there and cried for a little while, and then she said: "I guess I'm jittery."

"Well," I said, "that's all right." Then when she had composed herself, she said, "Bishop, what is there for the young people today? We have war. They are taking all the boys; it looks like another great war is ahead of us. What do we young people have to live for?"

I looked at her for a few minutes and said, "Have you ever thought of the other side of the story?"

Friday, April 6

First Day

She said, "What side?"

"Well," I said, "you remember the story of the two buckets that went down in the well; as the one came up, it said, 'This is surely a cold and dreary world. No matter how many times I come up full, I always have to go down empty?.' Then the other bucket laughed and said, 'With me it is different. No matter how many times I go down empty, I always come up full.'"

I said, "Have you ever stopped to realize that of all the millions of our Father's children, you are one of the most favored? You are privileged to live in the Dispensation of the Fulness of Times that the prophets of old have looked forward to, when there is more revealed truth upon the earth than there has ever been in any other dispensation of the world's history, and where we enjoy blessings and comforts of life that kings did not enjoy a few years ago. Have you ever stopped to think of that side of the story?"

And before she left, she decided that probably it wasn't as cold and dreary a world, after all, as it might be.

I said, "You just go on, and live right, and don't you lose your courage, and don't think that life isn't worth while and isn't worth living. Whether you live or whether you die or whether you are permitted to live a long life or a short life isn't going to be the thing that is going to determine the success or failure of your life; it's how you live. And if we only live right, it will not matter whether the time is short or long; we won't have to worry much about it."

SIGNS OF THE TIMES

As I thought about that conversation, I thought of the words of the Savior. On one occasion, the Pharisees and the Sadducees came to him, and tempting him, asked him to show them a sign from heaven. And Jesus answering said unto them,

. . . When it is evening, ye say, It will be fair weather: for the sky is red.

And in the morning, It will be foul weather today: for the sky is red and lowring. O ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face of the sky; but can ye not discern the signs of the times? (Matt. 16:2-3.)

If the world could discern the signs of the times, it would not be difficult for them to understand that the God of Israel has set his hand to do a marvelous work and a wonder among his people in the earth and that there is a kingdom established that is ultimately destined to fill the whole earth. And it will do it because it is God's work and not the work of man.

While I was president of the Southern States Mission, one of our missionaries wrote in from Florida and said, "President Richards, I have been reading about the signs of the coming of the Lord." He said, "When the sun darkens and the moon ceases to give its light and the stars fall from heaven, everybody will know that he is coming."

And I wrote back and said, "Probably they will know. The newspapers might announce some great phenomenon in the heavens, misplacement of planets, that have caused this consternation, and scientists will have their explanation to make of it, and unless they have faith in the Living God, unless as Jesus said, they can read the signs of the times, they may not know anything about what is going on in the world.

"Why," I said, "if the inhabitants of this earth had the ability and the power to read the signs of the times, they would know that already the Lord has given far more than the darkening of the sun or obscuring the light of the moon or causing the stars to fall from heaven, for what he has accomplished in the establishment of his kingdom in the earth in these latter days, and the unseen power operating in the world for the accomplishment of his purposes, are greater signs than any of these phenomena that we read about—the signs of his coming."

GATHERING OF ISRAEL

Now, I want to bear my testimony to you that I know God has set his hand to gather scattered Israel, just as Moroni told the Prophet Joseph, as part of this work, before there was any organization of the Church, before there was any priesthood or power to officiate in the name of the Lord.

The Angel Moroni told the Prophet Joseph that, quoting the words of Isaiah, the Lord should gather scattered Israel and bring in the dispersed of Judah and set up an ensign for the nations. Well, hasn't he done it? Let us consider what has happened here in these valleys of the mountains as a part of the fulfilment of the promises the Lord has made through his prophets of old: how he should cause the waters to flow down from the high places where it has been reservoired in these mountains, how the rivers should flow in the deserts (and if you go up through Idaho and see those great canals out of that Snake River, you will see that those canals are larger than the average rivers you see in the world), and how the waters should spring up in the dry places. When I was in Arizona recently, I saw pipes at least twenty inches in diameter running day and night, all the time, full of water, and as I saw them, I said to myself, this is what the prophets saw when the Lord declared through their mouths that he would turn the wilderness and make it to blossom as the rose. And we are living here in that day.

PROPHECIES BEING FULFILLED

And then he said that he would cause the daughters of Zion to come up and sing in the heights of Zion, and where in all the world is there anything to compare with what has gone out of this tabernacle from the heights of Zion, week after week, for these twenty-odd years as the Tabernacle Choir has broadcast to the world?

Friday, April 6

First Day

Where could you pick a group out of any other school like this group that is here today? (I'm referring to the mixed chorus from the Brigham Young University furnishing the music for this session of conference.)

God bless the youth of Zion. They are following in the footsteps of their parents. They love the Church, and they have a testimony of the divinity of it, I know, through my association with these young people.

And then read the words of Isaiah, where he saw the house of the Lord established in the tops of the mountains in the last days, and he saw that all nations should flow unto it, and they would say:

... Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths. (Isaiah 2:3)

Has that ever happened in this world before? And if the Lord is about to come, as he has indicated that he would in these latter days, in the establishment of his kingdom, should we not have a fulfillment of these promises? And then Isaiah goes on to tell us when that time would be, because he adds:

And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people: and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruninghooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. (Ibid., 2:4.)

Ever since I was a small boy, I have thrilled every time I have heard the words spoken to John upon the Isle of Patmos when the voice from heaven said, "Come up hither and I will shew thee things which must be hereafter." (Rev. 4:1.) Then John said:

And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people,

Saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come. (Ibid., 14:6-7.)

I have always understood that the coming of this angel with the everlasting gospel, and there can be no other, should precede the great judgments of the Lord.

SIGNS OF SECOND COMING

You will remember, when Jesus was upon the Mount of Olives, his disciples came to him, and he told them how the temple should be broken down, that there should not be one stone left upon another. Then they said,

Tell us, when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world? (Matt. 24:3.)

He proceeded to tell them of the wars and destruction that should come upon the nations, and that there should be tribulations such as had not been known from the beginning of the world and should not be known until the end.

Those of us who know of the numbers who were killed during the last world war know that we have lived in the day when tribulations have come to this world the like of which the world has never known from the beginning of time. Of course, we do not know just what the end is going to be, or whether we have reached that end or not. As another sign, the Savior made this statement:

And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come. (Ibid., 24:14.)

MISSIONARY SYSTEM

A friend of mine sent me a newspaper clipping from Los Angeles the other day. It gives a report of the growth of the churches. It goes on to say, "The Mormon Church, devoting a great deal of effort to the missionary field, is one of the fastest growing orders in the world"—not just in the Rocky Mountains—but in the world. How could the gospel be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations before the end should come, without a system of having it preached such as the great missionary system of this Church. To me it is one of the most marvelous things this world has ever produced. To think that the Church can send missionaries by the thousands, and they don't have to be paid for going!

One sister came into my office a few weeks ago for me to interview her missionary boy, and she said: "Bishop, I have a son in Switzerland. I have a daughter in the Great Lakes Mission. Here's my last boy." She was not very well clad. And I looked at her and said, "Sister, can you do it?"

She replied: "We will make it some way."

That is the kind of faith that is going to carry the gospel message to every land and every clime. And that kind of faith has been in this Church from the very beginning, and it will continue because it is God's work, and that unseen power that motivates it will continue to carry it on.

NEBUCHADNEZZAR'S DREAM

When you read an article such as the one I just quoted from the newspaper in Los Angeles, it is not difficult for you to understand what Daniel saw when he interpreted Nebuchadnezzar's dream, when he saw that the God of heaven in the last days should set up a kingdom, like a little stone cut out of the mountain without hands, that should roll forth and fall upon the kingdoms of this world, and they should all be destroyed, and the little stone should become as a great mountain and fill the whole earth.

Why will it become as a great mountain? Because it is builded upon eternal truth!

And God can plant in the hearts of his children, for he created the feelings of the human soul, a willingness to preach the truth until it shall ultimately triumph over all the kingdoms of this world.

Friday, April 6First Day

In Florida, one of our missionary boys preached on that subject in one of our meetings. At the close of the meeting I stood at the door to shake hands with the people, and a minister of the gospel came up and introduced himself to me.

He said, "You don't mean to say that you think that little stone is the Mormon Church, do you?"

I said, "Why not?"

He said, "It couldn't be."

"Well, why couldn't it?"

He said, "Well, you can't have a kingdom without a king. And you don't have a king, so you haven't a kingdom."

"Oh," I said, "my friend, you didn't read quite far enough. You just read the seventh chapter of Daniel, and there you will see that Daniel saw one like the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven, and there was given him dominion and glory and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve him. Now," I said, "tell me, how is a kingdom going to be given to him when he comes in the clouds of heaven if there is no kingdom prepared for him? Maybe you would like to know what is going to become of that kingdom. And if you will read a little farther, you will see that Daniel said: 'But the Saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom for ever.' And as if that were not quite long enough, Daniel adds, 'even forever and ever.'"

That is what the Latter-day Saints are working for. That is the work they have to do. That is the blessing the Lord has in store for them. And there is no power under heaven that can stop it growing because it is his kingdom, and he will see it on to its ultimate destiny. It is the only time in the history of the world that God has set a work afoot with a promise decreed that it should ultimately subdue all the powers and the kingdoms of this world and should stand forever.

DISPENSATION OF THE FULNESS OF TIMES

My time is gone. You add to this, in your own thinking, the coming of Elijah, the prophet, before the great and dreadful day of the Lord should come, because the whole earth was to be utterly wasted at the coming of the Lord if Elijah failed to come. Then add the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, the companion volume of scripture which the Lord promised he would join to the Bible and make them one in his hands. Then remember Paul's declaration that the Lord had made known the mysteries of his will, that in the Dispensation of the Fulness of Times, he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven and which are on earth; even in him. There has never been a program to accomplish that objective in the history of the world, so far as our records indicate, until we had the coming of Eliah with his great sealing power of binding the dead that have gone beyond, as Paul said, "for they without us cannot be made perfect, nor we without them."

Now, brothers and sisters, if your boys and girls are worried about what is going to become of them, just let them acquire in the depths of their souls a testimony of the value of being privileged to live in this the Dispensation of the Fulness of Times, when God literally has set his hand to do a marvelous work and a wonder, as he promised to do, and then let us not be like the hypocrites, "Ye can discern the face of the sky; but can ye not discern the signs of the times?"

God help us to understand the signs of the times, I pray in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER EZRA TAFT BENSON

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I pray for the inspiration of heaven and your faith and prayers, my brothers and sisters, as I stand before you this afternoon. My soul has been subdued and my heart made tender through the passing of our great leader, President George Albert Smith. I have mingled feelings of humility, sadness, and gratitude, at the passing of a prophet of God. All Israel, I am sure, has been weeping. And yet, back of it all has been a feeling of thanksgiving for the life of this great man.

The Lord said in this dispensation:

Thou shalt live together in love, insomuch that thou shalt weep for the loss of them that die, . . . (D. & C. 42:45.)

And so it is fitting that we should have sadness in our hearts and should weep at the passing of one we love, and one whom the Lord loves and has magnified. He was a man without guile, and as President McKay said this morning, with Christlike attributes.

"A REAL MAN"

Since Wednesday night there have been going through my heart and through my mind, these lines under the caption, "A Real Man":

Men are of two kinds, and he
Was of the kind I'd like to be.
Some preach their virtues, and a few
Express their lives by what they do.
That sort was he. No flowery phrase
Or glibly spoken words of praise
Won friends for him. He wasn't cheap
Or shallow, but his course ran deep,
And it was pure. You know the kind.
Not many in a life you find
Whose deeds outrun their words so far
That more than what they seem, they are

GENERAL CONFERENCE

First Day

There are two kinds of lies as well:
 The kind you live, the ones you tell.
 Back through his years from age to youth
 He never acted one untruth.
 Out in the open light he fought
 And didn't care what others thought
 Nor what they said about his fight.
 If he believed that he was right.
 The only deeds he ever hid
 Were acts of kindness that he did.

What speech he had was plain and blunt
 His was an unattractive front.
 Yet children loved him; babe and boy
 Played with the strength he could employ,
 Without one fear, and they are fleet
 To sense injustice and deceit.
 No backdoor gossip linked his name
 With any shady tale of shame.
 He did not have to compromise
 With evil-doers, shrewd and wise,
 And let them ply their vicious trade
 Because of some past escapade.

Men are of two kinds, and he
 Was of the kind I'd like to be.
 No door at which he ever knocked
 Against his manly form was locked.
 If ever man on earth was free
 And independent, it was he.
 No broken pledge lost him respect,
 He met all men with head erect,
 And when he passed I think there went
 A soul to yonder firmament
 So white, so splendid, and so fine
 It came almost to God's design.

TRIBUTE TO PRESIDENT SMITH

God bless the memory of President George Albert Smith. I am grateful beyond my words of expression for the close association which I have had with him in the last few years. I am grateful that my family has lived in the same ward and has come under the benign influence of his sweet spirit. I shall never cease to be grateful for the visits he made to my home while I was serving as a humble missionary in the nations of war-torn Europe at the end of World War II. Particularly am I thankful for a visit in the still of the night when our little one lay at death's door. Without any announcement, President Smith found time to come into that home and place his hands upon the head of that little one, held in her mother's arms as she had been for many hours, and promise her complete recovery. This was President Smith, he always had time to help, particularly those who were sick, those who needed him most.

Last Monday evening at the Lion House, there was held a party for those who had served on the general boards of M.I.A. in years past under the leadership of Brother George Q. Morris and Sister Lucy Grant Cannon. It was to have been an April Fool party, a fun party, but the gathering turned out to be a spontaneous meeting of tribute to the man who, probably as much as any other who has ever lived, inspired and loved the youth of Zion. I wish you could have heard the tribute paid by dear Sister Ruth May Fox, ninety-seven years of age, as she stood on her feet and bore testimony to the worth of President Smith and the inspiration which he has been to the youth of Zion through all the days of his life.

I wish you could have sat with me the past two years in close association with the National Executive Board of the Boy Scouts of America and heard leaders of industry, financiers, business executives, and leaders in the professions speak of the fine life of President George Albert Smith. Their first words after greeting were usually, "How is my good friend, George Albert Smith?" Many of them would add, "A man of God, if there ever was one." Then as we parted they often said, "Take my love and greetings to President George Albert Smith." He loved all men. They reciprocated that love. What an example he has set for us all, my brothers and sisters, in this spirit of love, fellowship, and brotherhood!

SAVING OF SOULS

His great objective has been to help save the souls of the children of men. You remember, the Lord said to the Prophet Joseph:

Remember the worth of souls is great in the sight of God;

For, behold, the Lord your Redeemer suffered death in the flesh; wherefore he suffered the pain of all men, that all men might repent and come unto him. (D. & C. 18:10-11.)

The Lord said to Moses:

For behold, this is my work and my glory—to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man. (P. of G. P., Moses 1:39.)

This is our first interest as a Church—to build character, to save and exalt the souls of the children of men. President Smith was interested in this project above all others. He realized that in the youth of Zion there must be established real character as the one thing they can take with them into the world to come; that they must prepare themselves here for exaltation. I am grateful that he had faith in them. I am grateful for the inspiration that he brought to the youth of Zion. Yes, we do have faith in them. We have faith that they will carry on, that they will measure up, that they will maintain the standards of the past, the standards of their parents and their grandparents. It often would grieve President Smith when he would hear people discredit the youth of the Church and suggest at one time that what they need is a few more models and not so many critics.

I have faith in the youth of Israel, my brothers and sisters, inspired in large measure by President Smith. I have seen them in action, as you have. I rejoice to see our missionaries go out into the world, to meet them on the street corners and hear them bearing testimony to the truth of this great latter-day work. I thrill as I see them in action on the basketball floor. I thrilled with them as they received what was probably the last telegram which President Smith sent, which went to our B. Y. U. basketball boys back in Madison Square Garden. I am stirred as I see our boys out in the service of their country, maintaining the standards of the Church and living the gospel in the face of temptation, sin, and evil all around them.

COMMENTS OF CHAPLAIN

I recall an incident which occurred shortly after World War II. With the president of the Northwestern States Mission, I was making a tour of that mission, and we were up in Alaska. While there we visited one of the camps and held a meeting with our servicemen in the little army chapel. I noted as the service progressed that sitting down in the far corner of the building at a table was a Protestant chaplain. Apparently, he was trying to give the impression that he was working, but we could tell he was listening to every word that was said in that service. This fine group of servicemen led the singing, offered the prayers, administered the sacred emblems and bore testimony. As we finished our meeting and were leaving the building, I went over to the chaplain to express gratitude for the use of the building. As I did so, he said in substance, "I wonder if you realize the kind of young men you have represented here in this camp. They are truly a marvelous group of boys." Then he went on to say, "They don't need a chaplain; any one of them could take my place." I thanked him for the compliment and started leaving when he added, "One other thing. I have two boys of my own—eleven and thirteen—and you know, I couldn't wish anything better for them than that when they grow a little older, they become members of your Church and develop into the kind of young manhood I have seen represented here in your group of Mormon boys."

FAITH IN YOUTH

My brethren and sisters, it is my conviction that the finest group of young people that this world has ever known anything about has been born under the covenant into the homes of Latter-day Saint parents. I have a feeling that in many cases at least these choice spirits have been held back to come forth in this day and age when the gospel is upon the earth in its fulness, and that they have great responsibilities in establishing the kingdom. I presume that no generation has faced more serious difficulties than they face. They live in an age which seems to question all the standards of the past, and which is discarding many of those standards. Yes, they live in a period when even some spiritual leaders, so-called, point out that the question of smoking, drinking, and carousing has no relationship to salvation, that these are personal matters.

I have the conviction that these young people, if they have the benefit and blessing of the full program of the Church, are going to come through, in spite of the temptations, with colors flying in a way that will make us proud of them. However, they will need more than material things. They are going to need more than real estate, stocks and bonds, life insurance, or even democracy. They are going to need a sane spiritual foundation, if they endure, if they are going to be able to live clean and to maintain the standards of the Church. God expects great things of them. He expects them to develop into noble characters, into good citizens—citizens which may eventually provide in part, at least, the leaven which may help to save this great nation. He expects them to live clean even in a wicked world. He expects them to grow up with a testimony of the gospel. He expects these young men to live so that they can receive the holy Melchizedek Priesthood and so that eventually they can be married in the temple of God to worthy companions for time and eternity. He also expects them to know the glorious blessings of honorable parenthood and eventually to be exalted in the celestial kingdom of God.

CHURCH PROGRAM

I am convinced, my brethren and sisters, that we have in the Church the finest program available anywhere to help bring about these objectives, if our children are only put in touch with this program. I am thinking now of the blessings which come to our children in the full and rich program of the Primary. They have just held a convention here on this block. Are we missing any of our children? Is the Primary program reaching them? And the same with the Sunday School. Are our children in Sunday School? Are they being taught the gospel in the Sunday School classes? Are our boys and girls attending M.I.A.? Are our boys receiving and enjoying the rich blessings of the program provided through the scouting and Explorer program? Are they being ordained to the Aaronic Priesthood, and are they active in the rich program which is provided?

SCOUTING

I know that the one great reason why President Smith has been so active for many years in the scouting program is the fact that the ideals of scouting follow closely the ideals of the Church. The scouting program is not a substitute for the Aaronic Priesthood program.

Friday, April 6First Day

The most important possession that a boy can have is the Aaronic Priesthood. But scouting is a supplementary, a complementary program. It works hand in hand with the program of the Primary, Sunday School, and the Aaronic Priesthood, and is an important and vital part of our program for our boys.

Scouting is dedicated to a four-fold program: First, it teaches the boy his duty to God—reverence, observance of the Sabbath, and the maintenance of the spiritual standards and ideals of his Church. Second, it teaches duty to country—true patriotism—a love for the constitution, for our free institutions and our American way of life. I was thrilled as I stood in Valley Forge last summer facing over forty-seven thousand representative boys as they saw depicted before their eyes that terrible winter of 1777-8 when Washington and his bedraggled forces all but perished there in Valley Forge. These boys' hearts were touched as they saw the father of their country leave his troops and go off into the trees in the snow and bow in humble prayer before the Almighty that this young nation might be preserved. This was part of the two-year Boy Scout theme to "Strengthen the Arm of Liberty." Third, it teaches the value of service to others—willing, unselfish service, and that the greatest among them must be the servant of all—symbolized by the "good turn." Fourth, it teaches duty to self—that they must keep themselves physically strong, mentally awake, and morally straight. They must be prepared for any eventuality to serve themselves, their Church, and their country.

There is held up before them the Scout oath and the Scout laws, which focus attention on those things that are worth while—that a Scout must be trustworthy, loyal, helpful, friendly, courteous, kind, obedient, cheerful, thrifty, brave, clean, reverent. To be a good scout he must be faithful in his religious duties. Scouting provides a program of training and experience. It is a program for character development. It is a supplementary educational program, a program of citizenship training and vocational exploration. Many boys have found their vocations through this program—through the 111 merit badges which are concentrated courses in vocational guidance in fifteen different active fields. Scouting teaches boys the crafts and the skills and to do something useful with their hands.

And so, in view of the richness of the scouting program and the fact that these ideals coincide with the ideals of the Church, President Smith has urged our full support in these words: "It is my desire to see scouting extended to every boy in the Church." Under his leadership and inspiration the Church has moved forward to an enviable position with something over 2290 scouting and Explorer units, an increase of 180 during this past calendar year. But there are still approximately fifteen percent of our boys who are not enjoying the benefits of the scouting and Explorer program.

LEADERSHIP NEEDED

One of our great needs, of course, is effective leadership. Some of our boys are not being reached by this program. Some are not being reached by the Aaronic Priesthood program. Some of them are missing the benefits and blessings of Primary. It is largely a question of leadership. Boys want the scouting program, we want them to have it; and if we have the right kind of leadership through real boys' men, they'll have it, enjoy it, and receive the blessings which come from the program. The responsibility rests with the priesthood—stake presidencies and bishoprics—to see that this leadership is provided and that every boy is reached.

And so, my brothers and sisters, we have a well-rounded program for the youth of the Church. And we are not dealing with ordinary young people. We are working with choice spirits who need the full Church program. We want them to have the benefit of this program in its fulness, that they might develop into the kind of young men and young women which the Lord would have them become. Of course, these programs are not ends in themselves. They are tools. They are a means to an end. The end is the salvation and exaltation of God's children.

But these programs are not optional programs. They are the youth program of the Church, approved by the leadership thereof. May God bless us, my brethren and sisters, that as leaders in Israel we may have the power and the inspiration to make our young people want to enjoy the full program of the Church offered through the Sunday School, the Primary, the M.I.A., and the Aaronic Priesthood program, that they might eventually meet the expectations of their parents, their Church leaders, and our Heavenly Father. God bless us to this end. God bless the youth of Israel everywhere, that they may grow and develop into sterling characters, faithful and true to this great latter-day work, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The congregation and the Combined Choruses of the Brigham Young University joined in singing the hymn, "How Firm A Foundation."

ELDER JOSEPH F. MERRILL

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

Brethren and Sisters: To stand in this pulpit to address the many thousands who assemble here and the countless thousands who listen to the radio broadcasts is to be greatly humbled by a keen feeling of heavy responsibility to such a vast audience to say something that will be worth listening to. I am comforted, however, in my humility, by the thought that Mormonism, the restored gospel of Jesus Christ, is so fraught with precious truths that any of these we may talk about are worthy of the attention of every one of us—of every normal human being. But are not all Latter-day Saints familiar with these truths, having previously heard them discussed many times? Yes, this may be the case, but if they love them, a restatement or discussion will be listened to with more-or-less satisfaction. At least this is my experience. I hope it is yours.

Friday, April 6First Day

A PECULIAR PEOPLE

Mormonism, as I have just defined it, is not a Protestant, Catholic, Jewish, or any other faith as taught by other churches. It is characterized by many teachings and doctrines not accepted by other churches. This fact is sometimes indicated by the statement that we are a peculiar people—something of which we are proud yet very humble and grateful for; for we believe and testify that these characteristic teachings are absolutely true because they have come to us through visitations and revelations from heavenly sources—from God and his messengers.

It is trite to say that Mormonism is an everyday religion because it requires its adherents to implement in their daily lives the teaching that faith without works is dead—as the Apostle James stated it; they must practice all those virtues that will make them Saints in very deed. Some of these virtues, however, are considered basic to an acceptable Christian life by all Christian churches. A statement of some of these is found in articles eleven, twelve, and thirteen of our faith and are as follows:

"11. We claim the privilege of worshipping Almighty God according to the dictates of our own conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may"—an ideal statement of religious tolerance, something much needed today but denied to millions of human beings in the past.

"12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates, in obeying, honoring, and sustaining the law." Loyalty to country and obedience to constitutional laws are requirements for full fellowship in our Church.

"13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men. . . .

It is the emphasis we place upon some of these things—chastity, for example—that makes our moral standards higher than those maintained by some other religious groups.

PRESIDENT GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

At this point may I digress a moment to say a word of tribute to our greatly beloved departed President, George Albert Smith. We have been friends for sixty-two years. Late in the eighties he and I were fellow students during one year at the University of Deseret. Since that time I have been more or less closely associated with him in Church work. For several years we were together in the superintendency of the Young Men's Mutual Improvement Association in the Salt Lake Stake, when the stake covered the entire Salt Lake County. I have said many times that I have never known a man who I thought tried more sincerely and harder to love everybody than did George Albert Smith. Not that he approved all people did, but the farther off the beam they were, the more he seemed to sympathize with them because of their greater need for help.

MORAL STANDARDS

Looking out into the world today, what do we see relative to the moral standards expressed by these three articles of our faith? No matter in what direction we look, and not going beyond the boundaries of our own country, we see moral conditions are bad, in some places very bad. Wickedness of the blackest and most abominable kinds exists nearly everywhere. I speak of these things only that we may be reminded that it is our duty, as I see it, to minimize and eliminate indulgence in these evils among us insofar as it is in our power. But is there not existent in many places among us a reprehensible indifference and laxity relative to these things? Yet do we not teach tolerance and free agency? is a question sometimes asked. Why interfere with other people's business? This is a Satan-inspired question. We certainly are expected to defend ourselves against the marauder, the robber, the despoiler of the sanctity of our homes and families and the destroyer of things we hold sacred and dear—as life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

Free agency is a priceless, God-given right to every child born in mortality, but it does not include the right to mar, hurt, or destroy the well-being of our fellow men. Did you read recent newspaper statements relative to the existence of vicious narcotic rings which specialize in the teen-age trade and encourage morphine-marijuana parties of boys and girls that sometimes turn into orgies? You have heard, of course, of the countrywide slot machine racket, the income of which amounts annually to billions of dollars; of gambling and horse-race betting—these being other activities where billions are lost. Evils attendant on the consumption of alcoholic beverages (the annual cost in America of these is about eight billion dollars) have also reached an enormous magnitude. To these and many other evils are we not more or less indifferent?

THE LIQUOR PROBLEM

The National Safety Council and other agencies repeatedly warn that alcohol is responsible for large numbers of our accidents, troubles, sorrows, and deaths. Then why do we consume alcoholic beverages? To what extent is this indulgence due to advertising? The brewers are reportedly doing a good sales promotion job. Just now they are hammering at reaching a consumption of one hundred million barrels of beer a year and are looking forward to 120 million barrels. Much of this consumption they want in the home, for it is there they can best develop the use of beer by women and young people. So it is said, brewers are giving a great deal of attention to the principles of store-selling. Most beer advertising is directed to the home, exploiting the great interest in television; also extensive use is made of the pictures of young girls on billboards. This invasion of the home to advertise beer by means of the radio and television has, of course, met with vigorous denunciation.

Friday, April 6

First Day

What can we do about it? This is a problem that every home should try to solve. Let us not forget the warning divinely given us in the Doctrine and Covenants and "evils and designs do and will exist in the hearts of conspiring men in the last days." Loyalty to our doctrines and principles demands that we shall be alerted and active in keeping evils and wickedness as far from us and our fellow men as we can. Let us not forget, but act.

RELATIONS WITH FELLOWMEN

There is another class of evils that I desire to refer to—evils that permeate relations with our fellow men. When asked by the lawyer which is the great commandment in the law,

Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind.

This is the first and great commandment.

And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. (Matt. 22:37-39.)

We accept another statement of Jesus as being another version of the second commandment. It is as follows:

... whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets. (Ibid., 7:12.)

In this streamlined age we call the statement of this law The Golden Rule. This rule is also obviously implied in the thirteenth article of our faith.

To what extent do we live the Golden Rule in all of our relations with our fellows?

Immediately following the outbreak of the Korean war in June 1950, the price of foods and many other things began to go up—not that the cost of production had risen so soon. Then why? Almost simultaneously, or even before this in some cases, a demand for an increase of wages was made by the leaders of some organized labor groups. Why? Did the Golden Rule motivate those responsible for raises in price of commodities, or those who clamored for increased wages?

GREED AND SELFISHNESS

Oh, but, it is said, the law of supply and demand governs these things. To say that this is true is an outrage on the ordinarily accepted meaning of the word law as is applied to the phenomena of nature or to enactments of legally constituted human groups authorized to make enactments. To be plain and frank, does not the law of supply and demand mean, as practised in commercial affairs, "Get all you can for what you have to sell, whether it be commodities or labor or services"? And are not greed and selfishness among the real motivating and dominating forces operating in all our commercial affairs whether they be big or little, whether the participants be businessmen, professional men, or laboring men?

We complain of inflation—rising costs that deflate or lessen the purchasing power of the dollar. In the last analysis are not selfishness and greed responsible for inflation? Who in the U. S. is injured by inflation? Everyone who has bought a government bond (about eighty million people), everyone who has a savings account, an insurance policy, or a pension (at least one hundred million people), everyone who works for wages or a salary that does not rise, percentage-wise, as fast as the cost of living goes up (about sixty-two million people), and all other people except the very few who are paying off debts incurred years ago. Then to avoid injuring people, should not more than ninety-nine percent of us, even as a matter of self-interest, and more importantly, all of us who want to be honest and believe in the Golden Rule, do all we can to stop inflation?

Our country is facing one of the most critical periods in its history. Selfishness and greed are tearing it asunder. The devil is riding high and shouting in Satanic glee at the utter foolishness displayed on all levels, in all grades and ranks of human society.

In this country we are rapidly preparing for war (to defend ourselves is perhaps the better expression), arming ourselves with the most destructive means and implements that human ingenuity can devise. The amazing advances made in the discovery and implementation of the forces of nature are miraculous marvels of the modern world. These are due to the achievements of research scientists and ingenious inventors. What advances have we made in the realms of social science? The art of living agreeably with one another—our fellow men—the finest of all human arts, is still in its infancy.

THE GOLDEN RULE

How can the dangers threatening America, internally and externally, and all the world, for that matter, be overcome, and peace reign everywhere supreme? The answer is short; it is simple. Let every human being repent and live the Golden Rule. This means to keep the two great commandments. Then the threat of war would vanish, troubles would disappear; wickedness would cease, and righteousness prevail. There is not a sane person in all the world who can successfully controvert this truth. Then why do we not repent and let the Golden Rule govern our lives? Who has the answer? Mormonism has it; you have it; Satan has it, and he will not repent. And myriads of our fellow men will not repent either because Satan has them in his power. So peace will not come to the earth and be worldwide until Satan is bound. But the millennium is coming—the Lord has said it. But when it will come, no man knoweth, for neither the day nor the hour has yet been revealed.

However, brethren and sisters, it is your duty and mine, the duty of everyone who believes in God and his righteous purposes to try, try, try to bring the Golden Rule into our lives. This we can do measurably well with the Lord's help, that he will readily give to each of us if we worthily seek it.

Let me recite two actual occurrences relative to the Golden Rule. Years ago, the winter in Cache Valley was long, and an acute shortage of hay resulted. A Church official was told by his farm manager that they could spare several tons of hay and that the going price was fifteen dollars a ton. The manager was told to ask only eight dollars a ton, that being the reasonable cost of production. I told of this occurrence in the last October conference.

Another one: Years ago an eightroom house in Salt Lake City was sold on a monthly instalment plan. About two years later the purchaser said he would have to give up the contract, not being able, because of financial reverses, to continue it, and he was moving out into a three-room shack. The vendor asked the man to estimate the equity his two years' payments had made in the house, the vendor telling him that the excess payments would be gladly returned. The man insisted that his monthly payments had only been reasonable rent. He refused to accept any refunds. Notwithstanding the provisions of the contract to the contrary, both parties to the arrangement were actuated by the spirit of the Golden Rule.

NEED TO REPENT

I said we have several characteristic teachings and doctrines. To these we are converted, and we readily accept them. But to implement them in our lives is something else. We are human beings and have more or less inherited the weaknesses of the flesh among which are unworthiness, selfishness, and greed. Further, we are so enmeshed in worldly ways of doing things in the conduct of our businesses and ways of making a living, that we find the easiest way to get along is to do as the world does. In so doing we may grievously sin by departing more or less widely from the standards of the Golden Rule. To the extent that we do this, we need to repent.

What have selfishness and greed done? They have brought on all the major wars in history, resulting in the misery, suffering, and death of countless millions of human beings and the loss of billions of property dollars. They have brought wickedness, crime, debauchery, loss of freedom, and slavery to every part of the earth.

NEED OF THE HOUR

Because of the things I have mentioned and several others, this country is facing a very critical situation. What is the great need of the hour? The answer of course is, as I have already stated, repentance. And repentance is a call that has been made from this pulpit many, many times. Current threatening conditions are not likely to improve much unless more-or-less repentance takes place. And while complete repentance may not be expected until Satan is bound, there is one source of trouble that I think can be removed, and all lovers of America should demand its removal—the more-or-less continuous dispute between management and labor relative to wages, working conditions, etc. Lockouts, strikes, and mass picketing should be outlawed. In all disputes of the type indicated, the public has a vital interest which the law should protect. How can this be done? My answer is by compulsory arbitration. It is unlawful for individuals to settle their differences by fighting with fists, knives, or pistols. Courts are set up to which they may go for a peaceful settlement, and this, even though the public may have no interest in the settlement. But the public always has an interest in how labor-management disputes are settled. To settle peacefully such disputes on a basis of what is fair, right, and just to all concerned, can a better agency be found than a qualified, competent arbitration court?

Yes, the public should demand that such courts be set up.

As I see it, if wise, compulsory arbitration courts had always been functioning during the past dozen years or so, there would have been but little if any inflation. This country would have prospered to a greater degree than it has, and the outlook for America would be much brighter than it is today.

Brethren and sisters, we who have covenanted in the waters of baptism and at the sacrament table to keep God's commandments are in honor bound to be true to these obligations. I pray that with the Lord's help we may always have the desire, the strength and the courage to be true to our faith. This I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH FIELDING SMITH

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I feel humble, and also I feel the loss of our beloved President, just as you who are assembled here feel that loss. With the help of the Lord, I shall bear my testimony. I am very grateful to the Lord for the knowledge that I have of the truth of this divine work. I was baptized when I was eight years old. It was impressed upon me at that time that through baptism I had received the remission of sins and stood pure, clean, before the Lord. I had a sister who was very kind, as all my sisters were, who impressed upon my mind the need of keeping myself unspotted from the world. Her teachings to me the day I was baptized have stayed with me all the days of my life, and I honor her memory.

DIVINE MISSION OF PROPHET

I have a perfect knowledge of the divine mission of the Prophet Joseph Smith. There is no doubt in my mind that the Lord raised him up and gave him revelation, commandment, opened the heavens to him, and called upon him to stand at the head of this glorious dispensation. I am just as satisfied in my mind that in his youth when he went out to pray he beheld the actual presence, stood in the actual presence, of God the Father and his son, Jesus Christ; in my mind there is no doubt; I know this to be true. I know that he received later the visitations from Moroni, the Aaronic Priesthood under the hands of John the Baptist, the Melchizedek Priesthood under the hands of Peter, James, and John, and that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was organized on the sixth day of April 1830 by divine command. These things I know. The Lord has revealed them to me, and this knowledge I have had since the day I was baptized. I know that the power of the Almighty is guiding this people, that we are under covenant to keep his commandments, to walk in light and truth. It is my firm conviction that every member of this Church should be able to bear witness and declare by words of soberness that these things are true, that the Book of Mormon is true, that the revelations given to the Prophet Joseph Smith are true, that the destiny of this latter-day work is true, and, according to the revelations, must and will be fulfilled.

SECOND COMING

I believe that the coming of the Son of God is not far away, how far I do not know, but I do know that it is over one hundred years nearer than it was when Elijah the prophet came to the Prophet Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery in the Kirtland Temple on the third day of April, 1836. Elijah's words point to the fact that we are that much nearer. And this ancient prophet declared that by the restoration of those keys we should know that the great and dreadful day of the Lord is near, even at our doors. I have opened these scriptures to the seventh chapter of Matthew, and I want to read the seventh and eighth verses:

Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you:

For every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened. (Matt. 7:7-8.)

ALL MAY KNOW THE TRUTH

Is there any good reason why every living soul cannot know the truth and where it can be found? Is there any reason that any members of this Church can give why he does not know that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, that Joseph Smith was and is a prophet of God, and that this is his work? If we lack that understanding, we have no one to blame but ourselves. I had perfect confidence in the sayings of the Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ; and when he says, "Ask and it shall be given you; seek and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you: For everyone that asketh receiveth," I am just as sure that every member of this Church may know within himself or herself that God lives, Jesus Christ is the Son of God, and that this is his work which he has established. We have no excuse whatever for not knowing and having the absolute faith and confidence in this restored gospel of Jesus Christ. It is our duty to know. In a revelation given to the Church many years ago, that is, in the days of the Prophet, he warned the members of the Church against false prophets, false spirits, against those who lie in wait to deceive. He gave us a key then by which we may know, but I repeat, this key, given by our Savior in his Sermon on the Mount is just as true today as it was nearly two thousand years ago. It's his word and can be accepted, can be proved today just as well as it could by his disciples as he spoke to them in this Sermon on the Mount. In interviewing missionaries I frequently ask them, nearly always do, if they have a testimony of the truth. Some of them say, "No, I do not. I think it is true, but I do not know, but I have the assurance that if I go on this mission I will learn that it is true." Down in their hearts they give an honest answer, but I think they know better than they say. However, it is the right of every baptized member in this Church to know for himself by the revelations of the Spirit of the Lord that all that I have said in regard to the establishment of this work is absolutely true. There is no reason in the world why any soul should not know where to find the truth. If he will only humble himself and seek in the spirit of humility and faith, going to the Lord just as the Prophet Joseph Smith went to the Lord to find the truth, he will find it. There's no doubt about it. There is no reason in the world, if men would only harken to the whisperings of the Spirit of the Lord and seek as he would have them seek for the knowledge and understanding of the gospel of Jesus Christ, for them not to find it—no reason, except the hardness of their hearts and their love of the world. "Knock, and it shall be opened unto you." This is my testimony, I know it is true. I know that just as well as I know I stand here. The Lord has revealed it to me as he has to my brethren. The Lord bless you all, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER MARK E. PETERSEN
Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

When the Prophet Isaiah forecast the coming of the Savior, he said this:

He is despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief: and we hid as it were our faces from him; he was despised, and we esteemed him not.

All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way; and the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all. (Isaiah 53:3-6.)

DESPISED AND REJECTED

When the Savior came in the flesh and labored among men, this prophecy was literally fulfilled. He was despised and rejected of men. The people did turn their faces from him, and they did go their own way. They rejected him as they rejected his teachings, and it grieved him. One day as he stood in their capital city, he said,

O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!

Behold, your house is left unto you desolate. (Matt. 23:37-38.)

When the Lord used that one little expression, "ye would not," he described the stubbornness, the wilfulness, the selfishness, of a people who would not obey the divine truth, but who turned their faces from him, each one going his own way.

Oh, that stubbornness! If only they could have realized what it did to them.

When he first began his ministry, he healed their sick; he even raised their dead. He fed them by the thousands in a miraculous way. But when he asked them to keep his commandments, the crowds melted away. Those who followed him were there no longer. So great was that falling away that he asked his Twelve:

. . . Will ye also go away?

Then Simon Peter answered him, Lord, to whom shall we go? thou hast the words of eternal life.

And we believe and are sure that thou art that Christ, the Son of the living God. (John 6:67-69.)

But the people rejected him. In their blindness and in their stubbornness, as he offered to bless them and take them into his arms as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, they turned away. And in doing so, according to the words of the Savior himself, their house was left unto them desolate.

WILFULNESS OF MEN

As I have read that scripture from time to time, I have often wondered about its application to us who live today. I have often wondered whether the Lord cries out to us, disappointed at our disobedience, saying, "How oft would I have gathered you as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not." (See Matt. 23:37.) How many of us are stubborn? How many of us are selfish and wilful, and turn our faces from him, and would rather not obey him?

This sort of thing applies in various phases of our lives. It applies in our own homes, sometimes with our own children. Have you sons or daughters who are wilful and stubborn and selfish, and who turn their faces from you, you the loving parents who would take them into your arms and nurture them even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings? Do they reject you, these children in their wilfulness? Some of you have them, and you know how they break your hearts.

And then there are some in the Church who ought to know better, who have the commandments of God, but will not repent, but are wilful and stubborn. Even though the blessings of God are offered to them, they turn their faces, and each one goes in his own way. We reject God as we refuse to obey him. We must remember that faith without works is dead. There is no salvation except through the Lord Jesus Christ. He has said:

... I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me. . . .
 If ye love me, keep my commandments. . . .
 He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me . . .
 He that loveth me not keepeth not my sayings. (John 14:6, 15, 21, 24.)

OBSERVANCE OF COMMANDMENTS

You know whether you keep his sayings or not. Do you observe the Sabbath day? Do you uphold the Authorities of the Church? Do you pay a full and honest tithing? Do you fast on fast day and pay a proper fast offering? Are you honest? Do you pay your debts? Are you morally clean? Do you keep the Word of Wisdom? You know whether you keep these things or not. If you do not, contemplate your disobedience and remember that the Lord calls out to you and says, "How oft would I have gathered you as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not."

Sometimes in our communities we reject the Lord. Have you ever wondered about the community in which you live? Here in the state of Utah the Latter-day Saints are definitely in the majority. The Latter-day Saints have the commandments, and among them is the Word of Wisdom. Judging from our state records, do we accept the Word of Wisdom as God has given it to us? To what degree do we break the Word of Wisdom and thus reject the word of God

EXPENDITURES FOR LIQUOR AND TOBACCO

Ten years ago in the state of Utah, eleven million dollars was spent for alcoholic beverages and tobacco. In 1950 that figure was up three hundred percent. It reached nearly thirty-four million dollars. In 1948 the figure reached nearly thirty-five million dollars.

What will thirty-five million dollars buy? The last temple built by the Church was that at Idaho Falls. A temple like that could be built in forty-two states of the Union with the amount of money that is spent in the state of Utah in one year alone, for alcoholic beverages and tobacco.

The amount of money spent here each year for tobacco and alcoholic beverages is almost identical to the amount we spend in this state for education. In the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, $35,653,000.00 was spent for operating our school system and maintaining our school buildings in the state of Utah. Think of it! We spend as much in Utah for "booze" and tobacco as we spend for education! It is almost incredible.

The amount of money we spend each year in Utah for alcoholic beverages and tobacco is greater than the combined assessed valuation of the cities of Provo, Logan, and Brigham City.

The amount of money we spend in Utah every year for alcoholic beverages and tobacco is nearly twice as much as we spend for the construction and maintenance of our state highway system.

In Utah we spend one hundred times as much for liquor and tobacco as we contribute each year to the American Red Cross.

In Utah we spend two hundred times as much for alcoholic beverages and tobacco as we contribute to fight the dread disease of poliomyelitis.

About half of our state expenditure for alcoholic beverages and tobacco is spent right here in Salt Lake County. Do you know that in Salt Lake County we spend fifty times as much money every year for alcoholic beverages and tobacco as we pay into the Salt Lake Community Chest?

In view of all this, what do you think about the scripture that the Lord gives us: "How oft would I have gathered you as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not?"

CONDITION OF THE NATION

What about the nation? A century ago the Lord offered the American people a blessing if they would repent. In a revelation given over a hundred years ago, the Lord said concerning the American people:

... I will gather them as a hen gathereth her chickens, under her wings, if they will not harden their hearts;

Yea, if they will come, they may, and partake of the waters of life freely. (D. & C. 10:65-67.)

It is estimated that the total crime bill for the United States last year reached twenty billion dollars. According to the records of the F.B.I. last year, a serious crime was committed in the United States every eighteen seconds. In an average day last year, 301 persons were feloniously killed or assaulted; 146 robberies were committed; 1129 places were burglarized; 468 cars were stolen; 2861 thefts were committed.

The criminologists of the United States are of the opinion that in the last few years, a great moral depression has come to the United States.

J. Edgar Hoover, the head of the F.B.I., in speaking on March 26 of this year before a special committee to investigate organized crime, said this:

Those who engage in widespread vice activities and rackets could not long survive without their ally, the political renegade. No community in the land is contaminated by rackets and corruption without the assistance of local interests which hold law enforcement in restraint. Law enforcement officers are the people's representatives. They are not persons with unlimited power. They must obey those under whom they hold office. If they are dominated by criminal-aligned politicians, ruthless rackets and vice are inevitable.

To what extent does America obey the God of the land?

What about the world at large? In their blindness, the nations cry for peace but at the same time they reject the teachings of the Prince of Peace. The Lord spoke to the nations in a modern revelation and said this:

O, ye nations of the earth, how often would I have gathered you together as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, but ye would not! How oft have I called upon you by the mouth of my servants, and by the ministering of angels, and by mine own voice, and by the voice of thunderings, and by the voice of lightnings, and by the voice of tempests, and by the voice of earthquakes, and great hailstorms, and by the voice of famines and pestilences of every kind, and by the great sound of a trumpet, and by the voice of judgment, and by the voice of mercy all the day long, and by the voice of glory and honor and the riches of eternal life, and would have saved you with an everlasting salvation, but ye would not!

Behold the day has come, when the cup of the wrath of mine indignation is full. (D. & C. 43:24-26.)

POSITION OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS

Latter-day Saints, what is your position? Are you willing to hearken unto the Lord your God who cries out to you and would nurture you and gather you together even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings? The Lord said something to you also about this:

Listen to the voice of Jesus Christ, your Redeemer, the Great I Am, whose arm of mercy hath atoned for your sins;

Who will gather his people even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, even as many as will hearken to my voice and humble themselves before me, and call upon me in mighty prayer . . .

Friday, April 6

First Day

For the hour is nigh and the day soon at hand when the earth is ripe; and all the proud and they that do wickedly shall be as stubble; and I will burn them up, saith the Lord of Hosts, that wickedness shall not be upon the earth;

For the hour is nigh, and that which was spoken by mine apostles must be fulfilled; for as they spoke, so shall it come to pass;

For I will reveal myself from heaven with power and great glory, with all the hosts thereof, and dwell in righteousness with men on earth a thousand years, and the wicked shall not stand. (Ibid., 29:1-2, 9-11.)

I declare to you in all seriousness that I, too, know that God lives. I, too, know that George Albert Smith was a prophet of Almighty God. And I know that the man who will take his place is likewise a prophet and that he holds all the keys, powers, and authorities that were ever restored to the Prophet Joseph Smith in these last days.

When he takes up the reins of office here in this Church, he will preside by virtue of all the powers that were restored through angelic ministry in these the last days.

God will speak to you through him, and he will say to you: "How oft will I gather you as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, if ye will not harden your hearts." (Ibid. 10:65.)

May we humbly follow him and obey the Lord our God, I earnestly pray in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

Elder J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

We have just listened to Elder Mark E. Petersen of the Council of the Twelve.

As the closing song of this session the Brigham Young University combined choruses will sing, "The Lord Bless You and Keep You," conducted by Elder Crawford Gates.

The closing prayer will be offered by President E. Garrett Barlow of the Inglewood Stake, California.

After that the conference will stand adjourned until seven o'clock tomorrow evening when, in accordance with the general custom of the Church, a General Priesthood meeting of the Church will be held. Only those holding the priesthood are invited to be present. Persons not holding the priesthood will kindly refrain from attempting to enter the building. That session will not be broadcast.

The session at ten o'clock Sunday morning, will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City and, by arrangement through KSL, over the stations named in the first session of the conference. That session will also be televised over the KSL television station, channel five.

The Church of the Air broadcast, on which Elder Stephen L. Richards, of the Council of the Twelve, will be the speaker, will begin at 8:30 Sunday morning. Those desiring to attend this broadcast must be in their seats by 8:20 a.m.

The Tabernacle Choir Broadcast comes from 9:00 to 9:30 Sunday morning, immediately following the Church of the Air. As there is only a thirty second break between these two broadcasts, the doors will not be opened until the Tabernacle Choir Broadcast is over, at 9:30.

The regular session of the conference will begin at 10:00 a.m.

Tonight at seven o'clock, here in the Tabernacle, there will be a meeting of ward bishopricks and others, as listed in the published announcement, under the direction of the Presiding Bishopric.

Tomorrow, as you know and as has been announced in the press, the funeral for our beloved President, George Albert Smith, will be held. The services will begin in this tabernacle at 2:00 p.m. All are invited to attend. The body will lie in state in the Administration Building, 47 East South Temple Street, from 5:00 to 8:00 this afternoon and evening, and, as announced in the press, tomorrow forenoon.

The choir music for today has been furnished by the Brigham Young University combined choruses, under the direction of Elders Newell Weight, Crawford Gates, and Clawson Cannon, with Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ.

We would like to renew to this combined chorus our appreciation and our gratitude. They are a great chorus, as has been said today, and we pray that the blessings of the Lord will continue with them, with the institutions from which they come, and with those who lead and direct them.

At the conclusion of this meeting the general sessions of the conference will be adjourned until ten o'clock Sunday morning.

The combined choruses will now sing, as we announced, "The Lord Bless You and Keep You," conducted by Elder Crawford Gates, and the closing prayer will be offered by President E. Garrett Barlow of the Inglewood Stake, California.

---

The combined choruses sang, "The Lord Bless You and Keep You."

The closing prayer was offered by President E. Garrett Barlow of the Inglewood Stake.

Conference adjourned until 10:00 a.m. Sunday morning.

GENERAL PRIESTHOOD MEETING

The General Priesthood meeting of the Church convened in the Tabernacle at 7:00 p.m., Saturday, April 7, 1951.

President David O. McKay, President of the Council of the Twelve Apostles presided and at President McKay's request Elder J. Reuben Clark, Jr., of the Council of the Twelve Apostles conducted the meeting.

Elder J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

We will consider this just another session of the General Conference. Some of the brethren who are not accustomed to speaking on Priesthood night might get themselves in readiness.

The singing during this session will be by the Delta Phi (Returned Missionaries) Chorus from the Brigham Young University, Elder Ardean Watts, conductor, and Elder Roy M. Darley at the organ.

The opening song by the chorus will be: "See The Mighty Angel Flying."

---

Singing: "See The Mighty Angel Flying."

Opening prayer by President Vernal Willie of the North Box Elder Stake.

ELDER JOSEPH L. WIRTHLIN

First Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

I sincerely trust, my brethren, that I may have an interest in your faith and prayers. I feel keenly the responsibility in addressing this great body of the priesthood of the Lord Jesus Christ.

HOSPITALITY FOR WARD TEACHERS

Last night in our bishops' meeting, we discussed the great priesthood activity of ward teaching. There was one factor omitted that I should like to draw to your attention, and that is the manner of receiving the ward teachers in our homes. Reports have come to us that in many homes there is an attitude of indifference. Perhaps the radio is on, or the television, and the proper hospitality is not accorded the servants of the Lord.

We plead with you bishops, to admonish your people to receive these servants of God with kindness and consideration. I recall about two years ago of visiting the home of President J. Reuben Clark, and as I left, there was a humble man at the door. I heard the president say to him, "What can I do for you, my brother?" And he introduced himself as the ward teacher. I was deeply impressed by the degree of hospitality that a member of the First Presidency extended to this humble man. I wish that all of us could have the same attitude and feeling towards these men that are sent to us as representatives of the bishop; extending to them the highest degree of cordiality, call the family in, and hearken and listen to their instructions.

About a week ago I was asked this question: Are the general authorities assigned subjects to discuss in general conference? My answer was "No." The individual who was asking the question said, "It seems rather odd that in all of the general conferences there is a definite theme discussed by the general authorities." And so during this great conference I could not help but observe that after Brother Romney gave his wonderful address pointing out the dangers and the feeling of insecurity, almost every speaker following him talked on that particular subject. And that subject is on my mind tonight.

SECURITY THROUGH THE GOSPEL

The other day a sixteen-year-old boy was heard to make this declaration, "I wonder what kind of a tomorrow there will be for me. When I am eighteen or nineteen, no doubt I will be drafted into the armed forces, which will mean a service of at least two years, and if there is war, it may mean an indefinite period of service." "And after that, if I'm lucky enough to come out, I want to go on a mission, and have four years at college. By the time I've done all of these things, I'll be twenty-seven or twenty-eight years of age." He seemed to express a spirit of frustration. He was down-hearted and discouraged because of an uncertain future.

I believe that we can so instruct our youth that regardless of what events transpire in the world's history, there will be in their hearts a feeling of security, security given to them through a testimony of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. I'm sure that our youth will understand the gospel more fully if there is gospel instruction in the home, for has not the Lord declared:

And again, inasmuch as parents have children in Zion or in any of her stakes which are organized, and teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance, faith in Christ, the son of the living God, and of baptism, and of the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands when eight years old, the sin be upon the heads of the parents. For this shall be a law unto the inhabitants of Zion or in any of her stakes which are organized. And their children shall be baptized for the remission of their sins when eight years old and receive the laying on of hands. And they shall also teach their children to pray and to walk uprightly before the Lord.

INSTRUCTION OF CHILDREN

I wonder when a child is approaching the age of eight, whether or not the head of the family, the father, he who holds the Melchizedek Priesthood, calls his child to his side and gives him some instruction with reference to having faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, explaining to him what repentance means, the great significance of the baptismal ordinance, wherein having been baptized their sins are remitted, and the great significant fact that when they go into the waters of baptism, they are buried with the Christ in death, coming up out of the water is symbolical of His resurrection. I do not feel that these teachings are beyond the understanding of a child eight years old.

I am certain that a child of eight years of age will understand the significance of the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. If a child has been properly taught and has a proper concept of the Godhead, he will know that there is the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost in the Godhead. And this great spiritual being, called the Holy Ghost, can be so explained to a child that he will understand what the Holy Ghost is. And along with that, teach him that when the authorized servants of God lay their hands upon his head, that individual so laying his hands upon his head has the authority to do so—restored authority in these the last days. And through the imposition of hands and receiving the promise of the gift of the Holy Ghost, if that child is taught to live a sweet, clean life, the Holy Ghost will come and be his companion. I think he can understand that he will be led into the path of truth and light, that he will be blessed with a sense of perception which will give him the power to differentiate between that which is good and that which is evil. I think it would be an excellent practice to read to children the scripture wherein the Savior declared; found in John 14:16-17, including verse 26,

And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another comforter that he might abide with you forever, even the spirit of Truth, whom the world cannot receive because it seeketh him not, neither knoweth him. But ye know him, for he dwelleth with you and shall be in you, But the comforter which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, shall teach you all things and bring all things to your remembrance whatsoever I have said unto you.

If children who are about to be baptized receive these instructions, they will understand the significance of them, creating a desire to live so fine the Spirit of Truth will come into their souls, giving them the assurance, yes, more than that, the testimony that their Heavenly Father lives and that the boy of Nazareth was his son, the Redeemer of the world; and that a fourteen-year-old boy who went into the woods asking for divine guidance, was visited by the Father and the Son, his prayers were answered, and they, too, can have their prayers answered. The Holy Ghost will give them a blessing of security as to the future and the eternities, that regardless of what events transpire, they will understand that their Heavenly Father rules over all for good.

SIGNIFICANCE OF THE PRIESTHOOD

Then there comes the time when worthy young men at the age of twelve receive the priesthood of God. I do not know of anyone who is better qualified to sit down with his son than a father and explain to him the great significance of the priesthood. Define priesthood: Point out to him that when he receives the priesthood of God, there is bestowed upon him Godly power that gives him the right to represent the Lord and to function in certain assignments when called upon to do so by those in authority. If these important lessons with relationship to the priesthood were taught to our sons, these young men would have a higher regard and respect for the priesthood.

Think if you will of the wonderful relationship in the home, when a father holding the Melchizedek Priesthood instructs his son in the ways of the priesthood who holds the lower or the Aaronic Priesthood. The Aaronic Priesthood is an appendage to the Melchizedek or the higher priesthood, just as a son is an appendage to his father. I feel that if in our homes fathers will take the time to teach these young men what the priesthood means—its significance, its powers, what is expected of them who hold it, it will contribute to the feeling of security that youth is seeking for. If fathers and mothers invite their sons and daughters to attend Sacrament Meeting with them, the sacrament meeting will become such a sacred, such a solemn, and such an impressive meeting that young people would not miss it. Partaking of the emblems of the Last Supper should be a source of inspiration and comfort to them, and the obligations they make with the Lord.

Young people should always feel impressed with the fact that Joseph Smith actually saw the Father and the Son just as plainly as I can see you. It had to be so for the world to know what our Heavenly Father is like and that Jesus Christ is his son.

Then, too, if as fathers and mothers, we are carrying out the mandate of the Lord wherein he has given us instructions to teach our youth the gospel, please invite our youth to attend fast meeting, teaching them first the significance of the fast offering principle, that they abstain from two meals, giving the equivalent in cash to a member of the Aaronic Priesthood who comes to collect it for the bishop, impressing upon them that their contribution will be used for those who are in distress.

FIRST GREAT COMMANDMENT

All during this conference, and particularly during the funeral of President Smith today, the first and great commandment was referred to many times—first, to love the Lord our God with all our might, and secondly to love our neighbor as ourself. Teach the youth of Israel to love their neighbors as themselves, then they must do something for that neighbor. Teach them that whatever they contribute in fast offerings is expressing a real love for the widow, for the aged, and for the orphan. Love, after all, is something that creates and demands service. It isn't lip service, but service that goes for the benefit and the good of someone else. Teaching our children to observe the fast offering principle, contributing to those who are in need, inviting them to attend fast meeting with the promise that if they will stand and bear witness that God lives and his goodness unto them, God will reward them with a testimony. The spirit of testimony only comes through the gift and the power of the Holy Ghost, and if they desire to experience the power of the Holy Ghost, the place to go to have that experience is in the fast meeting.

I am sure there isn't a young man or young woman that bears testimony to the divine existence of God, but what they feel in their souls something that is far above themselves, and it is a gift, the gift of the Holy Ghost. Brigham Young declared that no man can testify only through the power and the gift of the Holy Ghost that Jesus is the Christ, so through observing the fast offering principle and attending fast meeting there will come to them spiritual rewards which will bud into a testimony.

IMPORTANCE OF PRAYER

The Lord has admonished us to teach our children to pray. If they're not introduced to the Lord in the family circle of prayer, they will not know him. And knowing him not, they will not have faith. So, one of the first and most important lessons in every Latter-day Saint home should be teaching our children to pray. I am convinced that every spirit that leaves the presence of God and comes into mortality has a spark of faith in its heart. Hence the responsibility devolves upon the parents to so teach the children that the gospel spark will burst into a flame of faith. Having faith through prayer and obedience they will understand the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, and let come what will, they will know that God lives, that he will be with them, bless them, and sustain them. And I know that any individual who has a testimony of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, as Brother Romney indicated yesterday, will have a feeling of security, will have a positive, affirmative feeling and not a negative one in spite of all the terrible events that are transpiring at this time.

If the young of Israel will live the gospel they will know what the old prophet Joel said would be a reality:

"And it shall come to pass afterward that I will pour out my spirit upon all flesh and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, your old men shall dream dreams and your young men shall see visions, and also upon the servants and upon the handmaidens in those days I will pour out my spirit."

And then again the Lord has said:

"Wherefore children shall grow up until they become old. Old men shall die but they shall not sleep in the dust, but they shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye."

PROMISES OF THE LORD

With a burning testimony in their hearts, there isn't any question but that the youth of Israel will accept the word of the Lord at its face value, and with the promises involved, why should they be downcast, or why should they ask the question, "Will there be a tomorrow?" There will be a tomorrow for them, not only tomorrows of mortality but tomorrows of eternity, where they will enjoy every blessing that the Lord has promised the faithful, the loyal, and the devoted. For has not the Lord declared:

"And in that day the enmity of man and the enmity of beasts, yea the enmity of all flesh shall cease from before my face."

For in the day when enmity between man and beast and between man and man ceases, we shall have eternal peace.

And after we have taught our youth the gospel principles and in turn they have obeyed them, might they well feel as Paul declared to Timothy in II Timothy 1:7,

"For God hath not given us the spirit of fear, but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind."

Paul declared to the Corinthians, in I Corinthians 16:13:

"Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit ye like men. Be strong."

And the strong people will be the Saints of God, who have lived his word, and kept his commandments. Finally, when these young people stand upon the heights of their tomorrow, as Joshua stood upon the heights of the promised land and looking upon it for the first time, may our young men hear that sweet, small voice which said to him:

"Only be thou strong and of good courage; be not afraid, neither be thou dismayed, for the Eternal One is with thee whithersoever thou goest."

And in response to that voice, they will declare:

I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord, over mountain or plain or sea,

I'll say what you want me to say, dear Lord
I'll be what you want me to be.

Fathers of Israel, teach your children the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ in their childhood, and when they are old they will not depart therefrom, and may the feeling of security and testimony come into their hearts in the place of fear and doubt knowing the Lord lives and this is his work, which I humbly ask will be the blessing of every young man and woman in Israel, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER RICHARD L. EVANS

Of the First Council of the Seventy

I had assumed a sort of immunity at this session of conference, and checked my briefcase and my thoughts in one of the outer rooms. With all respects to President Clark, it takes more than a rounding up of one's shoulders to give utterance before this congregation, and I ask for an interest in your faith and prayers as I face this responsibility.

RESTRICTED BY TIME'S LIMITATIONS

I heard some weeks ago someone ask one of the secretaries of one of the brethren—someone who apparently had tried repeatedly to make an appointment—"What it would require for a humble member of the Church to have an audience with the First Presidency." The only answer I could think of was "More time," which unfortunately we cannot extend or increase.

Also occasionally one hears someone say: "You haven't ever been out to our ward." When I heard this remark a few weeks ago, I made a mental note of how many Sabbaths it would take to visit all the wards in the Church, and it would require about thirty years of Sundays for any one of the brethren to go to all of the wards and independent branches now existent. But by the time they got around that first thirty years, there would probably be another thirty years of new wards waiting for them, considering the growth of the Church.

I made another mental calculation along this same line, prompted by this same question—"What would it require for a humble member of the Church to have an audience with the First Presidency?"—and multiplied the number of hours in a day by the number of days in the year, and the number of years in an average life expectancy (using the scriptural allotment of three score and ten) and found that in this life, if we are fortunate enough to live that long, we have only about six hundred thousand hours to do all that we have to do. But take from that approximately one-third for sleep, and then take another substantial slice for the years of our youth, for preparation, for going to and from, for waiting for late people and late appointments, and a good many other of the essentials, and it reduces itself down to a very limited time in total hours of life. With a Church of more than a million people, with a Church which is rapidly growing, it must become apparent, brethren, to all of us, how much more of the weight of responsibility must continually be carried back in the wards and the stakes, in the priesthood quorums, by the ward teachers, by all of the organized agencies of the Church which were set up for this very purpose and which, if functioning properly, would care for all these needs and would make fewer and fewer personal demands upon the time of the First Presidency and of the other brethren here at Church headquarters.

THE BASIS OF STRENGTH AND GROWTH

I know that these brethren, many of them, cannot extend the physical limits of their time. I know that President McKay's car, for example, is down in the parking lot behind the office at six or seven o'clock almost any morning. And I heard a request made of President Clark to attend an evening function not long ago, and heard him make the statement that he was working on the scriptures almost every night till midnight and after. And with the other brethren it is, in an approaching degree, at least, a similar situation.

With these fullest of days, full beyond filling them further, with many weighty decisions to be made, with many demands upon every hour of every day, and with time not being subject to extension, the answer is of course a great statement by the Prophet Joseph Smith, repeated by his successors, frequently quoted, and basically true: "Teach them correct principles and let them govern themselves." That's the basis of strength and growth in this Church and kingdom—provided we follow the correct principles. They are there; we have been taught them; the plan of operation is in the handbooks and elsewhere; the scriptures and the revelations are before us. And many of the decisions, I am sure, that we refer on up rather than take the responsibility of making them within the limits and scope of the offices we hold, we could readily avoid passing up, if we would prayerfully and earnestly follow the correct principles we have been taught and govern ourselves, each one according to his calling.

THE TIME TEST

About six hundred thousand hours of life, brethren, for him who lives three score and ten, minus the years of youth and of preparation, minus the hours of rest, minus many other things! I wouldn't be surprised if in a man's effective career, his actual disposable time might not come down to something more like two hundred thousand hours, or even less, when all these other things are considered—which means that we must be about our Father's business and give everything we do the time test. It means that there is no time for any shabby or shoddy thing. In all that we read, in the books with which we become familiar, which we make our companions, in the entertainment to which we devote our time, in all else that we do, we must give it the time test, and as we have been taught, we must acquaint ourselves with the correct principles and govern ourselves, and assume the responsibility of the offices and callings to which we have been called.

INDIVIDUAL RESPONSIBILITY

The Prophet Joseph Smith made an eloquent utterance on this question of free agency and of the assuming of responsibility. One hour of righteous freedom on earth, he said, is worth more than an eternity of bondage. The Lord has given us our agency and our individual responsibility. We have it in the Church and we have it in all that we do. May we go forward and use our agency in accordance with correct principles, and give all that we do the time test, and relieve the brethren over us as much as we can within the line of prescribed procedure, within the line of those things which we have been taught and those things which we read in scripture, I pray in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

Saturday, April 7

Priesthood Meeting

ELDER THORPE B. ISAACSON

Second Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

President Clark, President McKay, my other beloved brethren of the General Authorities, and my dear brethren of the priesthood, truly this is nearly breathtaking, and I feel very humble in standing here tonight. I am sure we didn't expect this tonight, and I will be grateful if I can have an interest in your faith and prayers.

Yes, this is very much a humbling experience. I wish all of you could have the experience I am now having of looking over this vast audience. I have prayed to the Lord that when I should be called to occupy this position that he should not leave me. I have prayed to him first because I believe in prayer and, second, because I know I need the blessings of the Lord. I confess to you that without those blessings and his sustaining help and influence that I am nothing.

PROPHETS OF GOD

Surely one's testimony is strengthened as he comes here and listens to the brethren, listens to the words of the Lord given to us by his servants, yes, by prophets, seers, and revelators of God, our Eternal Father. We often hear them referred to as prophets, but I am wondering, members of the Church and particularly holders of the priesthood, if we give serious thought to the full meaning of that term. I recognize them as prophets of God, I know you do, but there are times, perhaps, when we pass that thought by lightly. Do you feel toward these brethren, prophets of the Lord, as you would had you known the prophets of old? I want to bear my testimony to you that I know they are prophets of the living God, I know they are inspired of our Father in Heaven in their calling. I hope you will have the same feeling burning in your hearts and accept their teachings, because they are inspired of our Father in Heaven. If, as members of the Church and particularly the Priesthood, we could only have the faith and the assurance and the conviction that these brethren are prophets, seers, and revelators, I believe we would pay more attention to what they tell us. Yes, spirituality is as essential to a man's soul as vitamins are to his body.

ADULT MEMBERS OF AARONIC PRIESTHOOD

As I look into this great congregation tonight, I have been thinking of the adult members of the Aaronic Priesthood, many of them who have never been inside this building. If we could move this body of men from this building on out to the north and then fill it again and again with adult members of the Aaronic Priesthood in the Church, we could fill this building just as full as it is now, seven or eight times. You know, I'm one of those who believes the Lord loves these men. I believe their wives love them just as much as our wives love us, and their children love them as much as our children love us. If you had a wayward son, would you love him? Well, I only have one son, and I love him very much, and if he were a wayward son, I believe I would love him just the same. What makes you think that the Lord doesn't love his wayward sons?

NEED FOR GUIDANCE

Many of these men haven't the strength to get back into activity in the Church on their own power. Therefore, they do need your guidance, your encouragement and your patience; yes, I'd say they need you. They need someone to call on them, someone to come and see them, someone to encourage them and help them forsake those things that are keeping them out of the Church. The Lord has asked us to repent, he has asked all of us to repent, and then he said; If you truly repent and come unto me, and forsake those things that you're doing, or that you have done that you shouldn't have done, I will forgive you and remember them no more. But he wants us to truly repent. I believe these men would love that privilege. Well, you may say, they have the privilege. Why don't they take it? Well, they haven't the strength yet; until they can absorb some of the teachings of the Church and of the gospel of Jesus Christ, which they haven't had for a long time. They have perhaps become spiritually weak, because of habits that have kept them from church activity or for other reasons. They're not strong enough yet to put those things aside. And then you must remember that many of these boys and men have not been taught in their homes. As Bishop Wirthlin told us, they were not taught their many duties when they were young. I believe there are many fathers in the Church today, although I think they're not justified, that are leaving the teachings of their sons to you brethren entirely. If you fail, where are they going to get those teachings? Many adult members of the Aaronic Priesthood, after they come back into activity, are so delighted and so anxious that they put a great deal of enthusiasm in their work.

I talked to a brother, who is now a bishop but who was an adult member of the Aaronic Priesthood five or six years ago. I couldn't help but recognize the joy and the happiness that has come into that man's soul. I talked to his wife. She didn't have the ability nor the words to tell me how grateful they were. Yes, sometimes I think they're perhaps more grateful than some of the rest of us, after the spirit has touched their souls and they've accepted it.

WORKERS NEEDED

Someone has said, "He who knows books knows much, he who knows nature knows more, but he who knows God has reached the goal of human wisdom." Many of these men are brilliant men, in their own right, successful men in their own business, and they do know books, but they have perhaps neglected their knowledge of God. As leaders, I hope that you make yourselves acquainted with these thousands of adult members. It's too big a load for just two or three in each ward, or a dozen or so in each stake. There are many stakes in the Church that have four or five or six hundred, and some stakes with even seven or eight hundred adult members of the Aaronic Priesthood. Do you know how many men could be called to work with a group like that, a group of five or six hundred men? You can't preach to these men in Sacrament meetings, because they're not there. You don't get them into your priesthood quorum meetings because they don't come out. Therefore we must put the shotgun method away. We must now have individual contact and use the rifle method where we can go in and teach those men the principles of the gospel, the teachings that you and I were fortunate and blessed enough to have in our lives, but which many of them, not of their own fault, have been denied.

Oh, I hope that you'll somehow or other organize yourselves that you'll be able to touch at least one man. The Lord has said to us, "And if it so be that you should labor all your days in crying repentance unto this people, and bring, save it be one soul unto me, how great shall be your joy with him in the kingdom of my Father! And now, if your joy will be great with one soul that you have brought unto me into the kingdom of my Father, how great will be your joy if you should bring many souls unto me!"

FATHERS AND SONS

Now fathers, how close are you staying to your own sons, so that the group of adult members will not be increased? Do you fathers have close relationship with your own sons? Can your sons come to you and tell you all about their problems? Oh, I feel sorry for a boy that can't go to his dad and tell him all about his mistakes, all about his sorrows, and all about his problems. I think that that kind of relationship, in not being able to become close to a father, can only tend to bring that boy, perhaps, more delinquent than ever. I know boys will make mistakes, but oh, I feel that if they can go to their dads and talk over those mistakes with them, that those boys will be stronger and will not repeat their mistakes too many times, if they can come to their dads. Do you dare to go to bed at nights and not know where your sons are? Do you know whom they're with, or where they are, or do you know when they're coming home?

Awhile ago I was at a dinner party one night, and about eleven or eleven-thirty, the telephone rang and one of the men was called to the phone. We couldn't hear the conversation on both sides, but we could hear what he had to say. When he took his seat his wife said to him, "who was that calling?" He said, "Well that was our son John. He just called to tell us that he wouldn't be home at twelve o'clock." He told his father he was going to a waffle dinner after the show or the dance, I don't recall which it was, but he called to tell his father that he wouldn't be home until twelve-thirty or one o'clock. I turned to that man and said, "How old is your boy?" I thought he was a youngster calling up. He said, "He's twenty-three years old." I thought, what a marvelous relationship, what a marvelous thing that this boy would take the time and make the effort to call his father at a party to tell him that he would be a little later than usual.

Only that father said, "We can go home now tonight, and we don't need to worry about our children. They're going to be home at a certain time, or they're going to call us." Well, there isn't anything wrong in that kind of discipline. It isn't because it's strict discipline, it's because there is an understanding between father and son.

CLOSE RELATIONSHIP

And then, fathers, do your boys, at night, when they do come home, come into your bedroom and kiss you goodnight? Sometimes we have encouraged our daughters to do that with our wives, their mothers, but we fathers perhaps have not practised that with our own sons. What's wrong with a son coming into his dad's bedroom at night and sitting on the side of his bed and telling him how he liked his girl, or how the party was, or how they got along tonight. Don't you think if a boy will do that, don't you think he'll go into his own bedroom and kneel down and say his prayer after he has said goodnight to his dad? Don't you think if he is that close to his dad, that he can pour his heart out to you after he sometimes stubs his toe or makes a mistake? I don't like to see any boy or for that matter any man, live with his mistakes, because I think it eats the best out of him that is in him. Oh, I hope he can go to his father and tell his father about his problems, and about his mistakes and about his sorrows. There is no reason, fathers, why we can't be that close to our sons. Does your boy kiss you goodnight? Does your boy kiss you when you leave in the day, or when you leave for a trip? Or have we left that to our wives and our daughters? I'll confess that I was guilty of that for years, but I'm happy, so happy somehow or other that I've changed that in my own life. I'm glad that I can kiss my boy when he comes around me. I'm glad I can kiss him when I leave; I'm glad I can kiss him when I return. I don't want to be denied that beautiful blessing. I recommend to you fathers that you start living a little closer to your sons, that you love them, that you are not so strict with them that they can't come to you with anything.

Saturday, April 7Priesthood Meeting

Well, brothers, I didn't intend to say those things to you. May the Lord bless you that you may try and stay close to your sons, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Delta Phi Returned Missionary Chorus of the Brigham Young University joined the congregation in singing the hymn, "Now Let Us Rejoice," Richard P. Condie, Assistant Director of the Tabernacle Choir conducting.

ELDER J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My brethren: It is again a great opportunity to face you and to try to speak to you for a few moments. You who bear the priesthood of God, there is in you, and the rest of us who bear this priesthood, the greatest power and force that there is in the world. That power and that force when understood and exercised, involves the control of all the elements that go to make up the universe; compared to that power and that control the H-bomb is a mere tiny firecracker.

GUIDING PRINCIPLES

There are certain great principles that underlie our existence here on this planet and that are to be guiding principles for us. First there is the great principle of free agency given to us before the world was. Because of the exercise of that free agency, Satan rebelled and has since fought from the day of the great council in heaven until now, the plan of life and salvation that was submitted by the Son and adopted by the Father. The principle of free agency is fundamental to all of our freedom and all of our living.

One of the first commandments given to Adam relating to mortal life, perhaps the first that we have record of, was to multiply and replenish the earth. And behind that great principle and that commandment lies the eternity of the marriage covenant, the creation of bodies to tabernacle spirits that our Heavenly Father created, and to bring them to this earth so that they might have mortal bodies, live according to the commandments of God, that they might in their next estate begin and go on through all the eternities in eternal progression.

Another great principle to which I would like to call your attention is the command given to Adam when he left the Garden of Eden: "By the sweat of thy face thou shalt eat bread." This is the great law of work, and the Lord has given us no greater blessing, given us no commandment that will be more helpful in carrying out his plan than this law of work. In addition to that, he gave us the gospel which has been with us since the days of Adam, in one form or another.

CONDITIONS IN THE WORLD

Now, my brethren, I wish merely to invite your attention to what is going on in the world today. The principle of free agency has been virtually blotted out among 140 or 150 millions of people, and that virus, the destruction of free agency, has been scattered over the world as if by the wind until today it affects us here in increasingly growing proportions. Our agency is being destroyed, and when it is gone then will your freedom to worship, your freedom to believe what you wish to believe, your freedom to build your own lives, your freedom to teach your children, this and all other freedoms, will go with it.

The commandment to multiply and replenish the earth is being defeated by those ideologies which are destroying the liberties of the peoples of the world because they are breaking down the marriage relationship. They are encouraging illicit relations; they are taking over the children and instructing them to that import. They are teaching children only what they want them to know for their own purposes.

Labor, we already know enough about that, even in this country—less work more pay, less work more pay, less work more pay. Men should have, the Lord intends they should have, a proper return for their labor, but the Lord does not countenance in any way my stealing from my neighbor, whether I go out and steal a horse from his barn or whether I, instead of working, loaf down in the field where my employer can not see me.

And the gospel, the standards of the gospel,—well, take up any national magazine, look at the ads and, if you can stand the filth, read some of the stories—they are, in their expressed and suggestive standards of life, destructive of the very foundations of our society. Hardly an advertisement, that is an exaggeration, but many advertisements carry illustrations that are intended to suggest and do suggest illicit sexual relations.

WORK OF THE DEVIL

All of this, brethren, if you consider it, and I am only suggesting, falls into one pattern. It is the pattern of one great mind, a near divine intellect. It is the work of the devil. He is back where he was at the time of the great council in Heaven when he would have taken away the free agency of men, save them in their sins, indeed there would have been no sin; thus under his plan there would have been no development, under his plan eternal progression would have been ruled out. We would have become mere automatons, living and breathing, and eating if we could get something to eat, and breeding like animals. What are we going to do about it, brethren? I say to you again, that the power of the priesthood which we hold can conquer all of this, but we can not do it as individuals working alone.

Saturday, April 7Priesthood Meeting

POWER TO SAVE THE WORLD

And so I come back to my theme song in all of these meetings: We must have unity. We must work together. We must submerge our individual likes and dislikes. We must follow the plan that has been made and given to us. And if we do, then the body of the priesthood of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints can work, not only miracles, but can revolutionize the world. Unity cannot be manifest nor exercised by fault finding, back biting, complaining about those in authority over us, substituting our ways for the ways which are given to us by those who are our leaders, finding this excuse and that excuse for not doing what we are asked to do. Now, brethren, I appeal to you as earnestly as I know how, and again I urge the same appeal I have made here, conference after conference, for eighteen years. Be united, united in our wards, united in our quorums, united in our stakes. Support the men wholeheartedly, fully, unequivocally, unhesitatingly for whom we hold up our hands and vote at our various conferences. And if we do not do this, then what right have we to ask the Lord to bless us.

Now I know, brethren, I am talking to people who do most if not all of these things, and when I speak as I do, I do not intend to speak complainingly. I am only trying to point out the condition of this world as it seems to me, and I am trying to tell you what I know as well as I know that I live, that the power which we have if we would merely magnify our priesthood, will save the world. May God give us the strength so to do I humbly pray in the name of Jesus, Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Though Brother Clark felt a little irked when his assigned duty to direct was slightly modified, he has set a good example to us all. He did as he was told.

There are in attendance tonight, as reported, a total of 15,050 members of the Priesthood—10,250 in seats, aisles, and doorways of the Tabernacle; 300 in the Baptistery; 2,200 in the Assembly Hall; 1,000 in the Barratt Hall, and an estimated 1,300 on the grounds.

Six months ago, we were blessed with the presence of our beloved President, George Albert Smith. Tonight we are deprived of his earthly companionship. How uncertain life is. The silent, inaudible foot of time is marching on bringing each of us nearer and nearer to the end of our earthly careers. Before his passing there were a few items scheduled for presentation at this priesthood meeting, and I shall just mention them briefly before making a few concluding remarks.

MISSIONARY RECOMMENDATIONS

One relates to the interviewing of prospective missionaries by bishops. Will you please be more careful about recommending men about whose health may be a question. Missionary work is strenuous when it is done properly, and we do not like missionaries to go out and not do it properly. If there is any question about their health, please sit down and have a talk with them and tell them that their services here in the home missions will be just as acceptable to the Lord as their labors out in a foreign mission. The Lord would like them to live and serve. Do not put them under an environment that will probably aggravate some physical weakness. It is surprising how eagerly the young women and some married women seek calls to go on missions. We commend them for it, but the responsibility of proclaiming the gospel of Jesus Christ rests upon the priesthood of the Church. It is quite possible now, in view of the present emergency, that we shall have to return to the standard age for young women, which is twenty-three. The last few months we have been calling young women twenty-one years of age when they have special qualifications. Bishops and presidents of stakes will please bear in mind that from now on they should not recommend young women under the age of twenty-three. That is merely returning to the standard already approved by the brethren. Now, that does not mean that the young girls who have already received calls or whom you have already interviewed who are only twenty-one may not have their recommendations completed. In this connection, we advise that mothers who have dependent children, that means children who are in their teens or under or unmarried, should not be called on missions even though the grandparents are willing to take care of the children. No nobler work in this world can be performed by any mother than to rear and love the children with whom God has blessed her. That is her duty, and that is far greater than going out into the world to proclaim the gospel, because somebody else can do that who does not bear the responsibility of rearing and loving the children who call her mother.

TEMPLE WORKERS

Last evening we held a long meeting with temple presidents and out of that meeting comes this recommendation, and there are strong reasons back of it, brethren! Will the bishops please take more care in recommending members to do temple work, to perform temple ordinances. Now the great majority of those who are going through the temple are worthy, and it is a glorious work. But if one or two unworthy get into the company and make some objectionable remark or leave an objectionable sign somewhere it tends to retard the spirit and to discourage some young man or young woman who came anticipating a glorious spiritual feast.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS

Next, it has already been recommended that Sunday Schools be not dismissed on quarterly conference day. If the conference is held in the ward house, of necessity, Sunday School will have to be adjourned, but that is the only exception. The reason for that will be readily seen if I read you the following letter without giving the name.

Saturday, April 7Priesthood Meeting

"Last Sunday I was in X town visiting my son. Feeling that I should like to visit a Sunday School in X town on Easter, I drove there. Calling at the home of a friend I was informed that stake conference was being held and that Sunday School had been cancelled. I informed the lady of the house that Sunday Schools are conducted on conference Sundays. She then called one of the Sunday School teachers and was given definite assurance that no Sunday School service would be conducted in that ward. Three women in the vicinity dressed their little girls in their Easter outfits and sent them to the Community Church."

INSPIRATION OF PRIESTHOOD MEETING

Now, just a few concluding remarks: One of our business men, non-member, who attended the funeral this afternoon, looked over the audience and said, "Look at that audience. It cannot be duplicated anywhere else in the world." I wish it were possible for him to see this audience tonight. Ten thousand men who hold the priesthood of God. What an inspiration! What an opportunity is ours to succeed in life!

Bishop Wirthlin referred to some who are discouraged. We have heard from Bishop Richards also, and others, young men now being called into the field and into the armed forces, so many young women without close companionship of young men of their age, some entered in their school and missions are discouraged. But let me just give two suggestions that will lead to success in any boy's life or any woman's life, will lead to the success of any person in the world, and particularly those who hold the priesthood.

ATTENDANCE TO DUTY

The first is, attend to the immediate duty in hand. No person living in this Church can say he or she has not an immediate duty. It may be attendance at a priesthood meeting; the Aaronic Priesthood or Melchizedek. It may be fasting on the first Sunday and giving fast offerings for the poor. Do not say those are insignificant duties; it may be the duty of attending worship on the Sabbath day, either in Sunday School, Priesthood meeting or Sacrament meeting or Mutual at night; it may be visiting a sick neighbor; or it is the payment of tithing. Whatever the immediate duty, perform it. That is the first step.

Outside of the Church you have a problem before you in your business or in social or political circles. Before you take that step ahead, ask yourself whether you can justify taking it if you were called into the presence of your Father in Heaven. If you can, take it. One of our American writers, some do not call him a poet, expressed this thought very impressively:

Who does his task from day to day,
And meets whatever comes his way
Believing God has willed it so
Has found true greatness here below.
Who guards his post no matter where
Believing God must need him there,
Although but lowly toil it be
Has risen to nobility.
For great and low there's but one test,
'Tis that each one will do his best.
Who works with all the strength he can
Shall never die in debt to man.

LOVE FOR FELLOWMEN

The second great guide to success has been illustrated during the last week particularly, or last few days, more impressibly right in our midst than perhaps we have ever seen it before and it may be a long time before we see it again. It is the power of the greatest thing in all the world—love for fellow men. The poet Browning who has Paracelsus say to his friend Festus, "There was a time when I was happy; the secret of life was in that happiness."

"When, when was that?" asked Festus. "All I hope that answer will decide."

Paracelsus: "When, but the time I vowed myself to man?"

Festus: "Great God, thy judgments are unscrutable."

And then Paracelsus concluded: "The answer to the passionate longings of the human heart for fulness is this: Live in all things outside yourself by love and you will have joy. That is the life of God; it ought to be our life. In him it is accomplished and perfect; but in all created things it is a lesson learned slowly and through difficulty."

I will conclude that thought by reading to you that wonderful statement of Paul on love. "... charity is the pure love of Christ, and it endureth forever." (Moroni 7:47) Love suffereth long and is kind. Love envyeth not, love vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil, rejoiceth not in iniquity but rejoiceth in the truth, beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things. Love never fails."

God help us to exemplify in our lives that love which was so well exemplified, ideally exemplified, in the life of our beloved leader, President George Albert Smith, who sought to approach the love of Christ, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Delta Phi Returned Missionary Chorus of the Brigham Young University sang the hymn, "Come Dearest Lord."

President Albert I. Morgan, President of the Spokane Stake offered the closing prayer.

SECOND DAY

MORNING MEETING

Sunday, April 8, 1951.

Columbia Broadcasting Company's Church of the Air was presented at 8:30 a.m.

The Tabernacle Choir and Organ Broadcast followed immediately thereafter at 9:00, continuing until 9:30, and the regular session of the Conference commenced promptly at 10:00 a.m.

The great tabernacle was filled to capacity long before the time of commencing the Church of the Air program. The Assembly Hall on the Tabernacle grounds was also filled with people, and many others who could not find accommodations in the Tabernacle assembled in the Barratt Hall (60 North Main Street), and on the Tabernacle grounds.

The Church of the Air program was as follows:

CHURCH OF THE AIR

The Tabernacle Choir, under the direction of J. Spencer Cornwall, furnished the music for this service, with Frank W. Asper at the organ. Richard L. Evans was the announcer.

Music: Organ and humming choir: "Sweet is the Work."

Announcer: The Church of the Air is presented by CBS so that men of different faiths may bring their messages to a nationwide congregation of worshippers. Today's service comes to you from the Tabernacle on Temple Square, through the facilities of Station KSL in Salt Lake City. The speaker will be Stephen L Richards, a member of the Council of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The title of Brother Richards' talk is: Kinship of Spirits. Music is provided by the Tabernacle Choir under the direction of J. Spencer Cornwall, with Frank W. Asper at the organ.

The service opens with a sacred song by Arkhangelsky, with words from the Psalms: "Hear My Supplication, O Lord."

(Choir: "Hear My Supplication"—Arkhangelsky.)

Announcer: We now hear a hymn of man's eternal march, with the words of Eliza R. Snow and the music of James McGrath, as arranged by Evan Stephens. It looks back to a time now closed to the memory of man and forward to an eternal future, and asks with earnest searching: "In Thy holy habitation did my spirit once reside? In my first primeval childhood was I nurtured near Thy side?"—Richard P. Condie and the Tabernacle Choir sing "O My Father."

(Choir: "O My Father"—arr. Stephens)

Announcer: We shall now hear on this Church of the Air service, Stephen L Richards, a member of the Council of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. In addition to his service as a religious leader, Stephen L Richards has distinguished himself as a lawyer, business administrator and educator. He has titled today's talk: Kinship of Spirits.

ELDER STEPHEN L RICHARDS

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

The responsibility which comes to one who is invited to participate on Columbia's "Church of the Air" program is very considerable. This occasion is projected as a period of worship—an invitation to the whole nation, who will listen in, to pause in secular pursuits and contemplate the ways of God. To stimulate such spiritual reflection is a task I approach with the deepest humility for I am aware of the fact that it is the spirit in man, rather than the mind, which must be touched to bring divine worship into his soul.

ESSENCE OF WORSHIP

If you and I, my friends, were together in an assembly—not too large, the task would be easier. Our personalities would react on each other; we would say, "We could feel of each other's spirit," and perhaps a bond of common interest could be established among us. May it not be that this "feeling of each other's spirit" is of the very essence of our joint worship?

It is true that declaration of the Word and exhortation have their place,—an important place in religious services, but I doubt if there is anything which contributes more to our spiritual uplift, and our good resolutions too, than the stimulus of association of kindred spirits.

I believe God planned that it should be so. We are all His spirit children in antemortal life. We come to earth "to be tabernacled in the flesh." In earth life we are, in large measure, the creatures of our environment, but we never entirely lose our spiritual investitures. Perhaps Shakespeare had something of this in mind when he made one of his famous characters say, "There is a divinity that shapes our ends, rough hew them how we will."<sup>1</sup>

KINSHIP OF SPIRITS

We are told that the Spirit of God always strives with men, and it is the spirit in man which responds to the extent to which the sensitivity of the spirit has not been drugged or killed by ignorance or by infraction of His laws. It is doubtful, my brethren and sisters in the family of our Eternal Parent, that anything is more important and vital to peaceful association in the world than a recognition and acceptance of this kinship in the spirits of men.

Herein lies a solid, understandable foundation for the spiritual brotherhood of the world. It has always seemed to me most difficult to establish fraternity without paternity. Surely those who acknowledge the Omnipotent God to be the Creator of the Universe, should find no difficulty in according to Him His place of distinction as the Father of all men—"Our Father who is in heaven." How else could He be "Our Father" except as the progenitor of our spirits, the begetter of that part of us which is deathless and immortal?

How regrettable it is that man, seemingly oblivious to this honorable and sacred relationship, should profane His holy name and blaspheme Christ. Do you think that a son can damn his father and love him?

FATHERHOOD OF GOD

Some may say this procreation of spirits is too realistic, involving an assumption of personality in the Father inconsonant with the ethereal nature sometimes ascribed to Him. Don't you think, my friends, that we can safely rely on the recorded words of His Son, our elder brother, and the prophets in the interpretation of this all-important relationship of man to God? To those acquainted with the Scriptures there is no need for quotations; they are filled with references to the veritable fatherhood of God and support for a divine personality which, in terms of human understanding, can be conceived only as one in whose image we are created.

It is doubtful if there are any people in the world today who retard more seriously the progress of humanity in finding solutions for the world's problems, particularly the one of living together in peace, than those who deny and teach denial of the personality of God and His fatherhood of the spirits of men.

By so doing, they rob brotherhood of its firmest prop, they rob man of the dignity of a noble lineage, and they take from him the most impelling incentives to live to be worthy of his inheritance and to come back again into the eternal presence of the author of his life. I do not see how it is possible for men of religion to do much for this sorry world unless they can establish and re-establish this fundamental doctrine of the veritable fatherhood of God.

SOVEREIGNTY OF SAVIOR

I grant that good may come, and does come, from teaching and extolling the attributes of Deity, and particularly the virtues emanating from the life and ministry of the Savior of the world. His incomparable teachings to be most effective, must be authentic. We cannot consistently worship at the shrine of the attributes and deny the sovereignty of the King. The Lord is a teacher, a persuader, and a guardian; but He is first of all a creator and a lawgiver, and the Supreme Judge of all. He is not only the exemplar of right; He is the author and the source of right. There is no right that is not compatible with His law and His will. To know His mind and His will should be the quest of every life.

SPIRITUAL NATURES

It is ordained that man should have joy. Joy and happiness are truly achieved where living conforms to law,—divine law. Divine law is spiritual in origin and application; its constraints and rewards are likewise of a spiritual nature. That is why, if we are to have joyful living, we should be ever conscious of our spiritual natures and our lineage with the Father.

We keep alive this consciousness in prayer and spiritual exercise. Spiritual association is of immeasurable value in spiritual growth. Not infrequently you hear a man say, "I don't need to go to church. I can worship in nature and in the works of creation."

Such a man discounts the value of religious association, the commingling of spirits and the interaction of personalities. I believe that man has divine attributes emanating from divine lineage. The Spirit of the Father is distributed through the Universe, and influences all life and all things.

There is a spirit in man which, within the limitations of his contacts in life, radiates from him and touches the lives and things about him. This spirit may be called personality. Whatever it is called, it exists and it is a potent force. When once set in motion it cannot well be controlled, but fortunately it is within our power to determine the characteristics which go into the structure of our lives and thus determine the influences and radiations which come from us. Our living will mold these characteristics into our lives.

I am well aware that these are commonplace statements. There is no novelty in them. Where, my friends, is there novelty in the Word of God? The only place I have been able to discover any failure in the Word is in the novelty of man's interpretations. The Word of God is not difficult to understand. It is the words of men about God that perplex us.

RESPECT FOR DIVINE LAW

The greatest of all knowledge is to know God, and the greatest achievement of all life is to so live that the Father can bestow His highest blessings on us. The spiritual laws of the Universe are just as inexorable as are the laws of Nature. Every blessing is predicated on obedience to the law.

This applies to a nation as well as to an individual. There can be no spiritual growth in a nation which does not respect divine law, and all nations will die without spiritual growth. Material prosperity alone will not suffice and will not endure. The measure and manifestation of spiritual growth is goodness. So, my good friends, the worship of this hour, and all true worship, is rededication of self and life to goodness.

We all know how much the world needs that dedication today, but I know of no way of carrying forth the process of spiritual regeneration except that which seems a painfully slow method of each person touching the spirit of another with the radiation of his own innate goodness. The only thing that our country has to fear is spiritual disintegration within ourselves.

ABSENCE OF SPIRITUAL KINSHIP

I had a striking example of the absence of and the need for the recognition of spiritual kinship in man a few months ago as I traveled through the countries of Lebanon, Syria, and Trans Jordan to Arab Jerusalem. I have never seen before, except perhaps in East Berlin, such suspicion, distrust, and enmity written on the faces of men. To an American accustomed to cordial greetings and friendly smiling faces, although sometimes a bit clouded with aloofness and pretended snobbish indifference (I say pretended because I believe that at heart all Americans are friendly and cordial), it was a distinct shock to see human nature so perverted in the relations which men in the Lord's providence bear to each other.

This perversion was particularly noticeable and regrettable in Jerusalem, the very land where the Savior spent much of His earthly life and performed His transcendent mission. The intense and cruel animosities built up between the peoples of this so-called Holy Land were a most painful refutation of everything that was taught and practiced by the Prince of Peace. I could not discover even a vestige of adherence to His marvelous doctrine which He left with His disciples in that loving declaration, "Except ye are one ye are not mine."

REMEDY FOR SICK WORLD

Do you think, my friends, that such a sickly spiritual world can be cured by the mere external application of economic salves? I know we all wish and pray that the underprivileged and distressed peoples of the world might have food, raiment, and shelter; and I believe that most of us are willing to sacrifice to that end.

I saw the dire need for relief in the terrible conditions prevailing in the camps of Palestinian refugees around the big cities of the Near East, but I am just as sure as that I speak to you this day that there is one, and only one remedy which can bring complete recovery—and that remedy is of the spirit. I give first place in such remedy to the teachings of the Lord, some of which I have tried, very inadequately, to outline for you today.

The Lord keep us humble, free from arrogance and self-sufficiency. May we never forget that He is the Father of our spirits, that our lineage is noble, that life is not cheap, and that the kinship of spirits is the foundation of brotherhood. We long for peace; we pray for the enduring peace of goodness in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

(Choir: "Come, O Thou King of Kings" by Parley P. Pratt, arr. Cornwall, 2 verses.)

Announcer: We have heard the Tabernacle Choir recall a hymn of a promised time, of brotherhood and peace, "Come, O Thou King of Kings, We've waited long for Thee."

And now the Choir closes this service with an anthem by Tertius Noble: "Souls of the Righteous in the hand of God."

(Choir: "Souls of the Righteous"—Noble)

Theme: Organ and humming choir: "Sweet is the Work."

Announcer: You have been attending Columbia's Church of the Air, coming to you from the Tabernacle on Temple Square, through the facilities of Station KSL in Salt Lake City, Utah. The speaker was Stephen L Richards, lawyer, and religious leader, who is a member of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Music for the broadcast was provided by the Tabernacle Choir under the direction of J. Spencer Cornwall. Frank W. Asper was at the organ.

CHOIR AND ORGAN BROADCAST

Immediately following the conclusion of the Church of the Air broadcast, the Tabernacle Choir and Organ presented the regular Sunday morning broadcast from 9:00 to 9:30 A.M.

This broadcast, which was presented through the courtesy and facilities of the Columbia Broadcasting System's coast-to-coast network throughout the United States, was written and announced by Richard L. Evans and originated with Station KSL, Salt Lake City. The program was as follows:

(Organ began playing "As the Dew," and on signal the organ and choir commenced singing the hymn, "Gently Raise the Sacred Strain," singing the words to the end of the second line, and humming to end of the verse for announcer's background.)

Announcer: Once more we welcome you within these walls with music and the spoken word from the Crossroads of the West.

The Columbia Broadcasting System and its affiliated stations bring you at this hour another presentation from Temple Square in Salt Lake City, with J. Spencer Cornwall conducting the Tabernacle Choir, Frank Asper, Tabernacle Organist, and the spoken word by Richard Evans.

We open with a worshipful chorus from the writings of Randall Thompson: "Alleluia."

(Choir: "Alleluia"—Thompson)

Announcer: From among some fifty Psalm settings by Benedetto Marcello, Frank Asper selects an exalted theme: "The Heavens Declare the Glory of God, and the firmament sheweth His handiwork."

Sunday, April 8Second Day

(Organ: "The Heavens Declare"—Marcello)

Announcer: The Tabernacle Choir turns now on Temple Square to one of the characteristic choral expressions of the eminent Australian composer, Cyril Jenkins: "Out of the Silence wake me a song, wake me a hymn whose sounds are like shadows soft and dim."—"Out of the Silence."

(Choir: "Out of the Silence"—Jenkins)

Announcer: From the quiet color of the closing day, Charles A. Stebbins has given us a thoughtful devotional theme which Frank Asper presents as his next organ offering: "At Dusk."

(Organ: "At Dusk"—Stebbins)

Announcer: Some men live blessedly long, and richly round out a fulness of years. Some are taken sooner. But no matter how long we are allowed to live in this life, we are all faced with some uncertainties, and we are none of us free from some troubles, some sorrows, some problems and disappointments. We are all faced with actual or possible illness or accident, with misfortune or failure or the fear of failure, and with the troubles of the times. We are sometimes subject to discouragement and depression of spirit. We are all sometimes subject to loss of loved ones—and to a long list of other unwanted intrusions upon our peace and plans and purposes. If we think there are those who are free from all such realities and reverses, it is likely because we don't know enough about them—because we don't know what is hidden in their hearts. But fortunately in facing life, we need not be left alone. Fortunately there is the help and the comfort and the counsel of friends and family and others; and fortunately there is help beyond the help of human hands. When, for our troubled hearts and perplexed thoughts and weary searchings, and stubborn ailments and gnawing anxieties we need higher help, there is the sustaining, strengthening power of prayer. It would be terrible to feel alone in life; it would be terrible to face any serious situation without the privilege of approaching Him in whose image men were made and who is mindful of the men He made. In every problem of every passing day, in the laboratory and shop, in the factory and the field, and in the family circle, in the classroom, in the sickroom, in the halls of government and in humble homes, in all our activities and in all extremities, the power of prayer is (or can be) a guiding, enlightening, and lifting force; a source of wisdom beyond the wisdom of the world; a source of the truth for which men are ever further reaching; a sweet and healing influence; a source of comfort, of protection, and of the peace that passeth understanding. Prayer is an approach to Him who gave us life and whose endless power and purpose give us settled assurance that life and time and truth are limitless and everlasting, and that despite all discouragement, all problems, and all perplexities we are not left alone in life.

(Organ interlude)

(Selection by the choir: "The Lord's Prayer"—Gates)

Announcer: We have heard the Tabernacle Choir sing B. Cecil Gates' setting for "The Lord's Prayer": "Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be Thy name"

And now Frank Asper moves into a hymn melody by Thomas McIntyre: "How Great the Wisdom and the Love."

(Organ: "How Great the Wisdom"—McIntyre)

Announcer: The Choir closes now from Temple Square with a prayer for the darkness that follows the day: "Abide with me, fast falls the eventide; the darkness deepens; Lord, with me abide: When other helpers fail, and comforts flee, help of the helpless, O abide with me!"

(Choir: "Abide with Me"—Monk)

Announcer: Once more we leave you within the shadows of the everlasting hills. May peace be with you, this day—and always.

This concludes the eleven hundred and twenty-ninth presentation, continuing the 22nd year of this traditional broadcast from the Mormon Tabernacle on Temple Square, brought to you by the Columbia network and its affiliated stations, originating with Radio Station KSL in Salt Lake City.

J. Spencer Cornwall conducted the singing of the Tabernacle Choir. Frank Asper was at the organ. The spoken word by Richard Evans.

SUNDAY MORNING SESSION OF CONFERENCE

The regular session of the Conference commenced promptly at 10 o'clock, with President David O. McKay, President of the Council of the Twelve Apostles, presiding and conducting the services. The Choral singing for this session of the Conference was by the Tabernacle Choir, with J. Spencer Cornwall conducting.

President David O. McKay

This is the fourth session of the One Hundred Twenty-first Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the tabernacle on Temple Square, Salt Lake City, Utah.

These services will be broadcast in the Assembly Hall and in Barratt Hall, 60 North Main, over a loud speaking system and by television.

We have received word that there are vacant seats in Barratt Hall, but not in the Assembly Hall. The tabernacle is crowded to capacity, every seat taken, with the aisles on the sides and the doorways filled with those standing.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over Station

Sunday, April 8Second Day

KSL of Salt Lake City and, by arrangement through KSL, over the stations named in the first session of the Conference.

The choir singing for this morning's session of the Conference will be by the Tabernacle Choir, with Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting, and Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ.

We will begin the services by the Tabernacle Choir and the congregation singing: "Come, Come Ye Saints," conducted by Elder Richard P. Condie. The congregation will remain seated while singing.

The opening prayer will be offered by President Edwin S. Dibble of the Glendale Stake, California.

---

Singing by the Tabernacle Choir and congregation, "Come, Come Ye Saints."

The opening prayer was offered by President Edwin S. Dibble of the Glendale Stake, California.

The Tabernacle Choir sang the hymn, "How Great The Wisdom and the Love."

PRESIDENT DAVID O. MCKAY

Brethren and sisters, I deeply sense my inadequacy in trying to express in words the message I have in my heart this morning. I earnestly pray therefore for your sympathetic mental attitude and particularly for your spiritual support.

TESTIMONY OF REDEEMER

"For I know that my redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth:

"And though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God:

"Whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another; though my reins be consumed within me." (Job 19:25-27.)

Thus was spoken the heartfelt assurance of Job, expressed in humiliation when everything else was taken from him and even his body utterly wasted in affliction.

If a few more million men in the world could feel that testimony—the testimony of the reality of our Redeemer—selfishness would be less manifest, war among nations would be eradicated, and peace would reign among mankind. Do you believe that, my fellow workers?

"What think ye of Christ?" was the question Jesus put to a group of Pharisees when they, with scribes and Sadducees, sought to entrap, to confound the Great Teacher by asking him entangling questions. He silenced the Sadducees in their attempt to ensnare him with regard to paying tribute to Caesar. He satisfied the scribes regarding the first and great commandment. Now he put to silence the Pharisees regarding their anticipated Christ.

To this congregation, to the Church, and to the world, I repeat this question as being the most vital, the most farreaching query in this unsettled, distracted world.

CONTRIBUTIONS OF GREAT MEN

Great minds in all ages who have contributed to the betterment of mankind have been inspired by noble ideals.

History is replete with men who, as Wordsworth expresses it, "By the vision splendid, were on their way attended." There is John Milton, for example, inspired with a desire as a boy of twelve to write a poem that would live for centuries. As a result, the world has Paradise Lost, and later in life, though blind, the poet as he approached the closing moments of his life, exclaimed: "Still guides the heavenly vision." Sir Walter Scott, as you know, wrote almost day and night to pay off a debt for which he was not really responsible.

George Washington, guided by the desire to build a noble character and to be of service to his country, cried: "I hope I may always have firmness and virtue enough to maintain what I consider to be the most enviable of all titles—the character of an honest man." Abraham Lincoln's lofty soul, expressing himself thus: "with malice toward none, with charity for all, with firmness in the right as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in, to bind up the nations wounds, to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow and his orphan to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and lasting peace among ourselves and with all nations." (Second Inaugural Address.)

These and others who live to their best are the men "who realize in daily life their luminous hours and transmute their ideals into conduct and character. These are," continues the writer, "the soul architects, who build their thoughts and deeds into a plan; who travel forward, not aimlessly, but toward a destination; who sail not any-whither but toward a port, who steer not by the clouds, but by fixed stars. High in the scale of manhood these who ceaselessly aspire towards life's Great Exemplar."

HIGHEST OF ALL IDEALS

But let me explain again, the highest of all ideals are the teachings and particularly the life of Jesus of Nazareth, and that man is most truly great who is most Christlike.

What you sincerely in your heart think of Christ will determine what you are, will largely determine what your acts will be. No person can study this divine personality, can accept his teachings without becoming conscious of an uplifting and refining influence within himself. In fact, every individual may experience the operation of the most potent force that can affect humanity. Electricity lightens labor in the home, imprisons alike on a disc the warbling tones of the mockingbird and the convincing appeal of the orator. By the turn of a switch, it turns night into day. The possibilities of the force resulting from the breaking up of the atom seem to be limitless either for the destruction or the blessing of life. Other and greater forces are already glimpsed.

THE MAN OF GALILEE

None, however, is so vital, so contributive to the peace and happiness of the human family as the surrendering of our selfish animal-like natures to the life and teachings of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. George R. Wendling in The Man of Galilee confirms this thought as follows: "Believe it! The most wonderful work in all the world is not to take iron, steel, and brass and make a locomotive; nor is it to take gold and diamonds and cog-wheels and make a watch; nor is it to take canvas and colors and brush and paint an Angelus; nor yet is it to take pen and parchment and write an Iliad or Hamlet, but an infinitely greater work than all is to take an ignoble, cruel, impure, and dishonest being and transform him into an upright, gentle, noble, and pure man. Here we touch the creative power of the Galilean—and bow before the mystery.

"Here we find the crowning glory of all the evidences, attested by millions of intelligent men and women, the fact, mysterious but not illusory, that His very presence is found, is realized, is verified, and that He is as helpful, as vital, and as inspiring now as when the matchless Beatitudes fell upon the ears of a listening multitude two thousand years ago."

PETER AND PAUL TRANSFORMED

Peter, the chief Apostle, is a striking example of this transforming power. He was a humble, reputedly a rough, uncultured fisherman to whom Jesus of Nazareth became an inspiration. The vision that bade him say, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the Living God," became the guiding light of his life. Conditions occasionally made him falter, but he regained the lightened pathway. Bigots scoffed at him; religious zealots, political charlatans arrested, imprisoned, and shackled him as a dangerous enemy to society, but the heavenly vision lightened the darkened dungeon, burst open prison doors, struck off the fetters that bound his wrists, as well as his wavering soul, and gave him courage and strength to face his accusers with the sublime testimony: He "whom ye crucified, Jesus Christ, is the only name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." (See Acts 4:10, 12.) Only a comparatively well-to-do man, making a fairly good living by fishing, of whom the world would never have heard had he not been inspired by a testimony of the divine mission of the Man of Galilee—just a humble fisherman, who, by the light of that inspiration to him and to other members of the Twelve, and disciples, "many of the world's loveliest things have been created, many of the world's finest minds inspired."

Another good example is Paul, a contemporary of Peter, whose early life and teachings were entirely different from those of the fisherman, but who, when the vision of the Risen Lord pierced his prejudiced mind, was inspired throughout the remainder of his days by one guiding thought expressed on the occasion of his great vision: "Lord, what wouldst thou have me do?"

Paul, as Peter, had his hours of discouragement. Pride sometimes perturbed him, and conformity to church authority was occasionally difficult. He, too, was mobbed, beaten, and imprisoned, put in stocks in a dungeon, but the heavenly vision of the Risen Lord ever guided his footsteps.

EXAMPLE OF JOSEPH SMITH

May I remind you also of the Prophet Joseph Smith, who declared: "... I had actually seen a light, and in the midst of that light I saw two Personages, and they did in reality speak to me; and though I was hated and persecuted for saying that I had seen a vision, yet it was true; and while they were persecuting me, reviling me, and speaking all manner of evil against me falsely for so saying, I was led to say in my heart: Why persecute me for telling the truth? I have actually seen a vision; and who am I that I can withstand God, or why does the world think to make me deny what I have actually seen? For I had seen a vision; I knew it, and I knew God knew it, and I could not deny it, neither dared I do it; at least I knew that by so doing I would offend God, and come under condemnation." (P. of G. P., Writings of Joseph Smith, 2:25.)

Through railings, scoffings, mobbings, arrests, imprisonments, persecutions that led to martyrdom, Joseph Smith as Peter and Paul before him, ever strove to the utmost of his ability to follow the light that had made him a "partaker of the divine nature."

INFLUENCE OF SAVIOR'S MISSION

I quote these three outstanding leaders in the realm of religion to show how the assurance of the divine mission of our Lord and Savior not only transformed their personal lives to a greater or less degree, but also influenced for good the entire world.

Since man's first advent on earth, God has been urging him to rise above the selfish, groveling life of the purely animal existence into the higher, more spiritual realm. After several thousand years of struggling, mankind even now but dimly recognizes the fact that the greatest of the world's leaders are those who most nearly approach the teachings of the Man of Galilee. This is psychologically sound, because the thoughts a man harbors determine the realm in which he serves. "Be not deceived," writes Paul to the Galatians,

"God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." (Galatians 6:7-8.)

GREAT WORLD DRAMA

At the moment there is being enacted a great world drama, the final act of which we can only dimly surmise. In Korea, one of the bloodiest wars of modern times is raging. But here is a singular thing. Engaged in it are soldiers from South Korea, United States, Great Britain, France, Turkey, Greece, Netherlands, Australia, Canada, New Zealand, Thailand, the Philippines, South Africa, and one or two other nations—all enlisted under the United Nations' banner.

Political relationships leading up to their fighting as an international army need not concern us this morning, but there is one significant fact most worthy of attention: Battling for the same cause are Buddhists, followers of Confucius, Moslems, and Christians. Opposed to these are Communists, openly avowed to be anti-Christ. Two hundred twenty-nine thousand casualties are already reported in this conflict! It would almost seem to be the beginning of the great battle of Armageddon.

More destructive to the spreading of Christian principles in the minds, particularly of the youth, than battleships, submarines, or even bombs, is the sowing of false ideals by the enemy. Particularly, during the last five years, Communist Russia has gained for the time being conquests over the satellites under her domination, including China, and is now threatening Japan by sowing seeds of mistrust in the body politic.

Misrepresentation, false propaganda, innuendoes soon sprout into poisonous weeds, and before long the people find themselves victims of a pollution that has robbed them of their individual liberty and enslaved them to a group of political gangsters. Let us draw a lesson from this.

THOUGHTS DETERMINE DESTINY

So it is with evil thoughts that may be permitted insidiously to enter and to find lodgment in the human mind. Thoughts harbored determine destiny.

"My spirit," says the Christ, "will not dwell in unclean tabernacles." The corruption that is in the world through lust, as mentioned in one of Peter's epistles, has its source in thoughts and schemes harbored in the individual mind. A man who takes advantage of his neighbor in a business deal when the opportunity offers has prepared himself for the occasion by dishonest thinking. Young couples do not lose their chastity, named by the Book of Mormon as "precious above all things" without their having previously in thought justified the act.

The husband who coolly turns from a loyal wife and family and seeks illicit relationship elsewhere, perhaps with a disloyal wife of a neighbor, has previously poisoned his soul with immoral ideas. Disgruntled members of society, faultfinders in wards and stakes, do not become such merely because of some offense, real or imagined. What they say and do have been preceded by selfish desires or unattained ambition.

CORRUPTION FROM WITHIN

I mentioned Communism in its war against individual liberty and free enterprise as surreptitiously sowing poisonous seeds within the body politic. It is also from within, morally speaking, that our cities become corrupt; not from outward, open assaults on virtue, but from insidious, corrupt actions of trusted individuals. Our government, as you know, has recently uncovered a gambling ring that covers a twenty billion dollar business in vice. Many large cities in the United States are connected with it and contaminated by it.

Too many of these city officials license darkened rooms wherein men and women, and not infrequently teenage boys and girls, may guzzle beer and whiskey and indulge in other vices sought by persons of low ideals. For the permission and perpetuation of such dens of iniquity in our cities, the public is not entirely free from blame. However, those who are elected to office—commissioners, peace officers, trusted servants of the people—are most directly responsible.

Generally speaking, these men are honest in their intentions and actions to enforce the laws and if possible to eradicate, at least to reduce to a minimum, the evils upon which the underworld thrives. One or two, or a half a dozen unprincipled men, however, can frustrate the most earnest efforts of the upright officials. For example, officers informed that minors are permitted to enter a certain "joint" will find when they get to the place that the proprietor has been "tipped off" and seemingly everything is within the law.

If and when appreciation for such "tips-off," and other favors, is expressed in secretive payments of money, those participating in the graft may meet in a room, a club, or in a private residence, ostensibly to play a social game of poker, and under this guise divide their ill-gotten gains. Thus do our cities, as individuals, become corrupt from within.

Such exploitation of the poor unfortunates whose thoughts and desires lead them only to gratify their appetites, indulge their passions to exist by deceit, cunning, and crime, are among the corruptions that Peter says "are in the world through lust."

Let us always remember that, "There is no vice so great but we can kill "and conquer it if we but will."

CHRIST OUR IDEAL

Christ came to redeem the world from sin. He came with love in his heart for every individual, with redemption and possibility for regeneration for all. By choosing him as our ideal, we create within ourselves a desire to be like him, to have fellowship with him. We perceive life as it should be and as it may be.

The chief apostle Peter, the indefatigable Paul, the Prophet Joseph Smith, and other true followers of the Risen Lord recognized in him the Savior of the individual, for did he not say, "This is my work and my glory—to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man?"—not the sacrificing of the individual for the perpetuation of the socialistic or communistic state.

Members of the Church of Christ are under obligation to make the sinless Son of Man their ideal—the one perfect being who ever walked the earth.

Sublimest Example of Nobility

God-like in nature

Perfect in his love

Our Redeemer

Our Savior

The immaculate Son of our Eternal Father

The Light, the Life, the Way

I know he lives and his power is potent; that he is the Son of God, and that he has restored in this dispensation the complete plan of salvation. God bless us all that we may hold him as our ideal and pray for power to be like him, I ask in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOHN A. WIDTSOE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My dear brethren and sisters, I am always glad to bear testimony to the faith within me. Yet I confess that standing before such an audience, I feel a sobering effect. Brigham Young felt it in his day. He declared that since we are all children of God, there is within each one of us a part of God's very nature, and that to stand before a great group of Latter-day Saints, the accumulation, so to speak, of their godliness, lifts a man to a feeling that he stands before the great dignity of the Maker of us all.

I have listened with great interest to the messages of this conference. We have had a good time together. I know we have all been touched by the eloquent words just spoken by President McKay. He has touched the very center of our spiritual being, of our membership in the Church of Christ.

KINDNESS OF GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

During the events of the last few days, many memories have crowded in upon my mind. In a late afternoon of a warm, sultry day in August or September, I sat in my office rather tired after the day's work. The University of Utah had had internal dissensions which had been fanned by enemies into a nationwide scandal. I had been called in to assist others who were trying to return the institution and its work to a normal condition. It was the third time in my life that I had been obliged to serve my state in such a capacity. I was weary. Just then there was a knock upon the door, and in walked George Albert Smith. He said, "I am on the way home after my day's work. I thought of you and the problems that you are expected to solve. I came in to comfort you and to bless you."

That was the way of George Albert Smith. Of the many friends I have throughout the state and beyond, he was the only one, except a few of my intimate friends, who took time to give me the loving help in the work I had to do. Of course I appreciated that; I shall never forget it. We talked together for awhile; we parted, he went home. My heart was lifted. I was weary no longer.

You see, love, of which we have spoken so much during this conference, is not a mere word or a sensation within. To be a worthy love, it must be brought into action. President Smith on that occasion did that. He gave of his own time, his own strength, to me. I hope that those of us who have attended this conference these last few days will understand that the test of love is whether the person who loves gives of himself, of his powers, to the loved one. There is no true love unless that is done. The husband must give of his own self, in a large sense, to the wife he loves; and she must give of herself, surrender perhaps, for him, the things that she would like to keep and have. Parents and children must have the same relationship. There is no true love without sacrifice for the loved one. Since we have spoken so much about love, perhaps we might keep that in memory.

THEME OF ADDRESS

Shortly before the death of President Smith, I heard one of his addresses, perhaps it was his last, I am not quite sure. He chose as his theme, the unhappy condition of the world at the present time. He laid down a principle which I believe to be correct and inspired, that there will be no peace, no final solution to the world's problems, until this body of people, comprising the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, cleanse themselves, accept the doctrines of the Lord Jesus Christ, spoken of so beautifully this morning, and set to work to battle for righteousness and for truth; only then can we hope for peace. He admitted that of course it was a tremendous claim, but the claim is eternal. Truth is always the winner; truth is never defeated. In the words of the old poet: "Truth crushed to earth will rise again." He left on that occasion the message to me and to others that we must cleanse our hearts, as said here today by President McKay. We must gather up our courage, and we must set forth to battle for righteousness in the world. Then, just as a leaven leavens the lump, so we shall leaven the whole world. A tremendous mission, isn't it? Tremendous to think about—that this handful of people have within themselves the power, if properly used, to change the whole world for good or for evil.

EXAMINATION OF TESTIMONIES

I have felt on many occasions, especially after that sermon, that what we need to do, each one of us, is to begin to examine our own testimonies of the truth. After all, with our testimonies as our chief weapon, we go out to battle evil. We speak of a testimony, yes; we say we have a testimony—but is the testimony of a kind that will enable a man to accept and obey the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ under any and all conditions? It might be good for us Latter-day Saints to begin to re-examine our own testimonies. A man who goes into battle cleanses his sword, looks after his gun, and he is ready for the battle when it comes. We are in the midst of a great battle today, the battle of the ages, foretold by prophets throughout the long ages of the past. We must begin with a certain understanding of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ and a willing, ready acceptance of it, as indicated by President McKay. There is no other way. But have we done that? Have we looked into our own hearts, to our testimonies, and added that which is wanting, taken out that which is unworthy? We should be fit for the battle.

In the words of President Smith, we, like the leaven, shall leaven all people. His life of love was merely an illustration of that larger view of the concern of all who follow the Christ.

A UNIQUE PEOPLE

I think that we Latter-day Saints can afford to be a unique people. Once in awhile I meet a young person, sometimes an older person who says, "Well, that may all be true, but I don't want to be different from other people. I want to be like other people. Why can't we be like the others? It's so much easier then to go through life."

But we can't help it, my brethren and sisters, if we are different. We are different—in righteousness, in virtue, in the teachings of the eternal gospel—we are different. We can't escape it. If our testimonies are sound and true, we know that we cannot be like other people unless they, too, accept the truth as we possess it.

I don't know of a figure in the last two thousand years who was more different from the mass of humanity, the millions of men and women, than the Prophet Joseph Smith. He stands alone, unique—the only such religious leader in two thousand years, since the days of the Christ. He received his commission from God himself; he was instructed by God himself; he spoke at one time with God himself. No other man in the midst of the great apostasy from simple truth has ever been able to make that claim. And we know it to be true. Of course we are a different people. Since I musn't take too much time today—many of us are yet to speak—let me say to you that we have the right, in searching our testimonies, in getting them ready for this great battle, to remember that a testimony is a living thing, not a static, dead thing—it is alive and sometimes fills a man and a woman until the visions of heaven are opened to him or to her. By that token of life, a testimony must be fed, cared for and nurtured, kept in its right place and position, protected if needs be. In doing that, we have the right and the need to take all evidences that lie about us, all evidences of the truth of this great latter-day work. The Lord himself told us so to do. We may read in the Doctrine and Covenants, section twenty, when the foundations of this Church were laid, when our Church constitution, so to speak, was written (you will find that evidences are there mentioned), that by the evidences that lie all about us we shall be judged. Joseph Smith set up evidence after evidence of the reality and truth of all that he said and did.

WITNESSES TO PROPHET'S WORK

I am thinking of one great argument in favor of Joseph, debated and talked about for over a hundred years: He had witnesses, human flesh and blood witnesses, such as we are, of his work. He was alone in the grove when the first vision came; he was alone when Moroni called; the Church had not then been organized, hardly begun. But from that time on, almost everything he did of a spiritual nature, his communions and communications with the Almighty and divine beings, were shared by him with others. It is really a wonderful thing. The great spiritual leaders of the last two thousand years have gone into the woods, fasted and prayed, and come back with these messages, alone. They have gone into caves—Mohammed, for example—always alone. But this great latter-day prophet, after the beginning of the work, had companions who shared with him his great experiences. Twelve honorable men of unquestioned probity saw the plates of the Book of Mormon; when the priesthood was restored by John the Baptist, Oliver Cowdery, an honest man whose integrity has never been questioned, received the priesthood with Joseph. When Peter, James, and John came to give the higher priesthood, Oliver Cowdery was there. When the great messages in the Kirtland Temple came, which we frequently overlook in their greatness, Oliver Cowdery was by his side. When the message that men shall be judged by their works—a tremendous doctrine in that day of apostasy—was given, Sidney Rigdon was with the Prophet Joseph Smith. And other men, ancestors of some of you men who are here today, were in the room with the Prophet time and time again when the revelations of God came to him. Some of them have described in writing how it occurred.

We don't stand alone. We have witnesses to our faith. We are a unique people. All about us are witnesses to the truth of this great latter-day work. It might be well in building our testimonies, to begin with the simple foundation—events. Ultimately we will then win that greater testimony, the testimony of the spirit which is the testimony, but which we must achieve little by little, in a natural manner that the Lord has prescribed:

A WORLD MESSAGE

So brethren and sisters, let us look into our testimonies. Are they just words on our tongues, or do they really represent our convictions? If they need mending, mend them; if they need building, build them. Remember that our message is a world message—I have said before from this stand that we are not confined to these valleys and mountains—our message is for the whole world. For every nation, every tongue, and every kindred, we have responsibility.

God bless us and be with us, not only in our search for truth, but also in our use of truth, for the accomplishment and the completion of the great purposes of the Lord in these days, I pray in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Choir and congregation sang the hymn, "O Say, What Is Truth?"

ELDER MATTHEW COWLEY

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I have been thinking, my brothers and sisters, since the meeting of the Twelve in the temple on Thursday, of the words of the Master when he was about to take his departure from the Twelve, and he said unto them:

Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost:

Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world.
(Matt. 28:19-20.)

QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES

As this Council of Twelve met in the upper room of the temple on Thursday, the Spirit of God bore witness to my spirit that Christ was saying there to the Twelve: "... and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." And where there is no Quorum of Twelve in God's ministry upon the earth, Christ is not there as the leader of his Church and his kingdom. This testimony has sunk deep into my heart since that meeting and during this conference, which has been presided over by the Council of the Twelve with President McKay as its presiding officer. When Christ came to the earth he organized his Church, and at the head, under his leadership, he had Twelve Apostles. And when he left, he left his Church under the direction of the Twelve. When he came to the American continent he organized his Church, and at the head of that Church, under his leadership, he placed Twelve Disciples. And when he left them, he left his Church and his Saints under the leadership of that Twelve. And when the gospel was restored again, Christ came back and appeared unto him who was raised up to be the Prophet at the head of this dispensation. And under his direction the Church was organized for the last time, and at the head of the Church under the Presidency of the Prophet were the appointed Twelve. And when the Prophet was taken from the earth, sealing his testimony with his blood, the Church was left under the direction of the Twelve. And down through the years when the leadership of the Quorum of the Presidency has been taken away, the keys have remained with the Twelve.

" . . . and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

As God has borne witness to me in that meeting in his holy house and in this conference, so I bear witness to you that where there is no Quorum of the Twelve, the true organization of Christ's Church is not here upon the earth, and that is my testimony to you, which I bear in all humbleness and in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER SPENCER W. KIMBALL

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My brothers and sisters, these are momentous days. The experiences of this week we will not soon forget. I am impressed, too, as Brother Cowley expressed, with the importance of the body to which I belong. This is the first general conference I have ever attended which was conducted by the Council of the Twelve.

STATEMENT OF PAUL

I am reminded of the statement by Paul to the Ephesians when he said:

And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists and some, pastors and teachers.

And then he outlines carefully for what purpose they were called:

For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body (the Church) of Christ.

And then he goes further and makes a statement that I think is very important indeed to every Latter-day Saint:

That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness whereby they lie in wait to deceive. (Ephesians 4:11-12, 14.)

CHOSEN LEADERS

In many other places Paul also warned us against the deceivers who would come even before his departing. And they have continued to come, and they are among us today. The authorities which the Lord has placed in his Church constitute for the people of the Church a harbor, a place of refuge, a hitching post, as it were. No one in this Church will ever go far astray who ties himself securely to the Church Authorities whom the Lord has placed in his Church. This Church will never go astray; the Quorum of the Twelve will never lead you into bypaths; it never has and never will. There could be individuals who would falter; there will never be a majority of the Council of the Twelve on the wrong side at any time. The Lord has chosen them; he has given them specific responsibilities. And those people who stand close to them will be safe. And, conversely, whenever one begins to go his own way in opposition to authority, he is in grave danger. I would not say that those leaders whom the Lord chooses are necessarily the most brilliant, nor the most highly trained, but they are the chosen, and when chosen of the Lord they are his recognized authority, and the people who stay close to them have safety.

I am reminded of when Moses was called to his tremendous responsibility of leading the children of Israel out of bondage, and he complained to the Lord and said, "I am weak, I am slow of speech," and the Lord gave to him a voice in his brother Aaron. But the Lord didn't replace him by that voice.

NEED OF BEING VALIANT

The Lord is at the helm, brothers and sisters, and he will continue to be there, and his work will go forward. The important question is whether we, as individuals, will be going in that same direction. It's up to us. This is a gospel of individual work. I wish our Latter-day Saints could become more valiant. As I read the seventy-sixth section of the Doctrine and Covenants, the great vision given to the Prophet Joseph Smith, I remember that the Lord says to that terrestrial degree of glory may go those who are not valiant in the testimony, which means that many of us who have received baptism by proper authority, many who have received other ordinances, even temple blessings, will not reach the celestial kingdom of glory unless we live the commandments and are valiant.

What is being valiant? I believe that John, in the book of Revelation, says something about valiancy. He is speaking to the people at Sardis, one of the cities which Paul had proselyted. He is speaking to the Saints, mind you, not to the people in the world.

He says: "I know thy works, that thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead." (Rev. 3:1.)

SPIRITUALLY DEAD

There are many people in this Church today who think they live, but they are dead to the spiritual things. And I believe even many who are making pretenses of being active are also spiritually dead. Their service is much of the letter and less of the spirit. Again I notice he speaks to another group, the Laodiceans, and says:

I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot: I would thou wert cold or hot.

So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth. (Ibid., 3:15-16.)

Those were Saints who had been baptized into the kingdom, received the Holy Ghost, we would assume, and were supposed to be on their way to exaltation. But they weren't faithful, they weren't valiant. The Lord says again in these verses through John:

Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out: and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is new Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God: and I will write upon him my new name. (Ibid. 3:12.)

He says again of these Sardis members of the Church:

Thou hast a few names even in Sardis which have not defiled their garments; and they shall walk with me in white: for they are worthy.

He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels. (Ibid., 3:4-5.)

I remember a great people of long ago who belonged to the Church of our Lord, who became so righteous as a group that they were translated into heaven. And I wonder why other groups have not been taken. The only conclusion that I can reach is that whole groups have not been sufficiently righteous. We buried a righteous man yesterday. If all of the people in this Church were as righteous as he was, perhaps there might be further translations. But we are not living the commandments of the Lord as well as we know. Many of us are not valiant.

GREATER CHURCH ACTIVITY

I pray the Lord will bless us all, that we may catch a vision of greater activity in this Church, all of us. That none of us may stand by and feel self-righteous as did the hypocrite who with the publican went to the temple to pray:

The Pharisee stood and prayed thus with himself, God, I thank thee, that I am not as other men are, extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as this publican.

I fast twice in the week, I give tithes of all that I possess. (Luke 18:11-12.)

Then Jesus goes on to say:

And the publican, standing afar off, would not lift up so much as his eyes unto heaven, but smote upon his breast saying, God be merciful to me a sinner.

I tell you, this man went down to his house justified rather than the other: for every one that exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted. (Ibid., 18:13-14.)

We are all sinners. We all need to repent. We all need to change our lives and to make them more righteous, and become valiant as the children of Enoch were valiant, so that we may receive the blessings which are promised to us and which we are striving for. Many of us have not yet surrendered, or if it has been a surrender it has been a conditional surrender, with many reservations.

God help us, brothers and sisters, that we may unconditionally surrender to the Lord and his program and to the spirit of the work, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JEAN WUNDERLICH

Formerly President of the West German Mission

First of all, brothers and sisters, I wish to express my thanks to our Father in Heaven that my family and I had the opportunity to go to Germany and fill a mission there in that much-tried land. I have been back four months now. I have resumed my profession and have had an opportunity to look around among those that have stayed home, and I would say that nothing in an earthly way could repay the blessings that my family and I have enjoyed while we were away. Many people talk of sacrifices in the work of the Lord, but I am convinced that it is not possible to sacrifice in the work of the Lord, that no matter what we do, when the ledger is balanced our side of it is always in the red.

If I can express one sentiment that all the Saints in Germany would want me to convey to the body of the Church, it would be a sentiment of thanks for the Welfare help that they have received. It is difficult to describe the condition under which these people had to live. For many of them, the food which came when it did, meant the difference literally between life and death, and for many of them, most of them, the clothing when it came, meant the difference between freezing and being cold, and being warm and comfortable. I do not want to describe conditions in detail, but perhaps one little incident will illustrate. I asked a good brother in private, confidentially, about a year before I left, "How much of the clothing that you now wear on your body did you have before the Welfare help came." He hesitated and said, "Just one pair of spats, all the rest of it is from the Welfare." This is not an isolated case, but hundreds, yes, I would say, thousands are in the same position.

I would also like to say something about our missionaries. It took a long time before the door was opened again for our American young men to come over there and preach the Gospel. But before they came there were a few valiant men and women of the Germans themselves who left their families and their homes and filled full-time missions for the Church. That same man who mentioned the pair of spats as belonging to him before the Welfare help came, went into the mission field and left at home a wife and seven children, only one of whom was old enough to earn her own keep.

Those are the few to whom we owe so much in Germany, but we owe a great deal also to you fathers and mothers who sent your sons over there.

Naturally, you are anxious to know how they are getting along. May I assure you that there is no cause for alarm, as to their physical well being. At the present moment there is nothing in Germany that cannot be obtained if one has the price for it, and it can be obtained legitimately. Many of the German Saints are not fortunate enough to be able to afford all the beautiful things that are obtainable there, again, but as I say, none of our missionaries need to suffer. And I will add that as long as any German Saint has a crust of bread it will be shared with the missionaries. Ever since the days of Tacitus, the Germans have been renowned for their hospitality, and this is still one of the virtues which they have left.

I remember an occasion when things were still scarce, and when housewives were sorely tried. We came to a Conference. A lady invited us to dinner. We had potato soup and dry bread. In this potato soup was the only shortening or fat which this particular family had obtained for several weeks. That shortening or fat, 50 grams, all, was really meant for their child, but they shared it with us. I hasten to add, that the child did not suffer.

You may wonder what the prospects of missionary work are in Germany. They are excellent. Of course the German people have become highly critical. They do not fall, I believe, as easily as they once did, for propaganda. I hope they have been cured. I think that in some ways they have become more discriminatory. Before the 21st of June, 1948, we had no difficulty in bringing people into our Church, because they came of their own accord. But since that time the currency reform was enacted which changed economic conditions, and by reason of that fact we are in competition again with the enticements of the world, with the movies, with restaurants, with travel and with sports. We have to go to the people, and as we do, hundreds of them become interested. There are 50 cities in Western Germany alone, each with over 25,000 people, where the Gospel has never been preached, so that the field is ripe there. I hope the Lord will grant us a long time in order to preach His word, so that we may reach the honest in heart.

I thank my Heavenly Father again. I see the time is up. It is not possible to give an adequate report in a short time. I thank my Father in Heaven again for his kindness to me and my family, and for the kindness which he has inspired others to extend unto us, both here and in Germany. May the Lord bless you, may the Lord bless the dear Saints in Germany, that they may have the things which they so much desire, and which they so much deserve, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER CLIFFORD E. YOUNG

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve

My brethren and sisters, this has been a most impressive conference. I think in my experience I have never attended one more impressive, and it has been my privilege to attend conferences since the passing of President Woodruff when vacancies have been filled in the presidency of the Church. I remember President Woodruff well. He knew me by my first name, largely because my father attended him professionally, and it was my privilege to drive my father from place to place as a boy. So, I say, in my recollection I never remember a more impressive conference.

GOSPEL BRINGS PEACE

It's a great pleasure and a privilege and a blessing to be here and to feel the warmth of the hearts of the people. Although there has been a shadow of sorrow in all of our hearts, yet there has been that peace that comes to the human soul through the gospel of Jesus Christ. We are all striving for peace, and we wonder how it's going to come. I sometimes think we look upon it as sort of a tangible thing and perhaps there are some tangible aspects to it, but in a larger sense, it is most intangible. I think we were conscious of that yesterday as we assembled in this room paying our respects and showing our love to our great leader. As we sat here, I couldn't help but think, here we are evidencing peace in the world. Our hearts are free from strife; that's what peace means. We have nothing but love and kindness one toward another, and regardless of creed, regardless of color, and there were many here yesterday, who are not of the white race, we were all dedicated to one purpose and that was peace and love. It's true, that was inspired by our leader, but leaders can do that, and they will do it, and peace will come through the inspiration of men whom God will raise up and who will establish in the hearts of men, because of their righteous lives, these great concepts of peace.

PEACE THROUGH SUFFERING

And then, too, we had another most striking experience as we sat here. We listened to that lovely blind woman, Sister Jones, pay her tribute, one from whom the beauties of this world have been shut out—I mean the tangible beauties. I couldn't help thinking of it as I saw those beautiful flowers. She couldn't see them; she can't see the shadows of a fleeting day or the rising sun, or these delicate lilies. Tennyson, you know, it was, as he was going along one time, seeing a little flower in a crannied wall, said:

Flower in the crannied wall,
I pluck you out of the crannies,
I hold you here, root and all, in my hand,
Little flower—but if I could understand
What you are, root and all, and all in all,
I should know what God and man is.

This lovely girl can't see those flowers. But she does see something, my brothers and sisters, beyond what you and I see. She has a perception of beauty; she has peace in her soul; she has something Christ-like that God exemplified, and it brings home the fact that there is great wisdom in the experience of suffering and sorrow, and it's in that suffering and sorrow that we acquire these divine attributes. God understood it; he didn't let the cup pass when Jesus supplicated that it might. He knew. And so, some have to go through life missing some of the tangible things you and I enjoy, but partaking of some of those intangibles that transcend them all. We had a great lesson here yesterday, not only of how peace may come into the human soul, but also of how men and women exemplify the teachings of our Lord and Savior and the great virtues of love and sacrifice.

STORY OF BLIND WOMAN

I remember many years ago of reading, I believe it was in the old Juvenile Instructor, a beautiful story, and it has stayed with me all these years. It is said that on one occasion President Young left his home, over where the Bee Hive House stands, and started down State Street. There used to be a stream of water, part of City Creek, flow down the street, and the sidewalk, such as it was, or the trail, meandered along this ditch; and as President Young was making his way down he saw coming up the trail an old lady with a cane, following her way along the ditch. She couldn't see. In the goodness of his heart President Young stopped and, taking her by the hand, he said, "My dear sister, God bless you. Let the light of the gospel be the light that shines beyond the rays of the setting sun." It's the gospel of Christ that brings peace to all of us and as was said here, appropriately, the reason that we could feel it so impressively yesterday is because we were paying tribute to one who had exemplified these divine virtues.

EXERCISE OF AGENCY

And so, brethren and sisters, there is hope for all of us. There's hope for this suffering world. President Clark called our attention last night to one very potent thing, however: namely, that we can lose our agency. We have the agency to make these things possible; we also have the agency to lose them because God, in giving his promises to his children, has not taken it from us. We have the right to do, or not to do, and we have the right to establish righteousness. We have the will to do it or the will not to do it. Therein lies the great danger, and if we fail, or if failure occurs, it will be because of us who know better. But we have great hope as we visualize what has happened these last hundred years. Someone has said that one man alone with a message of peace and righteousness can revolutionize the world. The Prophet Joseph stood alone a hundred and twenty years ago. Today we number 1,100,000 people, and that's not counting the hundreds and thousands who have passed to the other side. It merely illustrates what one man alone can do. Jesus stood alone when he stood before Pilate, even Peter had deserted him—he knew him not, he said, and thus Jesus stood alone. One man alone can give hope and life and vitality to this world. And one man stood alone a hundred and twenty years ago, and today we're the recipients of his great message of eternal truth.

I bear you my testimony, my brothers and sisters, again thanking my Heavenly Father for the blessings of the gospel of Jesus Christ and for the peace that it brings to the human soul, and I do it in the name of Jesus. Amen.

President David O. McKay

We have just listened to Elder Clifford E. Young, one of the Assistants to the Council of the Twelve. We have a few moments to hear a brief report from Elder Arwell L. Pierce, formerly President of the Mexican Mission of the Church. He is now coming forward and will speak to us for a few minutes.

ELDER ARWELL L. PIERCE

Former President of the Mexican Mission

My Brothers and Sisters, this is a humbling experience for me. I have been coming to this Tabernacle, to attend conferences, for the past 47 years. The first time was in 1904 when I came to Salt Lake City to be set apart as a missionary to Mexico. A few years later I came here in my callings as Branch President and as Bishop in El Paso, Texas, and as a member of the Juarez Stake Presidency. Also during the more than seven and a half years Sister Pierce and I presided over the Mexican Mission, we came frequently to these General Conferences where we received instruction and inspiration to help us with our work. This is however the first time I have ever spoken in a General Conference. Sister Pierce and I are thankful for the privilege we had of living in Mexico City, and of laboring in many places in the Republic of Mexico, as well as in the Central American republics doing missionary work for the Church.

I am grateful to the Lord that my grandparents on my father's side accepted the Gospel, and became members of the Church, in 1833, only three years after the Church was organized. My grandfather Pierce lost his life in the persecutions of the Church in those early days, when he was but thirty years old. My widowed grandmother crossed the plains and came to Utah with her three small boys in the year 1852, just five years after the first pioneers came to this great valley. I am proud of that heritage. I am proud also of the fact that my Pierce forefathers were among the early settlers of this great land of America. They came over from England as early as 1620 to 1625.

I am grateful that my father was a Pioneer in the L.D.S. Colonies in Mexico. He went down there with his family in 1890, just five years after the first Pioneers arrived, and helped establish those Colonies. I have often wondered why my father went to Mexico with his family at that time. He not only moved down there that he might live unmolested with his family, but also that his posterity might become missionaries among the Mexican people. My father's children and grandchildren have given 47 years of missionary service in the Mexican Mission. Sister Pierce and I very greatly enjoyed our missionary labors in Mexico and Central America.

I remember that several years ago, it was in 1906, two members of the Council of the Twelve, Elders John Henry Smith and Francis Marion Lyman were Stake Conference visitors in the Colonies in Mexico. On their return trip to the border, I met them in Ciudad Juarez, across the river South from El Paso, Texas, and took them to the office of the American Consul, where I introduced them as Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. In his reply to the introduction, Elder John Henry Smith, in that well known diplomatic way of his, said very impressively, "Yes, Consul Edwards, we are members of the Church of Christ which is the first-born Church of America. As Christ is the first born of His Father, so the Church which bears His name, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, is the first-born Church of America." So far as I know that statement is true, for all the other churches of that time had their origin in the old world, the eastern hemisphere.

President George Albert Smith visited El Paso in the year 1926, on his way to visit the Mexican Mission. President Rey L. Pratt, with Apostle Melvin J. Ballard was in South America to open up missionary work there. Brother Smith couldn't go into Mexico then because of revolutionary troubles, so he stayed in my home with me for several days resting. One Sunday morning, one of my good friends, an attorney, who was teacher of the Bible class in his Church, phoned and invited me to give a talk to his class that morning. I was happy to tell him that Brother George Albert Smith, one of the Apostles of my Church, was visiting in my home. The attorney then invited Elder Smith to speak to his Bible class that

Sunday, April 8Second Day

Sunday morning, which he did willingly. As Elder Smith stood before that Bible class he held up a book and said, "This is the Mormon Bible." The men were intensely interested of course. Elder Smith then turned the book over, so they could see the title of it. He then said, "This is the King James Translation of the Bible. It is the same Bible you have, and it is our Bible also." Brother Smith then remarked, "You of course are interested in seeing what the world calls the Mormon Bible." He then held up the Book of Mormon and said, "Well, this is the so-called Mormon Bible, known to us as the Book of Mormon." Brother Smith then explained to the men's Bible class that the Book of Mormon is really the Bible of the people of America, and it contains the word of God just as much as does the book known to the world as the Bible.

I recall with much interest the visit of President George Albert Smith to the Mexican Mission in May of 1946. The special reason for his visit was to officially receive back into the Mission and the Church some 1200 members who for ten years had been separated from the Church under their own leaders. It was arranged during President Smith's visit to Mexico for him and his party to call on the President of Mexico, General Manuel Avila Camacho, and present him with a copy of the Book of Mormon in the Spanish language. Secretary of Economy Gustavo P. Serrano, who introduced President Smith and his party to the President of Mexico, had requested of us that we tell President Camacho about our Mormon colonists in Northern Mexico, which we were pleased to do. President Camacho then commented saying, "I want you to know that I have received many good reports about your American Latter-day Saint colonists in Chihuahua. I know them to be a virtuous people; an honest people, and an industrious people. If there is anything I can do at any time for you or for your people I stand ready to do it."

After we had explained briefly to President Camacho about our mission and our work in Mexico, we said, "Mr. President we are not just another sect that has come into your midst, for we come with a special message for you and your people. We are here to tell you of your forefathers and of the restored Gospel of Jesus Christ." We then asked, "Mr. President, do you have a history that gives the origin of your people?" The President replied saying, "We do not; unfortunately, we do not know our origin." We then said to him, "We have a book that purports to be the history of your people. It tells of a great prophet who with his family and others, left Jerusalem 600 years before Christ, and came to this country, this great land of America, known to them as a 'land of promise, choice above all other lands'. This Book of Mormon tells also of the visit of Jesus Christ to this continent, and that He organized His Church and chose His twelve disciples."

After hearing about this book, President Camacho became very interested and anxious, saying he had never heard about the Book of Mormon. He then asked, "Would it be possible for me to get a copy of the Book of Mormon? I have never before heard about it." President Smith then presented President Camacho with a leather bound copy of the Book of Mormon in Spanish. We called attention to the special reference sheet we had posted in the front of the book and observed that he might want to read only the passages listed therein, for lack of time. President Camacho replied, "I shall read the entire book, for this is of great interest to me and to my people."

I was so happy that President Smith could make that trip, for he seemed to enjoy it immensely. As you may know, President Smith had a keen sense of humor. Well, he was determined to climb to the top of the Pyramid of the Sun, so two missionary Elders, one on either side of the President, helped him climb those many steep steps to the top. About half way up President Smith stopped and with a smile looked at first one then the other Elder and said, "Well, I might help one of you up here, but why should I help two of you?" (laughter)

Brethren and Sisters, the work of the Lord is growing rapidly in Mexico and Central America. We have found among those people many who are deeply religious. They love the Book of Mormon, once they receive it and learn what it purports to be, the history of their forefathers. They carry it with them and teach the Gospel from it. The Book of Mormon is a great missionary in Mexico.

Since returning to our home in El Paso, Texas, I have had many Gospel talks with friends, both American and Mexican. Recently the Juarez Rotary Club, (Juarez is just South across the river from El Paso, Texas) of which I was a member before going on my mission to Mexico, invited me to talk to them and give a report of my eight years of absence from home and the club. As I stood before the group I remarked, "Friends of Rotary, I cannot give you a report of what I have been doing in Mexico during the past eight years without saying something about my Church and the things it teaches." They responded saying, "Go ahead, we will be glad to listen to what you have to say." I then told them of our interview with President Manuel Avila Camacho, and of the story of the Book of Mormon, which is the history of their forefathers, and their Bible. Those men listened attentively to all I had to say, and when I had finished my talk, they loudly applauded, as they arose to their feet. The President came up and gave me the traditional Mexican embrace, to show his appreciation. After the meeting several of the club members asked my sons who were present, if it would be possible for them to get one of those Books of Mormon.

I would like to say, brethren and sisters, that it has been my privilege to visit many men in high political positions in Mexico and in Central America. Besides three Presidents of republics, and several cabinet members, I have visited governors of states, mayors of cities, presidents of universities, doctors, lawyers, and business men,—all of whom have received me graciously. Not one has refused to receive me and my message. Each has expressed himself as being grateful to the Lord and to us for bringing such interesting and wonderful messages.

Sunday, April 8Second Day

Recently I met a prominent minister friend of mine, at a local hospital in El Paso. I had gone to the hospital to visit a sick member of my High Priests quorum. The minister was at the hospital to visit one of his church members. The minister and I have been good friends for many years, so when we met he asked, "Bishop Pierce, when did you return home, we are surely glad to have you back with us again. How did you enjoy your years in Mexico?" I will not take time to tell of all the details of our very interesting talk. I finally asked my minister friend if he had ever read the Book of Mormon. He said he had never read it and indicated he didn't care to read it. I told him the Book of Mormon is the Bible of America, and just as much the word of God, as is the Bible, for it is a new witness for Christ. I pointed out the reasonableness of the Americas having their Bible as well as the Eastern Hemisphere, for the peoples of both hemispheres were children of our Heavenly Father. I then suggested he was neglecting his education by not reading the Book of Mormon. I explained to him that the Book of Mormon told of Christ's visit to this the American continent, as well as many other interesting things about the book. He seemed pleased with the truths of the Book of Mormon as I gave them to him, and then he asked, "Where can I get a Book of Mormon? I believe I would like to read that book." I told this minister that he was just as much entitled to the truths of the Gospel as I, and I was sure he would enjoy reading the Book of Mormon. I feel as President George Albert Smith often expressed it, "We cannot force people into doing things, but we may love them into doing what is right, and into righteousness." Ministers are also prospects if only we can touch their hearts with the message of the restored Gospel.

I desire to express my gratitude to the First Presidency and the Council of the Twelve, as well as to others of the General Authorities, for the splendid support and encouragement Sister Pierce and I received from them while we were presiding in the Mexican Mission. We had the honor and blessing of having two members of the First Presidency visit us during our presidency. One visit from President George Albert Smith as already related, and two visits from President David O. McKay. On his visits President McKay did much to encourage and help us, in the planning for the building of meeting houses. When Sister Pierce and I entered the Mission in 1942 we did not have nice meeting houses as we now have. It has been expressed by some of our Anglo-American members that since the Mexican members are poor and accustomed to poorly equipped homes, most any kind of cheap adobe hall is good enough for them as meeting houses. I feel however that since we have the very best philosophy of life in the restored Gospel of Jesus Christ, to give to the Mexican people, why should we not give them meeting houses to correspond in value with the truths of the Gospel we give them.

May God bless us and may we continue to be faithful and true to the Gospel which we have received. Sister Pierce and I are now back in our home in El Paso, following our mission and 45 years of leadership work in the Church. We are enjoying our home and a brief rest. The Lord bless us all, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

President David O. McKay

The Tabernacle Choir will now sing "Crossing the Bar."

The closing prayer will be offered by President Clifton G. M. Kerr, South Bear River Stake, Utah, after which this conference will stand adjourned until two o'clock this afternoon. The proceedings of that session will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City and, by arrangement through KSL, over the stations named in the first session of the Conference. That session will also be televised over the KSL television station, channel 5.

The choir music for this session has been furnished by the Tabernacle Choir, with Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting and Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ.

The Choir will now sing "Crossing the Bar."

The Tabernacle Choir sang, "Crossing the Bar."

President Clifton G. M. Kerr of the South Bear River Stake offered the closing prayer.

Conference adjourned until 2:00 p.m.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON SESSION

Conference reconvened Sunday afternoon, April 8, at 2:00 p.m., with President David O. McKay presiding and Elder J. Reuben Clark, Jr., conducting the services.

Elder J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

This is the fifth session of the One Hundred Twenty-first Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the tabernacle on Temple Square, Salt Lake City, Utah.

President David O. McKay, President of the Twelve, is presiding. He has asked myself, Brother J. Reuben Clark, Jr., of the Council of the Twelve, to conduct the service.

The services will be broadcast in the Assembly Hall and in Barratt Hall over a loud speaking system.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over Station KSL of Salt Lake City, and, by arrangement through KSL, over the stations named in the first session of the conference.

This session will also be televised over the KSL television station, channel 5.

The choir music for this session will be rendered by the Tabernacle Choir, Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting and Elder Alexander Schreiner at the organ.

We will begin the afternoon services by the Tabernacle Choir singing: "God's Eternal Plan."

The opening prayer will be offered by President George L. Reese of the Smithfield Stake, Utah.

Singing by the Tabernacle Choir, "God's Eternal Plan."

President George L. Reese of the Smithfield Stake offered the invocation.

Singing by the Tabernacle Choir, "Fierce Was the Wild Billow."

ELDER DELBERT L. STAPLEY

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My brothers and sisters, I rejoice in being with you in this conference today. I feel very weak and humble in this position, and I do earnestly pray for an interest in your faith and prayers.

I wish to extend my appreciation and gratitude to the great number of you who received me so kindly in this appointment. I appreciate the many prayers that have gone up in my behalf. With you, I feel a keen loss in our beloved President George Albert Smith. Coming from an outside stake, I feel in a measure that I represent the good people who live on the fringe of the Church, who do not always have opportunity to express the love that is in their hearts for these great leaders who depart from among us.

LOVED BY ALL

President George Albert Smith was close to me, he always seemed to be around for some of the important events of my life. I appreciated sincerely his confidence and love, and I rejoice that it was he who called me to this present assignment. As a boy, I remember his coming into my father's and mother's home to attend quarterly conferences representing the General Authorities of the Church. And as I relive those occasions, I rejoice in the goodly effect that he had upon my life. He was loved by all good members of the Church everywhere. He radiated a kindly and lovable spirit. Wherever he went, he brought good will to the Church and its people. As has been said, he was a man without guile. I think he has left with us a gem of counsel as so many times in his talks he has advised us to stay on the Lord's side of the line. That counsel will live throughout eternity in our hearts. A very simple statement, yet one that will produce great good in the lives of individuals if they will but follow it.

The eighth chapter in the leadership of this Church has been closed in the departing of this good man. As I reflect back over the eight spiritual leaders of this people, in my heart I feel that God wanted each of them to lead his people, and that each was specially fitted and endowed for the work of his time and generation. The chapter now closed in the book of the life and activities of President George Albert Smith is a glorious one of great attainment on the part of the Church. He built ably upon the foundation laid, so now this people can continue to go ahead in the accomplishment of the great purposes that God has for his people to accomplish.

GOD AT THE HELM

As I have thought about the past three days and all that has taken place, my testimony has increased in relation to the work we are engaged in. All plans have gone forward for this great general conference of the Church. And almost on the eve of the conference meetings, the Lord took from us our beloved President. At first there was a great feeling of loss, but I don't think ever a feeling of frustration, for the Quorum of the Twelve realized that vested within them were all the powers, authorities, and keys necessary to carry forward the important work of this great Church. Committees were appointed to plan the services that would honor and recognize our beloved prophet-leader. Everything seemed to fit into a proper pattern, the services were held, and our hearts were touched by the beautiful thoughts expressed, the consolation given to members of the family and to all of us who mourn the passing of our President.

Yet the 121st annual conference went on as scheduled and there was a feeling that God was at the helm; that the affairs of his Church, even at such a critical time, were being properly handled. And so we come here today, not disturbed in our faith, not disturbed in the leadership now handling the affairs of the Church. Everything has fit into a pattern, for God established the pattern, and the people know where the authority of leadership is vested when the President prophet-leader is taken. There has hardly been a ripple in the scene of our work or activities, and yet we have paused properly to honor and recognize our great spiritual leader.

Brothers and sisters, this is to me a testimony of the strength and divinity of this work. In my heart, I feel that God is with us and directing his work, that as we go from this conference to our homes, we will not be confused, nor will we feel in our hearts that this work will stop; there will be unity in our faith, we will go away in confidence, knowing that the work of the Lord will continue to go forward and fulfil its destiny in the earth. And as I reflect upon these things, I remember what the Lord said to the Prophet Joseph Smith before the Prophet had been endowed with the priesthood and before the Church itself had been organized. He said that "a great and a marvelous work is about to come forth unto the children of men"; and surely this is a great and marvelous work which we represent. Very shortly after the organization of the Church, less than a year and a half, the Lord speaking to the elders of the Church said:

Wherefore, be not weary in well-doing, for ye are laying the foundation of a great work. And out of small things proceedeth that which is great. (D. & C. 64:33.)

According to the law that God had revealed, and in keeping with the law of the land, this Church was established with only six members. Yet the early rise of the Church from that humble beginning was great and marvelous, the Lord was pleased, and the brethren engaged in the work of the ministry had been very diligent and devoted. The Lord didn't want them to be weary in well-doing because they were laying the foundations of a great work. In the preface to the book of Doctrine and Covenants, the Lord said:

... those to whom these commandments were given, might have power to lay the foundation of this church, and to bring it forth out of obscurity and out of darkness, the only true and living church upon the face of the whole earth. (Ibid., 1:30.)

And then again, a little later the Lord said:

For Zion must increase in beauty, and in holiness; her borders must be enlarged; her stakes must be strengthened; yea, verily I say unto you, Zion must arise and put on her beautiful garments. (Ibid., 82:14.)

MEN OF STRENGTH

We know the Church passed through many trials and many tribulations, that brethren along the way deserted the Prophet, and the Saints suffered mobbings and all types of hardships and privations, but there were in the Church men of strength and character, men who believed in this great latter-day work; and the power of the Lord rested with them. They were undaunted in the face of these difficulties. But the work of the Lord went on, and our people were led here to the valleys of the mountains by President Brigham Young. He had the vision of enlarging the borders of Zion and sent out groups to colonize and settle the fertile valleys of these mountains, both north and south and east and west. Thus the great work of the Church has continued to grow, even until the present time, and each of our prophet leaders took his place, gave of himself and of the talents that God had blessed him with to establish firmly the foundations of this work. And as surely as we are here today, it has been brought forth out of obscurity and out of darkness, and stands as a beacon of light upon the hill to all peoples and nations of the earth. We have witnessed in the progress of the Church, a great enlarged program to take care of our people. This program encircles the entire life of the Church membership and gives them every opportunity for growth, for development, and for training. Surely in this work, the Lord has been with his people; so today with pride in our progress we claim almost sixteen hundred wards and branches of the Church, 184 stakes, scattered up and down this western area with some to the east of us. We also have many missions established throughout the world, and with all our program and activity, the Church itself is known far and wide and assuming its place of leadership and of power in shaping the lives of men and of nations.

PROSELYTING IN STAKES

And it seems to me, my brothers and sisters, that the Lord in this enlargement of our borders has been with this people, and has so arranged it that we are now established in the population centers of this western area. We have built our places of worship, our places of recreation, and in all this building, and in all this planning, and in all this preparation, the leadership of the Church under the inspiration of God have not had in mind only that we should take care of our own, but that the facilities we have provided should be made available to our friends. We have been counseled to warn our neighbors, not to hide our light under a bushel, but to place it where it can be seen of men, that they may have the opportunities and the blessings this Church affords and that you and I enjoy.

And it does seem to me, brothers and sisters, in this present critical situation where it is impossible to send all the missionaries into foreign fields we need to send, that we must take advantage of the proselyting opportunity that is ours in the branches, wards, and stakes of the Church; and through our stake missionary program make available to those who are investigating, the facilities of our Church, that the children of our friends and investigators can come to Primary, to Sunday School, the young men and women to Mutual, the mothers to Relief Society, and all to our sacrament meetings. If we as God's people would warn our neighbors, and if we would be friends with our neighbors, we will invite them to come with us and investigate this thing we know to be true and of God.

INVITATION TO COME AND SEE

I think it was only a year ago that President George Albert Smith from this pulpit said that we should invite our friends and our associates to come and see. There is much in the Church for people to come and see, and if we who are members of the Church would live as we should live, we would never be ashamed of that which our friends and our associates do see. Not so long ago in attending a conference, I heard a young lady missionary in making her report say that in her missionary experience she felt the Spirit of the Lord working with her. And I thought what a grand thing it would be if all people of the Church felt that in their callings and appointments the Spirit of the Lord was working with them. I am just as confident as I can be that regardless of our calling and appointments or holding the priesthood, we who are the men of the Church, that unless we have the Holy Spirit of the Lord abiding with us in our work and ministry, we will never accomplish the purposes of God. We need the Holy Spirit; we need its power and its gifts and its influences with us in our callings and offices, if we carry out successfully the responsibility associated with those callings and appointments.

I have a testimony of this work; I know it is true. I hope and pray, brothers and sisters, that we will devote ourselves to its high responsibilities. It is the most important thing we have at hand to do. May we be appreciative of the Church, of its leadership, of its doctrines, and all the blessings we enjoy, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER ALBERT E. BOWEN

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

Naturally the thoughts of the speakers at this conference have turned to President Smith, so recently departed. Mine run the same way. If he were standing here today where I stand, I can easily conjecture him as pleading with the people to live their religion, that is, to live in practice up to the high standards of what they have been taught.

JUDGED ACCORDING TO WORKS

I should like, if I may, to say a little about that, with particular reference to the personal responsibility of each individual for what he turns out to be.

It was permitted to John the Revelator to glimpse the future as the revelation of things to come passed in panoramic view before his vision. Among other things, he says:

And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; . . . and they were judged every man according to their works. (Rev. 20:12.)

Two lines of thought closely related and of tremendous consequence to all of us are stimulated by this graphic statement. First, there is implicit in it the thesis that death is not the end of man. Those marshalled for rating had died, for it was the dead whom John saw. Second, their classification and recompense depended upon their own deeds, what they had done while they yet lived. It is this second feature of the vision to which I wish to direct attention.

As the hosts from the dead passed before the throne, they were judged every man, according to his works. That is justice in the highest sense of the term. It is judgment founded in righteousness.

It reaches completely up to the perfect ideal. No fault can be found in it, for every man is to be classified and rewarded on the basis of his own individual performance. It has always been the conception of enlightened nations of free men, particularly those whose laws are rooted in the Christian code, that only to that degree in which judgments have embraced righteousness have they approximated justice. Long ago the Prophet Amos coupled the two together in their proper relationship, and no right-thinking man has ever been able, or tried to sever the bond which inseparably unites them.

Amos admonished his nation:

. . . let judgment roll down as waters, and righteousness as a mighty stream. (Amos 5:24.)

MEANING OF RIGHTEOUSNESS

I hesitate to use the word righteousness because it has come to have attached to it the malodor of hypocrisy. Too commonly, one who is spoken of as possessed of the quality of righteousness is derisively sneered at, as if the term characterized him as a pretender, a self-exalter, one who arrogates to himself superior virtues, as exemplified in the parable of Jesus about the Pharisee who publicly thanked God that he was not as other men and loudly proclaimed his own virtues. Jesus said that the publican who, standing apart, alone, humbly prayed God to be merciful to him a sinner would be justified before the other.

No sense of opprobrium properly attaches to the term righteousness. It signifies that which is in accordance with right, or characterized by uprightness or morality. There is no other word to take its place. I am therefore obliged to use it and trust to its being understood in its proper sense.

John's statement about the basis of judgment must be read as affirming that there are things which everybody is expected to do. The promise of rewards based upon works presupposes that there are requirements prescribed. Where there is no law, there can be no judgment under the law is a principle of divine as well as secular governance. The prescribed requirements, naturally, are to be sought in the teachings of Jesus for John was his disciple. And by his revelation, John tells us, he was shown the things he saw.

OBSERVANCE OF LAW

On his final visit to the disciples before his ascension, as has before been stated today, Jesus commissioned them to carry his message to all people, telling those whom they proselyted to observe all things whatsoever he had commanded them. Here, then, is the law on the basis of which all are to be judged. So far as I can discern, there is not one thing in all that Jesus taught that would not, if practised, promote righteousness and justice in the earth. Nobody would be harmed by universal conformance to every rule governing human conduct which he promulgated. One cannot think that it was ever intended that man should be consigned to live perpetually in this earth amid the carnage and bestiality and bickering and hatred and cruelty; the plundering of one by another; the deception and greed; the striving for advantage of one over another; the despoiling of fellow creatures; the stifling and crushing out of all sentiments of mercy and human kindness by the violence of brute force and by submerging righteousness and everything that makes life beautiful, under the vile, putrid, hideous, and ugly flocks of vice which swirl over the land. All this and all the groveling ugliness of human degradation paraded before us in the daily press are in direct antagonism to the benevolence and brotherhood, the worth and dignity of the human soul with its God-given right to be free from the bondage of oppression; the admonitions to love and mercy, to be pure in heart, and to hunger and thirst after righteousness, expounded as guides to righteousness and abundant living by the Christ.

The other day J. Edgar Hoover told the Senate committee investigating syndicated crime in America that gambling could be cleansed out at once if officials in states and cities would honestly enforce the law, instead of conniving with those who are willing to pay the price of protection for the violation of the law. Following gambling would go the whole brood of loathsome evils spawned by it. If that could be done, how infinitely more could the earth be cleansed by a simple observance of the laws laid down as the basis for divine judgment and justice.

BE YE THEREFORE PERFECT

On another occasion, even before his crucifixion, holding up to view the mission and purpose of life, the goal of man's striving, his ultimate destiny, the Lord said, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." (Matt. 5:48.) This terse sentence epitomizes all that Jesus taught about the mission of life and the destiny of man. It seems on its face a hard saying, and many have felt that it sets a task beyond all possibility of accomplishing, and that there is no use trying; that it projects an ideal so utterly unrealistic as to make it of little value. There might be some validity to this objection, if life is to be thought of only in terms of mortal probation. To get full value of the admonition we need a broader understanding of the work of life.

President Brigham Young let some light in on that in one of his sermons. After quoting the saying, he remarked: "If the . . . passage I have quoted is not worded to our understanding, we can alter the phraseology of the sentence, and say: 'Be ye perfect as ye can,' for that is all we can do."

"When we are doing as well as we know how in the sphere and station which we occupy here, we are justified in the justice, righteousness, mercy, and judgment that go before the Lord of heaven and earth. We are as justified as the angels who go before the throne of God. The sin that will cleave to all the posterity of Adam and Eve is that they have not done as well as they know how." (J. D. 2:129.)

RIGHTEOUS JUDGMENT

That puts the admonition to be perfect on a practical working basis. It is within the range of the possibility of attainment. It tells us, too, something about how high a prerogative rendering judgment is. It requires for righteous dispensation of justice divine omniscience. That is perhaps why God reserved judgment to himself. They whom John saw stood before God.

He would have complete knowledge of all the essential facts, which mortals rendering human judgments perhaps never have, and which so often results in miscarriage of justice. God would have complete understanding of all the influences that have gone into the shapative have always been inspired of God. I am glad that I was born in ing of the life to be judged; the knowledge possessed and the opportunity for knowing; the capacity for understanding what he had been taught; the kind of association and society he has the capacity to mingle congenially with; and from all the manifold factors involved, put the one judged where he belongs, which is what final judgment really is.

PROGRESSIVE BEINGS

This interpretation introduces the principle that it is not intended that we shall accomplish everything in this life, but that we are expected to be progressive beings, growing toward our final destiny. But that principle in no way excuses us from doing the best we can, or from acquiring all the knowledge that we have capacity and opportunity to assimilate as we go along. We have some very specific teachings about that. The scriptures say:

Whatever principle of intelligence we attain unto in this life, it will rise with us in the resurrection.

And if a person gains more knowledge and intelligence in this life through his diligence and obedience than another, he will have so much the advantage in the world to come. (D. & C. 130:18-19.)

Intelligence has been interpreted as the ability to comprehend and respond to light and truth. But it is clear from what has been quoted that knowledge and intelligence are congenial companions; and moreover, that to achieve them requires industry, study, diligence, and obedience. Their acquisition is governed by the universal law of reward for effort. They do not come as gratuitous bestowals upon the idler or the indifferent.

EXCELLENCE THROUGH EFFORT

This is the point I wanted especially to emphasize here today, and it is the reason, perhaps, for all that I have said before. There is nothing in all the history and experience of the race, nothing in the teachings of Jesus, nothing in the doctrines of the Church, which warrants the assumption that excellence may be attained without effort, either in the spiritual realm or the temporal domain; or that high exaltation may be achieved by a mere profession of faith, or passive adherence to a creed or body of doctrines. Jesus made that abundantly clear in saying:

Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my father which is in heaven. (Matt. 7:21.)

It is to be noted that the teachings of Jesus pertained mostly to this life. From time to time he gave us glimpses of a glorious future. But these were conditioned upon what we do here, just as by John's revelation the dead were judged by the works they had done while they lived. We are not here just to prepare to die, but rather to live, and to use all our powers to perfect ourselves by acquiring knowledge, developing our talents, building virtue unto ourselves, conquering evil, by practising the things we know. The progress we make here determines our status hereafter.

A PRACTICAL RELIGION

We have a very practical religion. It pertains to our lives now. And the reward of observance of the law is not altogether postponed to a future on the other side of the grave. Building up the kingdom involves some very practical things. It is not altogether concerned with the non-material lying out in the ethereal realm. The building of meetinghouses, places of worship, schools, temples, for example, clearly is for spiritual purposes. But they involve a large element of the material. They are essential to the building up of the kingdom of God. And where would you classify the beautifying of your home; the making of refined surroundings? It is necessary to provide the things that sustain life, to master the arts and crafts and trades that meet the needs of progress and improvement. I do not think I can find the line that divides the spiritual from the temporal.

Nobody in this life can gain proficiency in all the realms of human knowledge or skills or endeavors, yet they complement each other, and each is essential to the completeness of the whole. By the cooperative endeavor of all in an organized body, each doing what his talent suits him for, the kingdom can be prepared. I suppose the rightness of what either one does depends upon the purpose or the motive which stimulates the pursuit, whether that be the promoting of good among men, the furtherance of righteousness, or whether it be the gratification of a selfish ambition, to be achieved without regard to consequences to others, or its influence on human progress or improvement.

GROWTH THROUGH ACTIVITY

Knowledge lying dormant and not employed to useful purposes is of very little value. One may attain membership in the Church, for example, by complying with all the requisite initiatory ordinances, but if he stops there, as some do, he may not assume that his salvation is assured, no matter how correct in the abstract his personal conduct may be. One must progress or retrograde. One cannot stand still. Activity is the law of growth, and growth, progress, is the law of life. Obedience to the governing law, cooperation with others, helping them to build up the kingdom of God is indispensable.

There are, properly speaking, no laymen in this Church. There is labor for all, and labor, toil, effort in harmony and accord with established law is the only known road to progress. Salvation is a relative term, admitting of varying degrees. There can be no other meaning to John's revelation that "each will be rewarded according to his works." The slothful or indolent or indifferent can expect no high rating, no matter how voluble in professions of faith, or how profuse they may be in protestations of devotion to their creeds.

And I humbly pray that each of us as we go from here will go with a full realization that whatever we hope for, whatever we aspire to achieve will be dependent upon our willingness to pay the price in individual endeavor. We may not lean upon any other human being but can be aided by the help we receive from God if we serve him faithfully and keep his commandments every day, which I pray we may do, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

The Tabernacle Choir and the congregation joined in singing the hymn, "We Thank Thee, O God, For A Prophet."

ELDER HENRY D. MOYLE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My brethren and sisters, I feel deeply grateful for the experiences that have been mine the past four years, and I sorrow with you in the passing of President George Albert Smith. It was he who advised me four years ago of my call to the Twelve, and no man could have shown more love or affection or consideration for a new member of the Quorum than did President Smith. If I were to be called upon today to express the chief characteristic of the brethren with whom I associate, I should say that it is that virtue which has been so properly credited to President George Albert Smith.

There is an eternal truth, the verity of which I am certain, that love begets love, and as we love one another, our ability to love increases. This has been my experience as I have labored so closely during the past four years with these brethren whom I love so dear-

Sunday, April 8Second Day

ly. I have been conscious in my own life that as the days and the months and the years have gone by, my ability to love my fellow men has correspondingly increased.

PRESIDENT SMITH'S EXAMPLE

I doubt that I have ever in my life seen an example of the love and devotion of one man for another more than that exhibited by President George Albert Smith for President George F. Richards. As our boat docked in the harbor of Honolulu last August, word was brought on board that President George F. Richards had that morning passed away. To me, it was a testimony of the virtue of our great past President to see the love and the affection that he bore for his companion of more than forty years in the Presiding councils of this Church. His heart was filled with grief, and though he was not well, even then, and certainly not physically strong, his first impulse, his first impression was to fly home. He turned to me and said, "Brother Moyle, don't you think we ought to get off the boat and fly right back to attend the funeral and to pay our respects to the life's work of President Richards?" Well, it seemed to be wisdom to advise the President to conserve his strength to remain and perform the special mission upon which he had embarked and had so graciously taken me with him. Then, finally, when word arrived from his good Counselors here at home, he was satisfied that it was the wise and the discreet thing to do to stay there. But that did not minimize the love or the affection that President Smith bore President Richards in the sorrow he felt at his passing.

I want to bear testimony today that it has been my choice privilege during these recent past years to become intimately acquainted with two of the choice sons of our Heavenly Father who have now been called home. I don't know that a father could have shown a son, even his favored son, more affection than President Richards bestowed upon me during the years that I had the privilege to serve under him in the Quorum of the Twelve.

LOVE AMONG BRETHREN

I want to say today, my brethren and sisters, to supplement what Brother Cowley said this morning, that just as certain as it is necessary to have a Quorum of the Twelve upon the earth, so it is necessary that that quorum should be comprised of men who love one another. I bear this humble testimony to you today that the men who constitute the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints are men who are devoted, not only to the service to which they have been called, but also to one another. I was grateful for the words of Brother Cowley this morning when he referred to our meeting in the temple Thursday. A like number of men could not be gathered anywhere in this world under any other circumstances and find in their hearts the love and the devotion, the loyalty for one another that exists in this, the Presiding Council of this Church today.

INTEREST IN INDIVIDUALS

I was very greatly impressed when President Smith became president of this Church. One of his early responsibilities as president was to attend a welfare meeting of the General Committee on Friday morning. His conduct there was indicative of the life that he had lived, the service that he had rendered his people, the knowledge that he had of the individual members of this Church. That first morning a case came before us for his consideration. It was the application for assistance of a humble Saint. He had come from a country in Europe, had not been here long, unknown to most of us although some of us had labored as missionaries in that some country. In the presentation of his case we were just a little impersonal and had not particularly emphasized his name. But the mere mention of it caused President Smith to ask if that man was not a former resident of Berlin. And when we told him that he was, he said, "How can we refrain from giving consideration to his case? His generosity in the Church deserves our help. It was my privilege to eat at that man's table." We found out later that he and his family had saved of their earnings for a week and had little or nothing to eat for that week, practically fasted in order that they might have the means with which to spread what they thought was an appropriate dinner before a servant of God who had been sent into their midst, one of the Quorum of the Twelve, George Albert Smith. I tell you, his interest in the people of this Church individually can hardly be excelled. He was interested in the smallest details.

CARE OF CHURCH FUNDS

I just want to bear witness to one other incident. On one of the Friday mornings when we were presenting our usual matters of business, there were some items that involved not more than five dollars or ten dollars or fifteen dollars, and the question was raised as to whether it was necessary to bring such trivial items to the attention of the First Presidency for their approval. The matter was taken under consideration, and I confess I expected that there might be some limit below which the Welfare Committee might act without bringing it for the final approval of the Presidency and our advisers on the Friday morning. But no, when the next Friday came, President Smith said, "We'll continue to follow the rule which you have always followed, and there will be no item too small for the consideration of the brethren here at this Friday morning meeting."

Now, when we have men of that kind entrusted to the high offices of this Church, there are none of us that need to worry about the manner in which the Church and its affairs are taken care of. The meticulous care with which the funds of this Church are guarded is a revelation to me, because that kind of care does not exist in the ordinary businesses of mankind in the world.

A GREAT MISSIONARY

President Smith was a great missionary. As we were going over to Hawaii on the boat, on the night of the captain's dinner President Smith felt that he should do something for the captain and not merely be the recipient of some favor from him. And so, as we went to the dining room that evening, President Smith had in his hand one of his favorite copies of The Improvement Era. It was, of course, a formal affair at the captain's table; the ladies and the men were dressed in formal attire. It took a man of the courage of President Smith to do what he did, because before that dinner was over he had gone to the captain of that ship and given to him The Improvement Era and paid his respects to him and his guests.

There were some of us on board the vessel who felt that, had the captain known the precious soul that his ship bore, he would have done him the honor of having called upon him and would have had his table graced by the presence of one of God's anointed. The fact that he didn't did not prevent President Smith from proceeding to give to that captain the missionary message which The Improvement Era contained.

God bless the memory of these brethren, and may that same spirit continue to be with the Twelve and with all of the General Authorities. May it continue to reach out as it does into the stakes and into the wards of this Church, that we may in very deed be a people known the world over for the love and the affection and the loyalty we have for one another, I pray humbly in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER STEPHEN L RICHARDS

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I'll try three sermons in three minutes. First, a tithing is not a fiftieth or a thirtieth or a twentieth; a tithing is a tenth.

Second, the inflated dollar is worth a hundred cents for one purpose: paying debts.

Third, I knew a missionary once who had marvelous success in the mission field. I asked him something about his method. Among other things he told me that whenever he went to talk to people, however much they tried to get him to digress from his main theme—talk about politics, talk about the weather, current affairs, the crops—he said, "I always politely told the people that I was sent out to talk the gospel to them. I never had time for anything else."

TALENT FOR FRIENDSHIP

We've been talking about a man during this conference who had a remarkable gift and talent for friendship. I've been with him on many occasions when he met some old friends or business acquaintances. He always had the courage to say, in substance, "John, how's your faith? How are you feeling about the Church?" And I've seen many a man blush a little, stammer a little, and yet be willing to talk with him about his faith and about the Church.

There was probably never a time, my brethren, when we so much needed men who could go out and cultivate a talent for friendship and talk frankly to their own associates in the priesthood who have become careless and delinquent, to their business friends and to their neighbors, about the gospel and give to them the great blessing which we ourselves enjoy. May we make note of the opportunities that lie ahead of us, I pray, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

ELDER ALMA SONNE

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve

My brethren and sisters, I trust I may have the benefit of your faith and prayers during the few minutes I shall stand before you. First of all, I want to express my gratitude for the strength, the comfort, the consolation, and the increased confidence which have come to the members of the Church in the passing of President George Albert Smith. I think, in one way or another, he must have touched all of us more or less closely during his entire ministry.

SERMONS OF PRESIDENT SMITH

I remember as a boy in my teens I heard President Smith for the first time deliver a sermon in the Logan Tabernacle. The theme of his discourse was "Observance of the Sabbath Day." It was a timely message because at that time, in Logan, particularly, there was some controversy as to what extent Sunday amusements should be commercialized and carried on. President Smith's sermon was powerful. He said, among other things, "Sabbath observance is one of the great pillars of civilization." I have thought of it many times, and I am sure as I have reflected upon it that President Smith was right in his conclusions.

Years later I heard him discuss before an audience in the same place the Ten Commandments. As he often did, he referred to each one of these Commandments, and after he had made his comments, he turned to the audience and said, "You may break these commandments if you want to, but if you do, they will break you." I have never forgotten those words.

And so, President Smith has brought a vital message into the lives of each of us. When I was first called to the position in the Church which I now hold, one of the first assignments given me was to the St. Johns and the Snowflake stakes in Arizona. To my surprise and to my delight, President George Albert Smith was to be my companion. We journeyed together to St. Johns, where the conference was held. During the afternoon session, a telegram came to President Smith, who was at my side. He opened it and read it, folded it up, put it in his pocket, and when the session was ended, he came to me and said, "I have been called back to Salt Lake City. It will be necessary for you to fill the appointments which I have made." He thereupon handed me a little sheet of paper, and on it was a schedule of meetings which he had arranged in the little villages and settlements around St. Johns and Snowflake. I mention this fact only because it illustrates the zeal, the energy, and the diligence with which President Smith assumed his responsibilities in the ministry.

"GIVE THE LORD A CHANCE"

When I left for Europe to take on a great responsibility, one I felt that was altogether too great for me to assume, President Smith called me to his office. He gave me only a very brief admonition, and I suspect he has given it to many. Said he, "Remember, Brother Sonne, give the Lord a chance." I believe that admonition remained with me throughout my mission over in Europe. I'm not sure that I needed it so much, for I was very humble and prayerful in the work I had to do, but the advice was so good and so sound, that I never forgot it. And I feel what success came from our endeavors over in Europe during a crucial time was due in large measure to the help which we received from our Heavenly Father.

And so I hope and pray that the members of the Church and particularly those who bear the Holy Priesthood, will put forth the same effort which our great leader has demonstrated in his life.

DEVOTION OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS

I recall at this moment a testimony which I heard from a young missionary in the French Mission. He had but recently arrived in the field. As he stood up, he said something like this: "My grandparents joined the Church in Southampton, England. Soon after being baptized, they emigrated to Nauvoo, Illinois. They bought a home and expected to live there indefinitely. But," said the missionary, "a mob burned the home, and they were left practically destitute. Then my grandparents loaded all of their earthly possessions on a handcart and pushed it over the plains to the Rocky Mountains. I thank God," said this young man, "for the faith and the integrity, the determination and the conviction, which prompted my grandparents to be thus faithful to their trust." Such devotion has been characteristic of the Latter-day Saints and their leaders from the beginning.

I rejoice, brethren and sisters, in my testimony of the truth. I know God has spoken from the heavens and established his Church upon the earth. We have received a great shock during the past few days; we'll receive other shocks, in all probability, but I tell you this Church will never receive a setback. It will go forward in the future as it has in the past, and truth and righteousness will triumph in the earth. I pray that it may be so, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER ANTOINE R. IVINS

Of the First Council of the Seventy

My brethren and sisters, I crave an interest in your faith and prayers as I add my testimony to those which have been borne to us during this conference. I can in all propriety say that I conform fully to all the tributes that have been paid to our late President. There are many of you who knew him better than I did and more intimately, but I did know him and his sterling qualities. I have been on trips with him in the reorganization of stakes and have met him on many other occasions rather closely and have felt his love.

I knew his father, as a matter of fact I slept on the sands of Mexico with his father and prepared his breakfast and dinner for him along with my uncle, President Grant, who recently passed away. I got out of my bed many times for those brethren and have had more or less intimate association with them. I want to bear testimony to the fact that in my experience, their purpose and motive has always been inspired of God. I am glad that I was born in the Church because I don't know what might have happened to me had I not been. I am glad for the testimony which my father inspired in me as to the truth of the gospel and for the example of service which he gave to me.

POWER IN GOSPEL

In the month of June it will be twenty years since I read in the newspapers in Honolulu that I was appointed to preside over the Mexican Mission and to become one of the First Council of the Seventy. And in that twenty years I believe it has become no easier for me to stand here and bear my testimony, not that I don't have a testimony, but because I realize the importance of bearing that testimony to you brethren, and that it will fall flat unless I can gain the Spirit of God in it. There is, in the gospel of Jesus Christ, a power that you can't realize any other place. It breaks down all the barriers of nationality, of race hatreds, and all the enmities that go between peoples because of their selfishness, once we accept it into our lives and apply it. It is that love which was exemplified in the life of our President which makes it possible for us to receive unto us the various nations of the world and forget the differences of nationality. I have had the experience in my life (I was going to say my short life, but it's three score and ten next month), of laboring with the Mexicans, and the Maoris; the Hawaiians and the Filipinos; the Chinese, the Japanese, and the Koreans; the Portuguese and the Spanish, as well as with some of the other peoples, and I have seen them come together and affiliate in a brotherhood that you can't realize out of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Because of its wonderful effect upon people, because of its essentiality to their exaltation, we have a tremendous obligation to carry that message to the world.

ESPECIAL RESPONSIBILITY OF SEVENTIES

I stand before you as a representative of the group in the Melchizedek Priesthood which has that especial responsibility. Right now, because of the national emergency that we are facing, the flow of young men into the mission field has been very, very greatly reduced. And as I think of it, quite naturally, I think of an army of twenty thousand seventies, every one of whom is pledged to the service of his God and of his fellow men, and I wonder if we can get from that group of men now the recruits that we shall need to carry on this missionary work. It is true that there are many men in the field at the present time, but they are coming home rapidly, and their replacements are not going out. You brethren of the seventies, think of it, and if you can arrange your affairs so as to do it, tell your bishops that you are ready, that you would like to go. Now, if you love your fellows in the spirit in which we have been talking during this conference, you'll make an effort to do that very thing, for that is your calling as long as you are in the seventies quorum in the Melchizedek Priesthood, to bear testimony to the restoration of the gospel of Jesus Christ and to carry that testimony to people who haven't yet heard it.

TESTIMONY

I bear you my testimony that I know the gospel is true. I feel without the shadow of a doubt the reality of God our Heavenly Father and Jesus Christ, which is the departing point between us and other Christian denominations. They must be taught the personality of God, the authority and the restoration of the priesthood, and there is nobody else to do it. Now, you seventies, will you come and help us; I pray that God will give you the spirit and open up the way for you to do it, which I do in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER CORNELIUS ZAPPEY

Former President of the Netherlands Mission

Six months ago, my brothers and sisters, I was standing in the aisle, behind the rope held by the usher, wishing, as many of us have done, that all Stake Presidents and Bishops would not be on time.

Standing in the end of the row two sisters behind me were speaking the Scandinavian language. It did not take long before they were in front of me, and in some way, soon they were at the very front, but while they were yet in front of me speaking their native tongue, a brother in front of them turned around and asked: "Swensk?" and the sisters said "Ja, Ja." This brother, putting his hand upon his chest said, "Norsk." It did not take long until the sisters were in front of this brother also. (Laughter) I never before understood better and more fully the statement that "The race is not to the swift but to the one that endureth to the end" than I did at that time.

But while the sisters were working their way to the front, right up to the usher holding the rope, lo and behold I recognized in the brother assisting the usher a German brother and when the rope was taken down and I with the rest had captured one of those coveted places I discovered in front of me an English brother. Then when all the congregation arose in honor of the Prophet of the Living God appearing on the stand I could not help but notice President Clark also, who, as I remembered at that time, came from English parentage, and there came President David O. McKay who has said to me so often, "Son, do not be ashamed of being born in Holland, my parents were born in Scotland and England." I also saw Elder Petersen come and Elder Widtsoe who was born in Norway. Then as I sat down I realized more than ever before that I was but a Holland boy who came to Zion and became an adopted son of this country over forty years ago, when I was but a youth of about 17 years of age.

Brothers and sisters then and there it was as if I heard Micah say as Isaiah had said before him:

And it shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it.

And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob."

They would not come because they would not know the Lord, the God of Jacob for Isaiah and Micah said they would declare: "And he will teach us of his ways."

When I read the sermon by President Clark, in the Deseret News—I suppose we all take it—when I read it in the Deseret News at the headquarters of the Mission, telling of "The Last Wagon," I cried like a baby. Now, every day, "last wagons" are pulling in, and why is it that when the emigrants come in at the stations or by bus line, why is it that the first thing they ask is, "Where is the temple?" In the last days, brothers and sisters, the House of the Lord is established in the tops of the mountains, and many are flowing unto it, "and many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob."

Sunday, April 8Second Day

May I in conclusion ask this of the mothers and fathers of Zion: Will you teach your boys and girls, your young ones and your old ones too—will you teach them all, that God really lives, that Jesus is really the Christ, the Son of God; that it is not only a beautiful story but that He really arose the third day; and that all those who lead us have the Priesthood of God, yes even the keys thereof. Oh, teach them these things. And may I ask this, as one born of an infidel father but of a faithful mother: teach them by day and by night the revelation, the greatest one to me: That God really appeared and His Son, the Redeemer, to Joseph the Prophet and although the world, kings and potentates might not send bejeweled gifts to our leaders to curry their favor, they are and always shall be living servants of God. I testify of it in the name of Christ, the Redeemer, the Son of God. Amen.

Elder J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

We have just listened to Elder Cornelius Zappey, former President of the Netherlands Mission.

The closing song, by the Tabernacle Choir, will be "Inflam-matus." The solo will be sung by Sister Ewan Harbrecht.

The closing prayer will be offered by President Lester H. Belliston of the Juab Stake, Utah, after which this conference will stand adjourned until ten o'clock tomorrow morning when we will meet in this building in Solemn Assembly.

The Deseret News this morning—I hope you all take it—describes the way in which the seating will be carried on tomorrow morning. The body of the hall will be reserved for the priesthood—the patriarchs here (pointing to the south of the stand), the seventies on the main floor under the north gallery, the elders under the gallery in the south part of the building, the high priests here (pointing to the center part of the hall), the bishops near the back and the Aaronic Priesthood at the rear. The wives of the Authorities are sitting over here on the stand at Brother Clark's left. The balance of the meeting house will be for the other membership of the Church.

The singing for the service will be by the congregation.

The Deseret Sunday School Union Conference will convene in this building at seven o'clock tonight. All Sunday School workers will wish to be in attendance.

The choir music for today's sessions of the conference has been furnished by the Tabernacle Choir, with Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting and Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ for the morning session and Elder Alexander Schreiner at the organ for the afternoon session.

Again we wish to express to the Tabernacle Choir our grateful appreciation for the music they have given us today. But more than that, we wish to give them our grateful appreciation and our thanks for the great service which they are doing as a missionary unit in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The service which they render is beyond all power of calculation.

The Choir will now sing.

Singing by the Choir, "Inflamatus," solo by Sister Ewan Harbrecht.

The closing prayer was offered by President Lester H. Belliston of the Juab Stake.

Conference adjourned until Monday, April 9, at 10:00 a.m.

CONCLUDING SESSION SOLEMN ASSEMBLY

The final session of the great Conference convened in the Tabernacle at 10:00 a.m., Monday, April 9, with President David O. McKay presiding and conducting the services.

President David O. McKay

This is the sixth session of the One Hundred Twenty-first Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the tabernacle on Temple Square, Salt Lake City, in a formal Solemn Assembly of the body of the Church, to express the voice of the Church in a sustaining vote for a new President of the Church.

These services will be broadcast in the Assembly Hall and in Barratt Hall over a loud speaking system and by television.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over Station KSL at Salt Lake City and, presumably by arrangement through KSL, over the stations named in the first session of this conference.

This session will also be televised over the KSL television station, channel 5.

The singing will be by the congregation.

We will open by singing the hymn, "O, Ye Mountains High." Elder J. Spencer Cornwall will lead us. Immediately following the singing the invocation will be offered by Elder Albert E. Bowen of the Council of the Twelve.

Singing by the congregation, "O, Ye Mountains High."

The opening prayer was offered by Elder Albert E. Bowen.

President David O. McKay

Elder J. Spencer Cornwall, the leader of the Tabernacle Choir, will now lead the congregation in singing, "Praise To The Man Who Communed With Jehovah." If the students of the Brigham Young University are in session in the Joseph Smith Memorial Building, we shall be pleased to have them join in singing, and we shall be pleased to have any other group of individuals listening in also participate in the exercises.

Singing by the congregation, "Praise To the Man."

President David O. McKay

We shall now ask President J. Reuben Clark, Jr., to conduct the exercises pertaining to the reorganization of the First Presidency and the sustaining vote of all the other General Authorities and General Officers of the Church.

ELDER J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

This, brothers and sisters, is a very solemn occasion. We so approach it and should so conduct it. It will take quite a time, but if we are in the frame of mind and spirit which we should be in, I am sure it will not be tedious.

We shall follow the exact proceedings that were followed in connection with the installation of President George Albert Smith. The same script will be used except for the necessary changes in names.

We are met in the tabernacle on Temple Square, Salt Lake City, in a formal Solemn Assembly of the body of the Church to express the voice of the Church in a first sustaining vote for a new President of the Church. This proceeding is in accordance with the practice of the Church from the first sustaining vote cast by a General Conference for President Taylor, until the present time.

The Priesthood of the Church, in so far as the building can accommodate them, is seated in the Tabernacle by Priesthood quorums.

The First Presidency and the Council of the Twelve, with their Assistants, the Patriarch to the Church, the Presidents of the First Council of Seventy, and the Presiding Bishopric occupy their usual seats on the Tabernacle stand.

The Patriarchs of the Church occupy the seats to the south of the stand, both lower seats within the railing and those on the stand level.

The High Priests of the Church, including Presidents of Stakes and their Counselors, the High Councilmen, the Presidencies of quorums, the quorum members, the ward bishoprics, occupy the center of the building on the main floor, as far to the eastward as the galleries. The ward bishoprics are seated just in front of the east gallery.

The Seventies occupy the north part of the building on the main floor under the north gallery, including the seats inside the railing to the north of the stand.

The Elders occupy the south part of the building on the main floor under the galleries.

The Lesser Priesthood (Priests, Teachers, and Deacons) occupy the seats on the main floor, just back of the bishoprics, under the gallery on the east.

The general membership of the Church occupy the rest of the building.

The voting will be by Priesthood quorums first, and then by the Conference assembly.

The quorums and groups of quorums will vote in the following order:

1. The First Presidency.
2. The Quorum of the Twelve.
3. The Patriarchs.
4. The High Priests, including the Assistants to the Twelve, the Presidents of Stakes and their Counselors, the High Councilmen, Presidencies of quorums, quorum members, the Presiding Bishopric, and Ward Bishoprics.
5. The Seventies.
6. The Elders.
7. The Lesser Priesthood (Priests, Teachers, and Deacons).
8. The whole congregation here assembled, including the Priesthood.

The voting will be in the following manner:

As each quorum or group is called, they will be asked to vote to sustain the officer proposed: Those voting will when called upon, arise to their feet. When the affirmative vote is called for, those so voting will bring their right arms to the square to witness to the Lord that they sustain the officer for whom they are voting. They will then drop their hands. Then those opposing will be asked to bring their right hands to the square to bear witness to the Lord that they are not willing to sustain the officer whom they are called upon to sustain.

When both affirmative and negative votes are cast, the members of the quorum will resume their seats.

All of the quorums will vote in this manner.

Every one is perfectly free to vote as he wishes. There is no compulsion whatsoever in this voting. When you vote affirmatively you make a solemn covenant with the Lord that you will sustain, that is, give your full loyalty and support, without equivocation or reservation, to the officer for whom you vote.

After all the quorums have so voted, a vote will be called of the whole congregation, those bearing the priesthood and those not bearing it. All will arise. Those voting to sustain will raise their right hands to the square, to witness that they sustain the officers for whom they vote. After they lower their hands the opposing vote will be called for and will be manifested by raising the right hand to the square.

The Officers so to be voted for by quorums are the following:

The President of the Church.

The First Counselor to the President of the Church.

The Second Counselor to the President of the Church.

The President of the Quorum of the Twelve.

Monday, April 9Third Day

The Council of the Twelve.

The Patriarch to the Church.

The Sustaining of the Counselors in the Presidency, the Council of the Twelve, and the Patriarch, as Prophets, Seers, and Revelators to the Church.

After the vote by quorums to sustain these officers, the rest of the General Authorities, the General Officers of the Church, and the General Auxiliary Officers of the Church will be sustained by voting as in the ordinary General Conference. This is in accordance with the procedure set by President John Taylor.

Please be ready to begin voting. Only Church members are entitled to vote.

Only one quorum, or group of quorums, as the case may be, will stand at a time in voting by quorums. Each quorum, or group of quorums, will please arise when requested and remain standing until requested to be seated.

May the Lord guide us and may His Spirit attend us as we go forward in this solemn service, established by the Lord so that each member of His Church may have a voice in sustaining those whom He has called to preside over it and to direct its work, to the salvation and exaltation of mankind.

We shall first vote by quorums to sustain the President of the Church and his Counselors.

President McKay, so far as I have observed, the voting in each case was unanimous in the affirmative.

President David O. McKay:

Before proceeding further with the exercises of this session, I am prompted to say a word in answer to a question which undoubtedly is in every one of your minds. Particularly to those not members of the Church, and to members of the Church as well, may I call attention to the policy of the Church with regard to choosing of counselors.

A PRESIDENT NAMES HIS COUNSELORS

When a President is chosen and sustained (that includes the president of the Aaronic Priesthood who is the Bishop of a Ward, also Presidents of quorums or superintendents or presidents of auxiliaries it is the practice of the Church to let the president name his counselors.

Anticipating that the Council of the Twelve would grant to me that same privilege, I thoughtfully and prayerfully considered what two men would be most helpful and most contributive to the advancement of the Church. The impression came, I am sure, directly from Him whose Church this is, and who presides over it, that the two counselors whom you have this day approved should be the other members of the quorum of the First Presidency. Both are members of the Council of the Twelve, though counselors might have been chosen from High Priests outside that presiding body.

I chose these two members from the Council of the Twelve—two men with whom I have labored closely for many years, whose worth, whose ability I know. I have been associated with Elder Richards directly in Church affairs and in presiding positions for over thirty years. I have been associated with President Clark in two quorums of the First Presidency for over sixteen years. With these and other facts in mind, the question arose as to the order they should occupy in this new quorum.

Each man I love. Each man is capable in his particular lines, and particularly with respect to the welfare and advancement of the Kingdom of God.

SENIORITY IN THE COUNCIL OF TWELVE

I realized that there would be a question in the minds of some as to which one of the two should be chosen as first counselor. That question resolved itself in my mind first as to the order of precedence, seniority in the Council of the Twelve Apostles. That should make no difference according to the practice of the Church, because members of the Council had heretofore been chosen irrespective of the position a member occupied in the Council of the Twelve. And, as I have already said, high Priests have been chosen even as first counselors who were not members of the Council.

I felt that one guiding principle in this choice would be to follow the seniority in the Council. These two men were sitting in their places in that presiding body in the Church, and I felt impressed that it would be advisable to continue that same seniority in the new quorum of the First Presidency. I repeat, not as an established policy, but because it seemed advisable in view of my close relationship to these two choice leaders.

TWO COUNSELORS COORDINATE

Now I mention this because we do not want any member in this Church, nor any man or woman listening in to harbor the thought for a moment that there has been any rift between the two counselors who sustained President Smith in the Quorum of the First Presidency, and President Grant for the years that we were together with that inspired leader. Neither should you feel that there is any demotion. President Clark is a wonderful servant. You have had demonstrated here this morning his ability in carrying out details, and he is just that efficient in everything pertaining to the work.

You should understand further, that in the counselorship of the Quorum of the First Presidency these two men are coordinate in authority, in love, and confidence, in freedom to make suggestions, and recommendations, and in their responsibility not only to the Quorum but also to the Lord Jesus Christ and to the people generally.

They are two great men. I love them both, and say God bless them, and give you the assurance that there will be harmony and love and confidence in the Quorum of the First Presidency as you have sustained them today.

The congregation arose and joined in singing the hymn, "Redeemer of Israel."

PRESIDENT JOSEPH FIELDING SMITHOf the Council of the Twelve Apostles*

We have just witnessed, and taken part in a most solemn, wonderful manifestation of fellowship, unity, and love.

PLEDGE OF SUPPORT

First, I wish to say before this vast congregation of priesthood and members of the Church that I pledge myself to support my brethren of the First Presidency. They have my full support, my love, and fellowship, and I pray that the Spirit of the Lord may rest upon them in great abundance to guide them and direct them in all things pertaining to their high and holy callings.

I feel humble in standing here, considering myself the weakest of my brethren. I love each one of them: the First Presidency, the Council of the Twelve, and the other brethren whose names have been presented and approved here this day. And may the Lord be with us to help each one of us to magnify his calling.

I realize the position I have been called to fulfil is one of great importance. It makes me humble. I am grateful for the expressions that I have received from my brethren. They have expressed their confidence, and already have given me their support.

It is wonderful to see a great body such as we have here today (composed of the leading brethren of the Church and many others who have not been called to presiding capacity), raising their hands enthusiastically, feeling in their hearts to give their support, and they do give their support with all their hearts to the brethren who have been sustained.

I thank the Lord for the gospel of Jesus Christ, for my membership in the Church, for the opportunity which has come to me to give service. I have only one desire, weak as I am, and that is to magnify to the best of my ability the calling which is mine.

FAITH AND PRAYERS NEEDED

I need the faith and the prayers of the members of the Church. These brethren of the Presidency need them, too. We should support them, uphold them, sustain them by our faith and by our prayers, that they may feel the influence that radiates from this great body of priesthood and from the membership of the Church.

There is an influence that radiates forth. In fact, every individual radiates some influence. Our influence should be for good, for the building up of the kingdom of God. We should have no other purpose, only to bring to pass this great work and see it established in the earth as the Lord would have it.

ESTABLISHMENT OF ZION

In the early days of the Church the brethren came to the Prophet Joseph Smith asking what the Lord would have them do.

The answer given to them was "to bring forth the cause of Zion." That is our work, to establish Zion, to build up the kingdom of God, to preach the gospel to every creature in the world, that not one soul may be overlooked where there is the possibility for us to present unto him the truth.

As we have heard during this conference, we are all going to be judged according to our works, every soul. I have often thought of my place and responsibility in this Church. What a dreadful thing it would be to be going forth to teach, to lead men, to guide them into something that wasn't true. I think the greatest crime in all this world is to lead men and women, the children of God, away from the true principles. We see in the world today philosophies of various kinds, tending to destroy faith, faith in God, faith in the principles of the gospel. What a dreadful thing that is.

The Lord says if we labor all our days and save but one soul, how great will be our joy with him; on the other hand how great will be our sorrow and our condemnation if through our acts we have led one soul away from this truth.

TESTIMONY

Again I bear my testimony to you. I know that God lives. I know that Jesus Christ is the Only Begotten Son in the flesh of our Father, the great Elohim whom we worship. I have perfect faith in the mission of the Prophet Joseph Smith and those who have succeeded him.

I know that we have the truth of the everlasting gospel of Jesus Christ, just as well as I know that I stand here before you. If I did not know it, I wouldn't want to be here or have anything to do with this work. But I know it in every fibre of my body. God has revealed it to me. May the Lord bless us all I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

Second Counselor in the First Presidency

My brothers and sisters, I begin by bearing again my testimony that this is the work of the Lord, that Joseph Smith is a prophet, that those who have followed afterward have been his prophets, and that the one whom we have sustained is the ninth in regular succession, as a prophet, seer, and revelator to this Church and to the world.

I know that Jesus is the Christ, the Redeemer of the world. I know that he is the first fruits of the resurrection, and that by and through him we are redeemed from the Fall, and thus able to overcome the results of the Fall and get back into the presence of our Heavenly Father.

Monday, April 9Third Day

I thank President McKay for his kindly words about myself. I thank you for your sustaining votes, and I earnestly pray that I may be the beneficiary of your prayers as time shall go on, and that I may be able to do the things which I am supposed to do with an eye single to the glory of our Heavenly Father.

PLEDGE OF DEVOTED SERVICE

In the service of the Lord, it is not where you serve but how. In the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, one takes the place to which one is duly called, which place one neither seeks nor declines. I pledge to President McKay and to President Richards the full loyal devoted service to the tasks that may come to me to the full measure of my strength and my abilities, and so far as they will enable me to perform them, however inadequate I may be.

May the Lord help me so to serve, to serve President McKay and President Richards and to serve the Lord, all for the advancement of his work. This I humbly pray in the name of Jesus. Amen.

PRESIDENT STEPHEN L RICHARDS

First Counselor in the First Presidency

I call upon the Lord to come to my rescue in this, the most trying hour of my life. It reaches beyond my understanding to know why I have been privileged in the providence of God to stand before you, my brethren and sisters of the Church, in the capacity in which I have this day been presented to you.

FRIENDSHIP OF GREAT MAN

For more than forty-five years I have had a great man as a friend. I don't know how I have deserved his friendship as he has given it to me. His friendship has been one of the main factors of encouragement in my life. My association with him has brought more richness into my life and my experience than any other association outside that of my own flesh and blood.

This great man has stimulated me in times of discouragement to go forward and give the best I could to this work. I shall never live long enough to pay the debt of gratitude I owe my friend. I respond to his call with the deepest humility, with a great sense of inadequacy, but with an obligation to give to him my best.

DEVOTION OF WILLARD RICHARDS

One of the few ways in which I can account for this which has transpired lies in another friendship. My grandfather, Willard Richards, was an intimate and close friend of the Prophet Joseph Smith. I am honored to learn and to know that the Prophet prized his friendship, and is said to have remarked on one occasion that no one could ever have a finer friend than was Willard Richards.

You recall that at one time he was discouraged by his superiors to follow the Prophet to Carthage Jail. He replied by an offer of his life for the Prophet, if he would accept it, and he went with the Prophet and his brother, witnessed their assassination, and then with his great love and heavy heart took their bodies back to the people of Nauvoo, assuaged their excitement, and gave them counsel to be calm.

I have often felt that the only reason for my being in the presiding councils of the Church is in the devotion of Willard Richards to the Prophet Joseph Smith. I believe there are councils on the other side. We have had testimonies of them, and while I cannot understand I can believe that the Prophet, out of consideration for his friend, has had a voice in bringing me into the Council of the Twelve through President Joseph F. Smith, and also in that which has brought me to this position. I would like to be as true a friend to President David O. McKay as my grandfather was to the Prophet, and in some measure show to him my appreciation of his marvelous kindness to me.

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK

I have had the pleasure of long acquaintance with President J. Reuben Clark, and I have loved him and still love him as an exemplar, as one of the most true and solicitous friends that a man can have, and as a man of such high ability and outstanding achievement as to command the respect of all, not only within the confines of our Church but also in the nation and the world.

I have gloried in his achievements. I have felt that the credit he has reflected upon the Church has been of immeasurable value in setting this work forward. It will be a great pleasure to have even closer associations with him, and as I pledge my love and support to the President, I pledge it to him also.

CONFIDENCE IN LORD'S PROMISES

I cannot go forward in this work, my brethren and my sisters, without the aid of the Holy Spirit. I must have confidence, however, in the promises of the Lord that if we will faithfully serve him he will sustain us. We must have the faith of Nephi of old. If it is of any qualification for the work, I declare my love for it. I love the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. I accept all of its principles. I accept its authority. I accept the great and marvelous organization of the Church as being calculated to raise humanity to the highest destiny men and women may reach.

TESTIMONY OF DIVINE ORIGIN

I know that it is of divine origin. I am realistic enough to believe every word that the Prophet Joseph Smith gave to us regarding his early experiences in the restoration of this work. There is nothing about his story that is not literal to me. I know it is the truth, and I know that he lives, as we sang today, in the heavens above, and has gone to a reward, the like of which few, if any, men shall ever be permitted to attain.

Monday, April 9Third Day

I know that Jesus Christ is our Elder Brother and our Lord and our Savior and the God of this earth, and that testimony permeates every fibre of my being.

I saw one of my brethren down here in the audience today — President Piranian. He will remember when he guided us into the land of Jerusalem, concerning which we spoke a little yesterday. As I went to the places made memorable and now preserved as shrines by the works and ministry of the Savior, my heart was full of meditation.

I never saw a thing in the actions of men, I never saw a thing in the paganistic buildings that have been constructed to remind me of the Savior, but I remember that it was here that he labored, and I said to myself with the deepest humility, "Brother Piranian and I are the only men in all of this so-called Holy Land who really represent the Christ about whose shrines those ignorant, deluded people were quarreling and fighting — the only men having the priesthood of Almighty God given from an angel of the Lord," and I was subdued as this overpowering thought came to me.

I know that this priesthood is divine. I know that it is more than a mere name. I know that there is virtue and essence in it, if I can discern anything by the interpretative senses God has given me. I have felt the essence and virtue of this Holy Priesthood go out as I have administered the ordinances of the gospel.

APPEAL FOR BLESSINGS

I thank the Lord from the bottom of my heart for this great power that has come to men and been so generously and widely bestowed among them, and I pray to him that I may be worthy of the investiture of that power and use it for the building up of his kingdom and the blessing of his children.

I humbly pray that the administration which has come into being this day by your concerted action may prove to be a boon to this work that shall go beyond anything which we now may contemplate, and I humbly invoke the blessings of God upon our beloved leader, that vision may be given him to see the way in which we shall go. I ask God to bless us all that we may follow him and support him to accomplish the mighty works that God has in store for his people. I do so humbly in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT DAVID O. McKAY

My beloved fellow workers, brethren and sisters: I wish it were within my power of expression to let you know just what my true feelings are on this momentous occasion. I would wish that you might look into my heart and see there for yourselves just what those feelings are.

RESPONSIBILITY OF LEADERSHIP

It is just one week ago today that the realization came to me that this responsibility of leadership would probably fall upon my shoulders. I received word that President George Albert Smith had taken a turn for the worse, and that the doctor thought the end was not far off. I hastened to his bedside, and with his weeping daughters, son, and other kinfolk, I entered his sickroom. For the first time, he failed to recognize me.

Then I had to accept the realization that the Lord had chosen not to answer our pleadings as we would have had them answered, and that he was going to take him home to himself. Thankfully, he rallied again later in the day. Several days preceding that visit, as President Clark and I were considering problems of import pertaining to the Church, he, ever solicitous of the welfare of the Church and of my feelings, would say, "The responsibility will be yours to make this decision," but each time I would refuse to face what to him seemed a reality.

NEED FOR SUPPORT

When that reality came, as I tell you, I was deeply moved. And I am today, and pray that I may, even though inadequately, be able to tell you how weighty this responsibility seems.

The Lord has said that the three presiding high priests chosen by the body, appointed and ordained to this office of presidency, are to be "upheld by the confidence, faith, and prayer of the Church." No one can preside over this Church without first being in tune with the head of the Church, our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. He is our head. This is his Church. Without his divine guidance and constant inspiration, we cannot succeed. With his guidance, with his inspiration, we cannot fail.

Next to that as a sustaining potent power, comes the confidence, faith, prayers, and united support of the Church.

I pledge to you that I shall do my best so to live as to merit the companionship of the Holy Spirit, and pray here in your presence that my counselors and I may indeed be "partakers of the divine spirit."

SPIRIT OF UNITY

Next to that, unitedly we plead with you for a continuation of your love and confidence as you have expressed it today. From you members of the Twelve, we ask for that love and sympathy expressed in our sacred Council. From the Assistants to the Twelve, the Patriarch, the First Council of the Seventy, the Presiding Bishopric, we ask that the spirit of unity expressed so fervently by our Lord and Savior when he was saying good-by to the Twelve, may be manifest by us all.

You remember he said, as he left them: "And now I am no more in the world, but these are in the world, and I come to thee. Holy Father, keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one, as we are."

"Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word;

"That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." (John 17:11, 20-21.)

Brethren and sisters, brethren of the General Authorities, God keep us as one, overlooking weaknesses we may see, keeping an eye single to the glory of God and the advancement of his work.

HELP OF MEMBERSHIP

And now to the members of the Church: We all need your help, your faith and prayers, not your adverse criticisms, but your help. You can do that in prayer if you cannot reach us in person. The potency of those prayers throughout the Church came to me yesterday when I received a letter from a neighbor in my old home town. He was milking his cows when the word came over his radio which he has in his barn that President Smith had passed. He sensed what that would mean to his former fellow-townsmen, and he left his barn and went to the house and told his wife. Immediately they called their little children, and there in that humble home, suspending their activities, they knelt down as a family and offered prayer. The significance of that scene I leave for you to understand. Multiply that by a hundred thousand, two hundred thousand, half a million homes, and see the power in the unity and prayers, and the sustaining influence in the body of the Church.

Today you have by your vote placed upon us the greatest responsibility, as well as the greatest honor, that lies within your power to bestow as members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Your doing so increases the duty of the First Presidency to render service to the people.

EXAMPLE OF SERVICE

When the Savior was about to leave his Apostles, he gave them a great example of service. You remember he girded himself with a towel and washed his disciples' feet. Peter, feeling it was a menial work for a servant, said, "... dost thou wash my feet? ... Thou shalt never wash my feet."

The Savior answered "If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with me."

"Nay then," said the chief Apostle, "Not my feet only, but also my hands and my head."

"He that is washed needeth not save to wash his feet, but is clean every whit.

"What I do thou knowest not now; but thou shalt know hereafter." (See John 13:6, 8-10, 7.)

And then he washed his feet, and those of the others also. Returning the basin to the side of the door, ungirding himself, and putting on his robe, he returned to his position with the Twelve, and said:

"Ye call me Master and Lord: and ye say well; for so I am.

"If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet; ye also ought to wash one another's feet." (Ibid., 13:13-14.)

What an example of service to those great servants, followers of the Christ! He that is greatest among you, let him be least. So we sense the obligation to be of greater service to the membership of the Church, to devote our lives to the advancement of the kingdom of God on earth.

BLESSING AND TESTIMONY

God bless you, brothers and sisters. May the spirit of this occasion remain in our hearts. May it be felt throughout the uttermost parts of the earth, wherever there is a branch in all the world, that that spirit might be a unifying power in increasing the testimony of the divinity of this work, that it may grow in its influence for good in the establishment of peace throughout the world.

I bear you my testimony that the head of this Church is our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. I know the reality of his existence, of his willingness to guide and direct all who serve him. I know he restored, with his Father, to the Prophet Joseph Smith the gospel of Jesus Christ in its fulness. I know that these brethren whom you have sustained today are men of God. I love them. Don't you think anything else. God's will has been done.

May we have increased power to be true to the responsibilities that the Lord and you have placed upon us, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

*Monday, April 9Third DayPresident David O. McKay

We will now all join in singing, "God Be With You 'Till We Meet Again," led by Brother Cornwall. Both organists, Elder Alexander Schreiner and Elder Frank W. Asper, have been at the organ.

After the singing we will ask Elder John A. Widtsoe to offer the benediction and this conference will be adjourned sine die.

---

Singing by the congregation, "God Be With You 'Till We Meet Again."

The benediction was offered by Elder John A. Widtsoe of the Council of the Twelve.

Conference adjourned sine die.

FUNERAL SERVICES
PRESIDENT GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

Held in the Tabernacle,
Salt Lake City, Utah,
Saturday, April 7, 1951,
at 2:00 p.m.

President David O. McKay, President of the Council of the Twelve Apostles, conducted the services.

The Tabernacle Choir was present and rendered musical numbers. Elder J. Spencer Cornwall, Conductor, directed the singing of the Choir; Elder Alexander Schreiner was at the organ.

President David O. McKay:

President George Albert Smith, beloved father, honored leader, this vast congregation filling the Tabernacle to overflowing, the Assembly Hall, Barratt Hall, and those listening in over the radio, say to you the love you have shown to your fellow men is reciprocated fourfold. It is hard for us to express our love, but this is one manifestation of it, for truly the love you have given throughout your life is reciprocated in our hearts for you, and we pray for power to emulate your example throughout our lives.

Though the hour has not yet fully arrived, we take this opportunity of reading to you and to all who are listening in sentiments of regard and respect sent from various parts of the world.

Hundreds of telegrams, messages, resolutions, etc., have been received from people in different parts of the world, including corporations in the United States, Government officials and Commissions, ministers of various churches, Presidents of Educational Institutions, officials of transportation by steamship, rail and air, and from distinguished citizens not only throughout the United States, but, as I say, in various parts of the world. It will be impossible, of course, with the limited time at our disposal, to read these messages to you but here are a few which the family desire me to read as representative of the sentiments expressed.

The White House,
Washington, D. C.

Mrs. Emily Smith Stewart:

The death of your father causes me great personal sorrow. He not only was my friend and the grandson of a friend of my grandfather, but I looked upon him as one of our country's great moral leaders. Mrs. Truman joins me in extending sympathy in your bereavement.

Harry S. Truman
President of the United States

Albany, New York

Mrs. Robert Murray Stewart:

Mrs. Dewey joins me in sending our deepest sympathy to you and your family in the great loss of your distinguished father. He was a great man and spiritual force for good in our country and the world. All of us who had the privilege of his friendship were enriched by it. I know you will be greatly comforted in these days by the countless people who will be sharing your grief and also your satisfaction in the great leadership your father gave.

Thomas E. Dewey
Governor of the State of New York

Omaha, Nebraska

President David O. McKay:

In humility and profound personal sorrow, we pay tribute to the late President George Albert Smith of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Our personal sense of loss is heightened by appreciation of his fine useful and kindly life. A believer and worker for the best in all men. His influence for good has been world-wide. The continued high standing of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is a monument to his memory.

A. E. Stoddard
President Union Pacific Railroad

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

To you and President McKay, as well as to all members of the Mormon faith and to the people of the state of Utah in general, all of us in United States Steel send a message of deep sympathy on the death of your great leader and citizen, George Albert Smith. It has been our good fortune during recent years to know and work with President Smith in connection with our steel operations in your great state. All of us have come to respect and admire greatly President Smith, not only for his unselfish devotion to the interests of the Mormon Church, but also for his fine human qualities and for his desire to advance the welfare of Utah. You have lost a great leader and citizen and we a true friend.

Irving S. Olds
Chairman Board of Directors
United States Steel Corp.

Nukalofa, Tonga

Just heard over radio in far away Tonga of the passing of President Smith.
Sympathy extended.

Evon W. Huntsman
President of the Tongan Mission

The National Society Sons of the American Revolution mourns the passing of one of its most distinguished and beloved compatriots who for 30 years has given unselfishly of his time, energy, and thoughtful cooperation to the good of our country and society. We extend our deepest sympathy to his family and to the Church of which he was such a great leader.

Wallace C. Hall
President General

Mrs. Emily Smith Stewart:

The loss of George Albert Smith takes from the American scene a man whose qualities of heart and mind and soul were ever enlisted for the betterment of all. This hard-working, humble, pious man, spiritual leader of a great faith through the years was an especial friend of children stricken by polio and other afflictions. He will indeed be mourned yet will be enshrined in the memories and remembered in the prayers of all who knew and loved him.

The National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis

To the Family of President George Albert Smith:

Four thousand Brigham Young University students mourn the loss of our greatest mortal inspiration. We loved President Smith because of his great soul, kindly spirit, and righteous example. We are better because of him. May the memory of his wonderful life continue to inspire thousands of future Brigham Young University students.

Brigham Young University Student Body

To the Family of President George Albert Smith:

The Regents, Administration, Faculty and Students of the University share with you, and all who knew him, locally and internationally, a deep sorrow at the passing of your father. We lost a counselor of infinite patience, understanding, compassion, and love. At the University a special bond of affection binds us to his memory. He had a love for truth, a passion for the pursuit of knowledge, and a sympathetic understanding of the problems of his fellow men. These same talents which have made him so beloved a father to you, have made of him a priceless counselor to us in the development of our University policy. We want to express our appreciation to you for so generously sharing him.

It is not possible to relieve your burden of grief, but it may comfort you to know that we with millions of others would like to reduce that burden by sharing it. If sorrow at death can be felt only in proportion as we love in life, then we would not want to grieve less; rather we can even feel some gratitude for the cleansing beauty of a sorrow born from no human frailty but rather from the passing of a perfect friend.

Albert Ray Olpin
President, University of Utah

As I have said, these are but illustrative of hundreds of other messages equally sincere and impressively expressed.

All the songs of this service are favorites of President Smith. The prayer at the home was given by President Smith's Bishop, Bishop A. G. Olofson of Yale Ward. The floral offerings have been under the care of the General Board of the Relief Society, with the assistance of the General Board of the Primary and Primary children here at the Tabernacle, and the General Board of the Sunday School and Sunday School children while he was lying in state at the Church Administration Building.

Members of the family have requested me, also, to express publicly their appreciation to the following people who have worked in very close personal relationship with President Smith, some of them for many years, and others particularly during his last illness. The list is certainly not all inclusive, but it is representative. As I have read this, I want to add the names of two—his loving brother Winslow and his devoted son-in-law Robert Murray Stewart, and others of the immediate family who have shown a love and devotion most commendable. Those named outside of the family are as follows:

Dr. Henry Raile
Dr. J. LeRoy Kimball
D. Arthur Haycock, Secretary
Geraldine Bearnson, Secretary
Louisa Grint, Housekeeper
Fred Kemmethmueller, Houseman

And the following nurses:

Mrs. Iva Basinger
Mrs. Norma Carlisle
Mrs. Carroll Wirthlin
Mrs. Eva Gotberg
Mrs. Evelyn Wilcox
Mrs. Odetta Bramwell

We have not included, but we wish space allowed us to, the names of many other medical consultants and hospital people who gave not only their skill but their hearts.

The Choir will now sing, "Kind Words Are Sweet Tones of the Heart," (Alexander Schreiner is at the organ), following which the invocation will be offered by Presiding Bishop LeGrand Richards.

(Singing by the Choir, "Kind Words Are Sweet Tones of the Heart.")

INVOCATION

By Presiding Bishop LeGrand Richards

Our Father who art in Heaven, hallowed be thy name. Thou seest that we are met here this day as family members, loved ones, friends, and fellow saints of Zion, in this beautiful and sacred building to offer our appreciation and pay tribute to the life and the labors of thy worthy servant, thy prophet, seer, and revelator unto thy great Church.

Father in Heaven, our hearts are heavy with sorrow because of the loss of friendship, privileges and associations that we have enjoyed with thy worthy servant in the past. We do not sorrow, Father, because of him, for we feel that his life has been as fine an example to thy children everywhere as any man we have known. He has walked in thy ways. He has kept thy commandments. He has labored for the salvation and the blessing of his fellow men. In this he has been unselfish and devoted all the days of his life.

We thank thee Father that his life has been such that we have been able to listen to the tributes that have already been read in our hearing this day. For these we thank thee, and for the many others that have not been read. And we pray now, Father, that as we are thus gathered together, that thy Holy Spirit may be poured out upon those who take part in these exercises, those who furnish the music, and the Brethren and those who have been asked to speak, that they may speak words of comfort and consolation, that may be an encouragement and a comfort to those who mourn most, the intimate loved ones of thy servant.

Father, as these exercises come to a close and we have listened to the tributes that will be paid, may there be added to them the tribute that each of us feels in his heart for his association with him and for his wonderful kindness and his noble example, for we do love him, Father. Thou knowest all things, and thou knowest the love we bear for him.

Father in Heaven, as he has brought honor to the name that he bears and has proven himself worthy to stand in the presence of his father and his grandfather, both of whom have occupied positions in the presidency of thy Church, we feel that nothing would please him more nor please thy Church more than that his posterity unto the latest generation of time may continue to bear lustre to that name, and be worthy to bear it among the children of men and the saints of Zion everywhere.

Now Holy Father, thou hast declared through thine Only Begotten Son, "For blessed are they which do mourn, for they shall be comforted." We ask that these services this day may prove a comfort to all who mourn, that thy spirit may be present in rich abundance, that we may do honor to thy noble servant, all of which we ask, and we thank thee for all our blessings in the name of the Lord, Jesus Christ, our Redeemer, Amen.

President McKay:

The song, "King of Glory," will now be sung by the Tabernacle Choir, soloist Sister Jessie Evans Smith. Following that we will hear from Elder Matthew Cowley of the Council of the Twelve, born and reared in the Seventeenth Ward, and President Smith's first appointment to the Council of the Twelve.

Singing by the Choir, "King of Glory," Jessie Evans Smith soloist.

ELDER MATTHEW COWLEY

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

This is indeed the most humbling experience of my life, and I pray God to strengthen me in my humility, that I may give utterance to what I have to say under the direction of God's inspiration.

SEVENTEENTH WARD ASSOCIATIONS

The kindest, the most generous, the most appreciative, the most considerate, the most forgiving, the most loving neighbor I have ever known has passed on. His mortal remains lie here within a stone's throw of where he was born. North West Temple extends from South Temple on the south to First North on the north.

From my early childhood to my early manhood I lived in that area. No better people ever lived than lived within those two blocks on West Temple during that period of my life. No greater, no sweeter, no kinder neighbors ever lived than lived there.

At the head of the street on the south was the home of this man of God. At the head of the street on the north was one of the homes of his wonderful father. Their homes were properly placed on that street of good neighbors. Since the day of his birth until his passing, this man of God traveled a million miles or more abroad in the earth in doing good.

He loved the people in the old Seventeenth Ward, but he had so much love that he could not spend it all in that small area, and so God called him from the Seventeenth Ward and gave him to the world, and he went about the world among all nations giving his love and the love of God to his fellow men.

FRIENDS IN SOUTH PACIFIC

I journeyed with him to New Zealand in 1938. I know how the people of the Pacific loved him, and he loved them. When the message from Tonga was read by President McKay I was reminded that on my first visit to Tonga about three and a half years ago, I called at the office of the Prime Minister, Mr. Ata. The first thing Mr. Ata asked me was, "How is my good friend, George Albert Smith?" He said, "I have never met a grander man in all my life than that man."

When I called on the crown prince, the Honorable Tungi, he brought from the drawer of his desk an Improvement Era which he had just received from President Smith.

In all the islands of the sea he is loved and revered, and on his last visit to Hawaii during the centennial of that mission, in his last testimony to those people, he said, "It is an honor to have my name numbered among yours upon the membership records of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints."

GOOD IN EVERY ONE

All those million miles which he traveled during his lifetime were used in distributing love wherever he went. Only a few weeks ago I went to the hospital to inquire about his health. On hearing that I was out in the hall he sent for me to come in, and when I went in, I walked up to his bedside and he reached out and took me by the hand, and gripping my hand firmly he said, "Young man, remember all the days of your life that you can find good in everyone if you will but look for it." The last message, the last instruction to me—"Remember always you can find good in everyone if you will but look for it."

He loved everyone because he could see the good within them. He did not look upon sin with the least degree of allowance, but he loved the sinner because he knew that God was love, and that it is God's love that regenerates human souls and may, by that process, transform the sinner into a saint.

Maybe there are sinners who mistook his love for respect. He didn't respect the sinner, but he loved him. I am sure that love found response in the hearts and in the lives of those whom he loved.

AN APPROACHABLE MAN

I have never met in all my life a more approachable man. I never hesitated to go to him for confession and for counsel, and I always received that for which I went, whether it was forgiveness of shortcomings, or counsel which I would need in the work to which I have been called and to which he ordained me and set me apart.

Truly he forgave all men. He was aware in all of his life of the commandment of God: God will forgive whom he will forgive. As for us, we must forgive all men. He could do that, and then refer the matter to God. As he forgave I am sure he forgot. When one who forgives can forget, then truly that man is an unusual man, indeed a man of God!

When he moved from the Seventeenth Ward, he just left the geographical area. He never left his neighbors. I read a letter from a man who was in the army of occupation in Germany following the first war. He was a Seventeenth Warder, and he said in that letter, "While I was on furlough in Italy, President George Albert Smith came to Coblenz to see me." He always knew where his neighbors were, and he was always concerned with their well-being.

When he left New Zealand for Australia in 1938—he spent a month in Australia—and when he came back he said, "I saw one of our good Seventeenth Ward neighbors way over in west Australia. He came down from the mining camps to see me." This man was a mining engineer.

I said, "How did he know that you were there so he could come down to see you?" And he said, "I sent him a telegram." That man had not lived in the ward for many years, but his neighbor knew where he was, and he sent for him to come down and see him.

PRESIDENT SMITH'S CREED

President George Albert Smith had a creed. To those of us who knew him, it is not necessary to read that creed because his life was the creed. All of us who knew him could have written his creed. What an achievement! What an accomplishment! To be able to write the creed of your fellow man by the life which he lived.

If it is possible that there is someone within the sound of my voice who didn't know this wonderful neighbor, who has not heard nor read his creed, I will take the time now to read it.

"I would be a friend to the friendless and find joy in ministering to the needs of the poor.

"I would visit the sick and the afflicted and inspire in them a desire for faith to be healed.

"I would teach the truth to the understanding and blessing of all mankind.

"I would seek out the erring and try to win him back to a righteous and a happy life.

"I would not seek to force people to live up to my ideals but rather love them into doing the thing that is right. I would live with the masses and help solve their problems that their earth life may be happy.

"I would avoid the publicity of high positions and discourage the flattery of thoughtless friends.

"I would not knowingly hurt the feelings of any, not even one who may have wronged me, but would seek to do him good and make him my friend.

"I would overcome the tendency to selfishness and jealousy and rejoice in the success of all the children of my Heavenly Father.

"I would not be an enemy to any living soul.

"Knowing that the Redeemer of mankind has offered to the world the only plan that will fully develop us and make us really happy here and hereafter I feel it not only a duty but a blessed privilege to disseminate this truth."

It would be easy for us to memorize this creed, my brothers and sisters and friends, because it can all be briefed into one word—love. That was his creed. And with what grandeur he has swept the threshold of heaven as he has passed with this, his creed! How his heart and soul and his virtue and strength went out to the distressed, to the unfortunate, even to the criminal. I am reminded that someone once touched the garment of the Master, and he felt virtue or strength go out from him.

Everyone in distress, everyone beset with illness or other adversity, whoever came within the presence of this son of God, drew virtue and strength from him. To be in his presence was to be healed, if not physically, then indeed spiritually.

HIS HEART WAS PURE

During the span of his life he was nigh unto death on several occasions. Many men more robust in health could not have survived the illnesses which beset him periodically during his life. But his strength was as the strength of ten because his heart was pure, and so he survived.

Men like this never die. He is an eternal being. God attracts the godly, and I am sure that the shortest journey this man of God ever made in all of his travels has been the journey which he has just taken. God is love. George Albert Smith is love. He is godly. God has taken him unto himself.

I have loved his family. I have grown up with them. I have been at school with them. All I can say now to them and to all of us is we can't honor a life like this with words. They are not adequate. There is only one way to honor his virtue, his sweetness of character, his great qualities of love, and that is with our deeds. Let us walk in his footsteps, we who knew him. We know what he wanted of us. We must never let him down.

Let us all be a little more forgiving, a little more tender in our associations with each other, a little more considerate of one another, a little more generous of each other's feelings. Let us so honor him that when we come to die we may be saved and exalted in the celestial presence of God our Father, and in that presence we will find his noble and prophetic son, George Albert Smith.

God grant that that boon and blessing may be ours I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Representing the Young Men's and Young Women's Mutual Improvement Associations of the Church,, Elder Elbert R. Curtis, General Superintendent of the YMMIA will now speak to us.

ELDER ELBERT R. CURTIS

General Superintendent of Y.M.M.I.A.

I earnestly pray that the sweet spirit that characterized the services yesterday, and and is so in evidence here this afternoon, will accompany my brief remarks this afternoon.

It would be interesting to know on how many occasions President George Albert Smith stood in like position, giving words of comfort and counsel and blessing. I love the man.

LABORS IN EUROPEAN MISSION

They say if you want to know about a man, ask his secretary. I count being the personal secretary of President George Albert Smith and living in his home in far away England about 30 years ago, perhaps the greatest privilege and blessing of my life. To pray, to eat, to live with the family of this good man was indeed a blessing. His saintly wife mothered me, his noble son and daughters adopted me as a brother. When you live with people you know them. Theirs was a Latter-day Saint home. The Spirit of the Lord was there in abundance.

President Smith was one of the hardest working individuals that I have ever known. Many times I have taken dictation from his bedside where he handled much of his work, lest he waste one single moment of his waking hours. He was "anxiously engaged" in his Father's business. He accomplished a great and noble work there.

He was so appreciative and so kind that it was a labor of love, and hours didn't seem to matter. That was a time of persecution and bitterness and hatred in the British Isles. His influence has lived through the years in the lives of the missionaries who served in post war Europe, in the hearts of the Saints of those lands, and in the attitudes of the influential individuals with whom he came in touch.

HIS LIFE AN INSPIRATION

His life has been an inspiration and particularly I think to the young people of the Church and of the land. He loved them dearly. It seems to me that his life of achievement from errand boy at the early age of 13 at the old ZCMI to the pinnacles in civil and political life, and ecclesiastical positions is almost a Horatio Alger story of success. It gives courage and hope to every lad.

Elder Cowley mentioned that President Smith was never very robust, physically. He accomplished all this in spite of physical limitations.

When I think of him I recall the story of the soldier kneeling with bowed head, who overheard a girl whisper, "Does he think he will recover his two lost legs." The soldier paused in his prayer to reply quietly, "No, but I shall receive courage to carry on without them." President Smith found courage to meet life, to meet it with a zest, and he was blessed with a great ability to inspire others to noble achievements, especially the young.

INTEREST IN YOUTH

He kept alive his interest in youth and in youthful undertakings. Mention was made of the gathering at the Brigham Young University this afternoon. I have watched with interest his great pride in the development of the Brigham Young University, its campus, its building of science, its field house, the athletic program.

I think all of us were touched as we heard of his telegram, delivered to the dressing room of the basketball team in New York City so recently, just before their final game. Listen to this from a man nearly 81 years of age, sent to a basketball team from his sick bed.

"From the top of the Rockies, I send my love and blessing. Many thousands share my pride in your record. I have faith in your abilities. Play clean, play hard, play fair, play to win. God bless you" Signed, George Albert Smith. Its effect was electrical. Here was a friend of youth, and here was a formula of success.

One of his many expressions of love for youth was found in his untiring efforts in the great Boy Scout movement. He was a member of the executive board of the national council. He had been awarded the Silver Beaver and the Silver Buffalo, the highest awards within the power of this great organization to award.

I believe that I not only speak for the youth of our Church, but for the two and a quarter million scouts and scouters of this land as I pay this tribute to a truly great scouter, President George Albert Smith. They do love him, and his influence has been felt and will be felt throughout the land.

SUPERINTENDENCY OF Y.M.M.I.A.

During the period he was General Superintendent of the YMMIA, our Church and this state became the leader nationally in this great Scout movement.

As you know his name was almost synonymous with MIA for many years. Under his guidance and wise leadership that organization made great strides for the blessing of our young people.

A partial summary of accomplishments during his MIA administration included tremendous gains in enrollment, the introduction of the Senior M Men and Vanguard departments, the huge 50th Anniversary Jubilee, the annual festivals have been carried on, the development of the great M Men basketball league, the Word of Wisdom exhibit at the Chicago's World Fair, and many other notable accomplishments.

The message from the then First Presidency at the time of his release as MIA superintendent (that was in 1939) included these words: "As echoes roll from soul to soul, and go forever and forever, so will your worthy efforts continue to live in the lives of those whom you have inspired." He did inspire.

In behalf of our youth and their leaders, the executives, and members of the general auxiliary boards, may I express our love, our deep gratitude for his life. Others have and doubtless will recount his numerous accomplishments. His marvelous creed has been referred to, but we remember him as the Apostle and President of Love, and who indeed was loved and is loved by all of us. He endeared himself to us all. He was kindness personified. He personally achieved the goal of peace and good will in his own heart for all of his Father's children. Perhaps no words were used quite as often by him as that very term "Our Father's Children."

The sweetness of this hour is the result of that testimony, which he helped give to all of us.

God bless his memory! He will continue to inspire us all. May our Heavenly Father bless you, his family, and near kin, love you, comfort you as your father did. It came from God our Father.

We do extend our love, our sympathy, and our blessing, and express the prayer that the peace that only He can give may be yours in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

We who have had the privilege of associating in public affairs with Mr. John F. Fitzpatrick are happy indeed in the fact that the family has chosen him to represent the business men of the State. We shall now hear from Mr. John F. Fitzpatrick, local business man and friend of President Smith.

MR. JOHN F. FITZPATRICK

Friends, I feel deeply honored that the family would ask me to say a word at the bier of my friend, President George Albert Smith. I feel humble and inadequate. Would that I could clothe with words the thoughts that are in my heart as I stand here before you.

SINCERITY OF FRIENDSHIP

I have known President Smith, George Albert, as he was so affectionately known to us for a long, long time. He was an easy man to know. He was a man you would just like to know. His friendly smile, his hearty handclasp, and the warmth of his greeting made you feel inwardly, in your heart, the sincerity of his friendship for you and for his fellow man. He was most gracious.

I well remember the arrival here in Salt Lake City of the youngsters from the grade school at Antimony in Garfield County. Most of those youngsters had never been beyond the range of their vision in Antimony itself. You can well imagine their feelings of excitement and thrill at seeing the sights and things of which they had only been told or dreamed.

Yet, as they repeated to me their experiences one of the greatest thrills in that entire trip was their meeting here with President Smith, who so gladly took time from his busy day to see and meet and friendly greet each and every one of those children. They will remember that as long as they live, and I know their prayers are for him today.

NOBILITY OF CHARACTER

He had a creed, as was read to you a moment ago, a philosophy of life, and he lived it every day. He was a most interesting man.

In this world today, torn with dissension, bitterness and strife, with envy and hatred abroad, that true charity stands out and well portrays the nobility of this man's character. That is the keystone of the high respect, the admiration, and the real affection in which he was held by legions of us outside this Church.

He was a man of peace, striving ever for the contentment as well as for the progress of the people—all of the people in the community. He was intensely interested in the building up of communities, both from the standpoint of the economic as well as cultural values. He welcomed any project that would afford employment or enjoyment of the arts. For these, his door was open to Church and non-Church members alike and to all gave a sympathetic hearing.

He was noble, forthright and true. He was an American. And now he has departed this life. By all of us he will be sorely missed, but also he will be long remembered. The Almighty in his wisdom and mercy has now called this beloved man, this true Christian gentleman, to his just and eternal reward.

President David O. McKay:

Sister Irene Jones of the Society For the Aid of the Sightless recently wrote a tribute to President Smith, entitled "An Understanding Heart." Sister Jones, at the request of the family, will now read that tribute.

SISTER IRENE JONES

My dear brothers and sisters, in Isaiah, the 42nd chapter, 16th verse, the Lord has made a promise unto the blind wherein he says: "And I will bring the blind by a way they know not. I will lead them in paths they have not known. I will make darkness light before them, and crooked things straight. These things will I do unto them, and not forsake them."

The more than twelve hundred blind of Utah are mourning today the passing of President George Albert Smith. For we feel that through him this promise has been fulfilled.

KINDNESS TO THE BLIND

Many, many times have I heard him say, "These sightless people are God's children, and if we who can see do not help them, we are going to have to answer to our Father in Heaven."

Now, as he stands before the heavenly throne he can truthfully say, "Father, I lent a comforting, sustaining hand to your children, my brothers and sisters who are traveling life's highway in darkness. I brought light into their lives, I made crooked things straight before them, and, Father, I did not forsake them."

Through the loving spirit of President George Albert Smith, the work for the blind in the Church has expanded, and reached out to touch the lives and enrich the lives of Latter-day Saints and Gentiles. He believed in us and, because of that faith, we have learned to believe in ourselves and have been brought by a way we knew not.

Even in his illness he did not forget us, but sent messages of encouragement and inspiration by his secretary and daughters.

Wednesday, April 4, 1951 was a dark day in the lives of the blind, for we feel that we have lost one of the dearest friends we will ever know, and one of the greatest humanitarians that ever lived. For consolation I have played the record of his dear voice, which he gave me at Christmas time, and, as I listened, I felt that he was very near and that he would always be close at hand to guide us.

He is not dead. Such men forever live in the boundless measure of the love they give.

AN UNDERSTANDING HEART

At a reception given in his honor on his 70th birthday, I wrote and presented a tribute to him. Almost every year after that he has called me by telephone or has written to me to thank me again for those lines. The family has requested that I repeat them here today, and it is with deepest gratitude and humility that I comply with their request in a tribute to the understanding heart of Brother George Albert Smith:

When life beats hard with stormy hands
And bitter teardrops fall,
When friendless winter chills my soul
And empty echoes call,
'Tis then I turn with eager hope,
My steps though spent and lame,
To find an understanding heart
Where burns a friendly flame.
A heart where gentle wisdom dwells
Compassionate and kind;
Whose faith in God and man has taught
A like faith to the blind.

I lay my troubles at his feet,
Each trial, each bitter loss,
The burdens of a hundred more
He helps us bear the cross.
Consecrated by our Lord with apostolic light,
Consecrated in his soul,
He makes our darkness bright.
A loving radiance he sheds
That comes from God to man.
And we who walk in life-long night
Can see as others can.

Although his tender, loving face
From us is shut apart,
We see the gracious wisdom
Of his understanding heart.
We feel the peace within his soul
And know a peace our own;
We hear his silent prayer that tells
We do not walk alone.
His faith in us will give us strength,
As unseen paths we plod
Our souls uplifted by a man
In partnership with God.

May our Heavenly Father look down upon all of us in tender mercy at this time and bring into our darkened lives the healing light of his great and everlasting love is my prayer and I ask it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Tabernacle Choir sang the hymn, "I Know That My Redeemer Lives," soloist, Elder Harold H. Bennett.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Spencer W. Kimball of the Council of the Twelve, Chairman of the Indian Committee of the Church, of which work and people the President was so fond, will now speak to us.

ELDER SPENCER W. KIMBALL

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I stand in reverential awe, almost breathless awe, in this auspicious moment in these services of President George Albert Smith.

A scribe came to the Lord Jesus Christ one day and said:

Which is the first commandment of all? And Jesus answered him . . . Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength: . . .

Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. There is none other commandment greater than these.

And then the scribe added that to love the Lord and to love his neighbour more than himself ". . . is more than all whole burnt offerings and sacrifices." And then the Lord said, "Thou are not far from the kingdom of God."

Whenever I thought of our beloved President, I have always felt that he was very, very near that kingdom.

It seemed to me that every act, every thought of our President would indicate that with all of his heart and soul he loved the Lord, and loved his fellowmen. Is there a mortal being who could have loved them more?

INTEREST IN AMERICAN INDIANS

As his great love for his fellowmen began to grow into a great compassion, he saw in vision a certain whole people who went down from the proverbial Jerusalem to Jericho and they fell among thieves. He saw them stripped of their raiment and sorely wounded. He saw them deserted and deprived. He saw priests come by who saw their plight and passed by on the other side. He saw modern Levites who came and looked and passed by on the other side. President Smith determined it was time to do something constructive for these Indian people who had fallen into misfortune.

He determined that it was time to bind up their wounds, and to pour thereon the oil.

He went to President Heber J. Grant, (President Smith was then in the Council of the Twelve), and asked him for permission to do work among the Indian people which was granted. A committee was organized and the work began in a small way as many programs do.

These words he said in one of his talks: "I have been intensely interested in doing something for the American Indians. I have traveled through several of the reservations; I have seen the need of something more being done for these children who are growing up. It remains for us who know and feel that these Indians, as we refer to them, are our Father's children.

"These Indians are descendants of a prophet of God who left Jerusalem 600 years before the birth of Christ. I have been in their homes, in many places, and have seen their poverty, their patience, and their forbearance." And then he went on and said: "I have had an interest in those Indians, and felt the urge to help, and only within the last two or three years have I had this opportunity and power to do something." He lived to see this work grow, from an infant organization, the Navajo-Zuni Mission, to the full fledged Southwest Indian Mission with more than a hundred missionaries.

He had already seen the effectual work among the Lamanites down in the South Sea Islands, in Mexico, in Spanish America, and in other places, and now he was to see practically every North American mission with vigorous proselyting work being done among the Indians. And then he lived to see many of the 184 Stakes of Zion with intensive proselyting being done in the Stakes among the Indians.

LATTER-DAY SAINT INDIANS PRESENT

He loved to see many, many hundreds of Lehi's descendants join the Church, receive the priesthood, and their endowments, and be organized into branches, and today there are in this congregation, more than a hundred of the Indian brothers and sisters from far up in the north to far down in the south, representing the Navajos and the Zunis, the Hopis and the Apaches, the Cocopohs and the Yumas, the Utes and the Piutes, the Walpis, and many, many others.

Never before, in modern days at least, has there been in a conference, and at a funeral, such a large aggregation of Latter-day Saint Indians, and I know that if President Smith could see them here today his heart would go out to them in compassion, love, and appreciation.

VISIT TO NAVAJO RESERVATION

About four years ago President Smith made a visit to the Navajo Indian Reservation, taking Elder Cowley and myself with him.

It was a missionary meeting, there being priests and ministers present from many of the sects and denominations. A hundred and fifty men and women were there. There were some disputations. Apparently some missionaries had gone to the hospital patients of other sects to bring relief and succor, and heated suggestions were made to restrict missionaries to visit only their own people.

President Smith in majesty stood up, and obtained the floor and said: "My friends, I am perplexed and shocked. I thought people went to the hospital to rest and get well. If I were ill, it would please me very much if any good Christian missionary of any denomination would be kind enough to visit me and bind up my wounds and pour on the sacred oil."

And then President Smith went on to tell them that this Church not only believes in tolerance, but also in understanding, and expressed the thought that long years ago Father Scanlan, a Roman Catholic Priest, conducted mass in the St. George tabernacle at the suggestion and with permission of one of the Council of the Twelve and the president of the stake, who were there.

That happened on May 25, 1879. The priest had complained that he had no place in which he could conduct a mass for his people in southern Utah. The suggestion came from our brethren, and the mass was held. He had said, "We have no one to sing the Mass." The brethren had said, "You furnish the score; we will furnish the singers." And Catholic mass was conducted in a tabernacle.

He also told the group of ministers that the Church had also assisted some of the Protestant denominations to get started in Salt Lake City, and in Utah.

There was a general applause from these church dignitaries and it was as though a magic word had been spoken, like the Master spoke when he said "Peace, Peace, be still." The waves of suspicion and antagonism became calm and placid.

PERFECTION OF LIFE

The Lord Jesus Christ told us, "Be ye perfect even as your Father, which is in heaven is perfect." And so to compare President George Albert Smith with our Lord and Master I do not count a sacrilege, for perhaps he came nearer than the great majority of his contemporaries to that perfection.

The Savior said, "When ye come into an house, salute it, and if the house be worthy let your peace come upon it." And President Smith was much like that. There are homes from ocean to ocean and then from ocean to ocean again who have felt the peace that a great prophet has left in their home.

And the Lord said "Be ye therefore wise as serpents, and harmless as doves," and we have all seen the harmlessness of this good man as well as his wisdom and his inspiration.

The Lord said "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth," and we have seen in him personification of meekness and lowliness of heart, for the Savior said of Himself, "I am meek and lowly in heart," and President Smith has approached it closely.

And then He said, "Well done thou good and faithful servant, thou has been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many." He was good, he was faithful, and he has been ruler over many, but he will yet rule and reign over the many things throughout the eternities.

Way up in the north of this Palestinian country, the Lord asked Peter and his associates, "Whom do men say that I, the Son of Man, am?" and Peter said, "Thou art the Christ, the son of the living God." And then the Lord said, "Blessed art thou Simon Barjonah, for flesh and blood hath not revealed this unto thee, but my Father which is in Heaven."

May God bless his memory and bless us that we may follow him in the righteous things which he has exemplified to us, I pray, and bear you my testimony also, that I also know that this is the truth, that he, President George Albert Smith, was a prophet of God and that he followed several others who were also prophets of God, and that the Gospel has been restored, and it is here for all the billions of peoples in this world. This I bear in great solemnity, and with a great love for my leader, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr., President George Albert Smith's first counselor in the Quorum of the First Presidency, will now address us.

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

First Counselor to President George Albert Smith

My brothers and sisters, and friends: Under all circumstances it is difficult for me, with the words at my command, to express the thoughts and the feelings that are in my heart. But on this occasion it is particularly difficult because it is hard for a man to control his feelings and his thoughts, on occasions such as this, when he has lived and worked as closely as have I and President McKay with a great man of whom it has been properly suggested that his real name was Love.

A TRUE SERVANT TO THE LORD

He was universally kind and considerate of both of us who were privileged and honored to work with him. I fully endorse from my own knowledge and observation all of the good that has been said of him here today, and nothing but good has been said, or could be said.

There lies before us the worn and wilted suit of clothes he wore here; all that we knew and loved and admired, all that led to his accomplishments, all that inspired his love, all that helped him to live righteously, still lives, and is, and will live throughout the eternities to come; he lives, a great soul who spent his life, his strength at the expense of his health in the service of his master.

It was impossible to get him to ease up. He never would quit till he had to go to bed. Time and time again we have urged him, that he go home and rest. Time and time again he has indicated that he would, and an hour or two hours or three hours later, I have looked him up and found him still working. He could refuse nobody an opportunity to talk with him, and no one ever came to him, as has been said here, and went away empty. He was a true servant to the Lord.

HELPLESSNESS OF LOVED ONES

I should like to say a word regarding the family, and particularly the two daughters, Emily and Edith. No father ever had tenderer care, more solicitous attention than these two gave to President Smith, their father. It was Emily's opportunity, because she lived in the home with him, to be a little closer to him in the sense of administering to his wants and needs. Emily has been on duty for weeks past 24 hours a day and Edith has always been at hand to help.

The Lord will bless you two daughters for what you did for your father.

The son, Brother George Albert, was not here. His lot was in other places, but as soon as he returned, he, too, did all he could to help his father as a devoted son.

While not a member of the family I should like to add just a word to what has already been said regarding Brother Arthur Haycock. No father ever had a son more devoted, more loyal, more willing, more available, day or night, than Brother Arthur was available and willing to help President Smith. President Smith could not have lived so long as he did save for the help which this good, devoted, loyal young man gave to him, and the Lord will bless him, too, for that.

ANOTHER LEADER WILL COME

But, I should like to say to the people that another leader will come in due course. Another leader will carry on. He, too, will have love in his heart for you. He, too, will live as President Smith has lived, near to the Lord, and this work, under him and under those who will follow him, will roll forward just so surely as we live.

The world expected the Church to go to pieces when the Prophet

Joseph died. It did not. People thought that when Brigham Young passed, great soul that he was, that the work would dwindle and fade away. We used to hear that the Church could not survive the third generation. We are in the fifth and the sixth, and the Church still lives and grows.

So to the Saints I say, while you mourn today be of good cheer, for the Lord has not forgotten you, nor will he, and he will lead you in the future as he has in the past.

STRENGTH OF TESTIMONY

I repeat, his was a great life. He knew the truths that lie behind those immortal words of that great tragic figure of all time, Job. He, too, could say, "I know that my redeemer liveth." That was the moving, the guiding, the energizing testimony that kept President George Albert Smith going. He never forgot that, and that testimony never dimmed. It was with him as the merest youth. It was with him the day of his death, and every day and hour that lay between.

He also knew what we all know, that there will be a resurrection. The body and spirit shall be reunited to make the soul. He knew the truth expressed by Martha in that great interview between Martha and Christ at the time of the raising of Lazarus.

"Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died."

Jesus said, "Thy brother shall rise again." "I know," replied Martha, "that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day."

Then came those great statements, "I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live:

"And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die. Believest thou this?"

"Yea, Lord: I believe that thou art the Christ, the son of God, which should come into the world."

That was the testimony which burned in the heart of President George Albert Smith.

HIS WORK FINISHED

We shall miss President Smith, miss all the qualities of which so much has been said and deservedly said, and truthfully said, which he possessed but we shall not grieve, because his body was worn and torn; living, he would have been an invalid. His work, I am sure, was finished and more than once he expressed himself to me and to others that he wished to live no longer than the Lord wanted him to live. He was ready to go as the Lord desired.

He greatly exemplified those wonderful words of Paul: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." What a summation of a life, and how true that summation is of this, our beloved and departed president, George Albert Smith.

May God give to his family and to the people, for I assure you, the family, that the people of the Church mourn with you, may he give to you and to them the peace which He alone can give, the peace of which the Savior spoke on the last night in the chamber, the night before the crucifixion: "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid."

May God give this to you, the bereaved immediately, and to us, the Saints, whom he loved so much, and to the world for which he had likewise a deep and undying love; that all of us may profit by the great example which he set, so that we, too, may live righteously, loving our fellow men that we may be with him in the times to come, through all the eternities that are to follow, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus. Amen.

PRESIDENT DAVID O. McKAY

President of the Council of the Twelve Apostles and Second Counselor to President George Albert Smith

In the announcements made of groups who have sent messages of condolence and sympathy, we mentioned ministers of other churches. May I announce to you today that the president of the Reorganized Church, President Israel A. Smith, kinsman of President George Albert, is here in person paying his respects to the family and is sitting among the mourners.

The family very graciously asked if I would speak on this occasion. Out of consideration to you and in face of the fact that much has been said in tribute to our departed brother, which need not and should not be repeated, I will content myself to a few words of summary, and trust that this will be acceptable to my dear friends who are members of this illustrious family.

PURPOSE OF SERVICES

The purpose of these services is to pay tribute to our departed brother, and, secondly to bring solace, and peace to the sorrowing hearts of the bereaved. We have listened to tributes, as great I think, as could be paid to any great leader.

May I now say a word about the second purpose of a funeral service: To bring solace and comfort to sorrowing hearts. This is done by three principal means.

First, in contemplation of the fact that he, whose departure strains the heart strings, has lived a useful, noble life. What consolation that will bring to any bereaved father, mother, or child.

Second, comfort in the consciousness that loved ones were true and loyal as his children and kinsfolk, and that particularly during illness they did everything humanly possible to administer to his needs, to alleviate his pain, and to give him comfort.

And third, comfort in the assurance of the immortality of the human soul; the assurance that their father is just away.

In the highest degree you children and kinsfolk should find peace and consolation from these three contributing factors.

COMFORT IN BEREAVEMENT

Secondly, and I speak advisedly here, for I have seen these children, son and daughters in action, the tender attention, thoughtful, efficient care rendered by you daughters and by Albert and other members of the family, your having left nothing undone, nothing unapplied, which might contribute to your father's restoration or to his comfort, should now in this hour of bereavement bring consolation to your aching hearts. And not only in this hour, but throughout the coming years.

And thirdly, as sure, as certain as Christ's spirit visited other spirits in the eternal realm while his body lay in the borrowed tomb of Joseph of Arimathea, so lives the immortal spirit of your father, our friend, our beloved leader, President George Albert Smith. We said in the opening that we believed he is aware of our presence here today. Why shouldn't he be? Christ was conscious of the nearness of His Father when he stood at the grave of Lazarus and said, "I know thou hearest me always."

Last Tuesday night Brother George Albert Smith lifted his hand to Sister McKay and me and said, "Goodnight." That was his last word to us. Twenty-four hours later he awoke in a glorious morning in the presence of those loved ones who had gone before, and realized the truth of Christ's saying on earth, "In my Father's house are many mansions, if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you."

God bless his memory and bring comfort to your souls today and always, you choice children and members of an illustrious family. I pray in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

President David O. McKay:

After the singing and the benediction will the audience please remain standing until the casket, the General Authorities, and the family have made their exit from the building. You will do this in respectful tribute, I am sure.

There will be a program at the graveside: Singing by the Gleaner Girls quartet, East Mill Creek Ward, and the dedication of the grave will be by Elder Winslow Farr Smith, President Smith's brother.

The Choir will now sing another favorite of President Smith's, "Do What Is Right," after which the benediction will be offered by President Richard L. Evans.

Singing by the Choir, "Do What Is Right."

BENEDICTION

By Elder Richard L. Evans

Our Father in Heaven, we thank thee for the peace and sweet assurance that we have felt here. We thank thee for the privilege that has been ours of association with thy son, President George Albert Smith, in whose passing we have sorrowed, and in whose life we have found reason to rejoice.

Grant our Father that the spirit of love and peace and kindness, which was exemplified by him may move increasingly among men, and that the principles of the Gospel by thy Son, Jesus Christ, to which he devoted his life may speedily move forward in the earth.

We thank thee for the assurance of life everlasting, and for the promise of renewal of association with men such as he whom thou hast taken home.

Comfort and sustain his family our Father, and as he so often prayed and pleaded, grant that we may all live so as to find our names written in the Lamb's Book of Life.

Go forth with us from here with thy peace and protection, with thy guidance and direction and with renewed earnestness in pursuing thy purposes, and let the spirit of thy Son, the Prince of Peace, prevail in the earth, we pray in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

GRAVESIDE SERVICES

With President David O. McKay presiding

The Gleaner Girls quartet of the East Mill Creek Ward sang the hymn, "O My Father," after which the grave was dedicated by Elder Winslow Farr Smith, as follows:

DEDICATION OF GRAVE

By Elder Winslow Farr Smith

Father in Heaven, we have assembled here to lay in mother earth the mortal remains of our loved one, thy servant. By the side of his beloved wife, are we laying him.

Here on this immediate spot of ground are his brothers and sisters that have gone before, also his father and mother, his grandfather and grandmother, and his great-grandfather and great-grandmother, all in the immediate vicinity of this grave. Father, we feel the spirit of his noble ancestors and loved ones who are today looking on him to whom we are bidding earthly farewell.

We are grateful, Father, for the life of this, our beloved one—for the humility; the faith; the love for his children, brothers, and sisters, and for the leadership he has been to us as members of his father's family.

Father, we now bid farewell, and pray that his spirit—the spirit of love, the spirit of peace—may be in the hearts of every one of us who are his Father's children. May we never forget what he has been to us. Father, accept him, we pray thee.

We bless this land, this spot, and dedicate it as the permanent resting place, and ask, Heavenly Father, that thou wilt accept this, thy son. Guard him well, and guard us well that we may be worthy to come and be with him and come forth on the morning of the first resurrection with him.

We dedicate this grave in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

The One Hundred Twenty-second Semi-annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints

The One Hundred Twenty-second Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints convened in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Utah, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, October 5, 6, 7, 1951.

General sessions of the conference were held at 10:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., Friday, Saturday and Sunday, and the General Priesthood meeting convened in the Tabernacle Saturday evening, October 6, at 7:00.

The proceedings of the general sessions were broadcast over Station KSL, and by arrangement through KSL over the following stations:

In Utah: KSUB at Cedar City, KSVC at Richfield, KJAM at Vernal, KBUH at Brigham City, and KVNU at Logan.

In Idaho: KGEM at Boise, KID at Idaho Falls, KEYY at Pocatello, KBIO at Burley, KVMV at Twin Falls, and KRXX at Rexburg.

In Colorado: KEXO at Grand Junction.

In Arizona: KTYL at Mesa.

The proceedings of the general sessions were also televised over KSL television station, channel 5.

All general sessions of the Conference and the General Priesthood meeting were broadcast in the Assembly Hall, just south of the Tabernacle, on the Tabernacle grounds, and in Barratt Hall (60 North Main Street) over a loud-speaking system and by television. In addition, many who could not find accommodation in these buildings assembled on the Tabernacle grounds and listened to the services as they were broadcast from the Tabernacle, by means of amplifying equipment.

President David O. McKay was present and conducted the services at each of the sessions of the Conference, including the General Priesthood meeting.

This report of the Conference also includes a full report of Columbia Broadcasting Company's Church of the Air, Sunday morning, October 7, from 8:00 to 8:30, and the Tabernacle Choir and Organ Broadcast from 9:00 to 9:30.

FIRST DAY

MORNING MEETING

The Conference opened Friday morning, October 5, at 10 o'clock. President David O. McKay presided and conducted the services of the first session. The building was crowded to capacity, the Assembly Hall to the south, on the Temple grounds, was filled with people, as was also Barratt Hall (60 North Main Street).

President David O. McKay:

This is the opening session of the One Hundred Twenty-Second Semi-annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City, Utah.

All the General Authorities of the Church are in attendance excepting Elder John A. Widtsoe of the Council of the Twelve, who has accepted an invitation of the Canadian government for consultation on problems pertaining to irrigation.

Joseph Anderson is the clerk of the conference.

These services and all other general sessions will be broadcast in the Assembly Hall and in Barratt Hall, 60 North Main Street, over a loud speaking system and by television.

This service also, and all other general sessions of the conference, will be broadcast over KSL, Salt Lake City, and by arrangement through KSL over the following stations:

In Utah: KSUB at Cedar City, KSVC at Richfield, KJAM at Vernal, KBUH at Brigham City, and KVNU at Logan.

In Idaho: KGEM at Boise, KID at Idaho Falls, KEYY at Pocatello, KBIO at Burley, KVMV at Twin Falls, and KRXX at Rexburg.

In Colorado: KEXO at Grand Junction.

In Arizona: KTYL at Mesa.

We express appreciation to the stations named for their co-operating in broadcasting the proceedings of this conference. We thank them for their services, which we are pleased to announce will continue throughout this conference. In the interest, however, of time, we shall not repeat this announcement at every session.

All general sessions will also be televised over the KSL television station, channel 5.

The singing for this morning's session will be furnished by the Relief Society Singing Mothers with Florence Jepperson Madsen conducting, and Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ.

We shall begin this session by the Relief Society Singing Mothers singing: "If With All Your Hearts."

The opening prayer will be offered by Elder Frank B. Woodbury, Patriarch to the Salt Lake Stake.

---

The Relief Society Singing Mothers, (Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen conducting and Brother Frank W. Asper at the organ) sang "If With All Your Hearts."

Elder Frank W. Woodbury, Patriarch to the Salt Lake Stake, offered the opening prayer.

Selection by the Relief Society Singing Mothers, "If Ye Love Me, Keep My Commandments."

PRESIDENT DAVID O. MCKAY

My brethren and sisters, in behalf of the General Authorities and in humility I bid you welcome, you who are here assembled in such large numbers, filling this historic Tabernacle to capacity, and also the tens of thousands who are listening in by radio and television. I pray for your help and assistance, and especially for the inspiration of the Lord, that we may sense his presence, and that everyone who is called upon to take any part in this conference may be guided by his inspiring influence.

It is with mingled feelings of joy and satisfaction, encouragement, anxiety, and apprehension, that I stand before you this morning.

GROWTH AND PROGRESS OF CHURCH

I rejoice in the continued growth and progress of the Church. It is a great source of satisfaction to the General Authorities, and I am sure it will be to you, to know that from all parts of the world where the gospel is being preached, reports show substantial advancement in nearly every line of endeavor. The stakes and wards are growing in number, as also are the organized branches in the missions—in the Americas, Europe, and in the islands of the Pacific.

There are more houses of worship in the Church today than ever before in its history, and at the present time there are 420 buildings under construction. Temple ordinances performed since January 1, 1951 to August 31, 1951 exceed those for the corresponding period last year in all temples excepting one, and there is a slight decrease there, but the decrease is explainable. That is in Hawaii.

Notwithstanding this great building program and the other work being carried on in which ward members contribute fifty percent and missions and branches twenty and thirty percent of the cost of construction, tithes and offerings are steadily and consistently increasing.

UPRIGHTNESS OF SERVICEMEN

Because of the call to military duty the number of missionaries in the field is not so large as one year ago. The missionaries are returning and reporting for military duty by the scores every month. Reports of uprightness in the lives of these returned missionaries indicate that by example they will still continue to be good missionaries while serving their country.

I think I shall take time to give you just an extract from one of these reports. A letter dated September 4, 1951 from a major says this:

"This is quite a group we have. With the exception of two fellows it is made up entirely of returned missionaries. This morning we all ate together in the enlisted men's mess hall, and not a single one of them had coffee, even though boiling pitchers full were set at each table. I noticed a peculiar look on the mess sergeant's face as he scratched his head in bewilderment when thirty-two soldiers all took milk."

It is only a little incident, but it speaks volumes for the loyalty of our missionaries who are entering the service in their determination to maintain the standards of the Church. God bless them!

SUBVERSIVE TEACHINGS

All these and other favorable incidents and reports give cause for satisfaction and gratitude, but as I said, there are other things which give rise to feelings of apprehension. For example, the prevalence of pernicious ideas and subversive teachings which pervert the minds of the unstable and uninformed, and in some cases divert the youth from Church standards. In this regard there is reason for concern, too.

The quorums of the priesthood and the auxiliaries, and especially the parents, may not be doing all that they should to counteract these poisonous influences. Religious leaders, civic officers, and all lovers of law and order are today deeply concerned, and not without justification, about the recklessness and lawlessness of youth. Even young folk themselves are deprecating the disobedience of parental authority manifested by some of their companions.

It is a dangerous sign, brethren, when home discipline breaks down, and the loving advice of a wise father and a loving mother is defied. We are told by an elderly American explorer that among the Iroquois Indians "the crime which is regarded as most horrible, and which is without example, is that a son should be rebellious toward his mother"—an ideal that might be well cherished today among men who esteem themselves high in the scale of civilization.

MESSAGE TO YOUTH

Our country's most precious possession is not our vast acres of range land supporting flocks and herds; not productive farms; not our forests; not our mines nor oil wells producing fabulous wealth—our country's greatest resource is our children, our young men and women whose characters will largely determine our nation's future. If it were possible for me this morning to speak directly to the young men and women of the Church, I would say that you should always remember that true joy of life is found, not in physical indulgence and excesses, but in clean living and high thinking; in rendering to others, not inconvenience, injury, or pain, but encouragement, cheer, and helpfulness.

This is simply saying to them that satisfaction in daily life is found in trying to keep the simple law, "Do unto others as you would have others do unto you." Right actions toward others always bring joy; wrongful deeds result in pain, and not infrequently, remorse.

OBEDIENCE BRINGS BLESSINGS

Conformity to the Lord's word or law will invariably contribute to man's happiness and salvation. Those who do not what the Lord commands, we are told, will be subjected to justice and judgment. In other words, there is eternally operative in the moral world a law of compensation and retribution—compensation commensurate with conformity to law; retribution in actual degree to the extent of disobedience.

In this sense I use the word law as having a deeper significance than a rule or dictum prescribed by authority for human actions. It means, rather, "a uniform order of sequence" as operative and unvarying as the law of the inclined plane, or the law of falling bodies.

Confirmation of this may be found in the Lord's statement to Cain, the first disobedient son in history. "If thou doest well, shalt thou not be accepted? and if thou doest not well, sin lieth at the door." (Gen. 4:7.)

It is also stated by the Prophet Joseph Smith, "There is a law, irrevocably decreed in heaven before the foundations of this world, upon which all blessings are predicated.

"And when we obtain any blessing from God, it is by obedience to that law upon which it is predicated." (D. & C. 130:20-21.)

It is said, parents, boys, and girls, that "the soul in the formative period of youth, while it is yet unspotted from the world, may be likened to a block of pure, uncut Parian marble, in which lie boundless possibilities of beauty or of deformity. From the crude marble one will chisel a form of exquisite grace and symmetry; another, a misshapen monstrosity, each visualizing in the formless stone the conception of his brain. Thus we are molded by our ideals."

NEED FOR RIGHT THINKING

Thoughts are the seeds of acts, and precede them. Mere compliance with the word of the Lord, without a corresponding inward desire, will avail but little. Indeed, such outward actions and pretending phrases may disclose hypocrisy, a sin that Jesus most vehemently condemned.

"O generation of vipers," he exclaimed, "how can ye, being evil, speak good things?" (Matt. 12:34.) The Savior's constant desire and effort were to implant in the mind right thoughts, pure motives, noble ideals, knowing full well that right words and actions would eventually follow. He taught what modern physiology and psychology confirm, that hate, jealousy, and other evil passions destroy a man's physical vigor and efficiency. "They pervert his mental perceptions and render him incapable of resisting the temptation to commit acts of violence. They undermine his moral health. By insidious stages they transform the man who cherishes them into a criminal."

EXAMPLE FROM CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Dickens makes impressive use of this fact in his immortal story, Oliver Twist, wherein Monks is introduced first as an innocent, beautiful child; but as "ending his life as a mass of solid bestiality, a mere chunk of fleshed iniquity. It was thinking upon vice and vulgarity, that transformed the angel's face into the countenance of a demon."

That great writer says this: "It is almost impossible to believe that such a devilish nature as Bill Sikes, depicted in the same book, could be found in human form," but Dickens says: "I fear there are in the world some insensible and callous natures that do become, at last, utterly and irredeemably bad. But whether this be true or not, of one thing I am certain—that there are such men as Sikes, who, being closely followed through the same space of time, and through the same current of circumstances, would not give by one look or action for a moment the faintest indication of a better nature. Whether every gentler human feeling is dead within such bosoms, or the proper chord to strike has rusted and is hard to find, I do not know, but the fact is so, I am sure."

I am trying to emphasize that each one is the architect of his own fate, and he is unfortunate, indeed, who will try to build himself without the inspiration of God, without realizing that he grows from within, not from without.

THE GREAT STONE FACE

I have mentioned these negative things, but I call attention of the youth to the story of The Great Stone Face by Nathaniel Hawthorne. Ernest one day said to his mother, as they sat looking at an immense rock in which nature had chiseled a man's face with noble features, and an expression, to quote Hawthorne, "at once grand and sweet, as if it were the glow of a vast, warm heart that embraced all mankind in its affections and had room for more—"

"Mother," said Ernest, "if I were to see a man with such a face, I should love him dearly."

She answered, "If a prophecy come true, we may see him some time or other with exactly a face like that."

That face, as you know, was finally depicted in the countenance of Ernest himself. Having lived a life in which he had constantly kept before himself the vision splendid, there was chiseled in his own countenance the benign features of the great image.

What a man continually thinks about determines his actions in times of opportunity and stress. A man's reaction to his appetites and impulses when they are aroused gives the measure of that man's character. In these reactions are revealed the man's power to govern or his forced servility to yield.

DISOBEDIENCE BRINGS RETRIBUTION

No man can disobey the word of God and not suffer for so doing. No sin, however secret, can escape retribution. True, you may lie and not be detected; you may violate virtue without its being known by any who could scandalize you, yet you cannot escape the judgment that follows such transgression. The lie is lodged in the recesses of your mind, and impairment of your character will be reflected sometime, somehow in your countenance or bearing. Your moral turpitude, though only you, your accomplice, and God may ever know it, will some day canker your soul.

"The more I know intimately the lives of other men, to say nothing of my own," said Huxley in a letter to Charles Kingsley, "the more obvious it is to me that the wicked does not flourish nor is the righteous punished.

"The ledger of the Almighty is strictly kept, and every one of us has the balance of his operations paid over to him at the end of every minute of his existence. The absolute justice of the system of things is as clear to me as any scientific fact. The gravitation of sin to sorrow is as certain as that of the earth to the sun, and more so, for experimental proof of the fact is within the reach of us all, nay, is before us all our lives, if we had but the eyes to see it."

Associate with that the saying in the Book of Mormon, "Sin is never happiness." (See Alma 41:10.) Man is endowed with appetites and passions for the preservation of his life and the perpetuation of his kind. These, when held under proper subjection, contribute to his happiness and comfort; but when used for mere gratification, lead to misery and moral degradation.

PROSTITUTION OF LOVE

Associated with these natural instincts, young folk, is a sin that always seeks seclusion. It is the prostitution of love, the noblest attribute of the soul. God has instituted marriage and the family as the proper condition of expressing in our lives this divine virtue. But sometimes men and women with low ideals and weakened wills permit their passions, like unbridled steeds, to dash aside judgment and self-restraint, and to cause them to commit sin that may sear their conscience and leave in their hearts an everlasting regret.

In this day when modesty is thrust into the background, and chastity is considered an outmoded virtue, I appeal to you to keep your souls unmarred and unsullied from this sin, the consequence of which will smite and haunt you intimately until your conscience is seared and your character sordid. A chaste, not a profligate life is the source of virile manhood, the crown of beautiful womanhood, the contributing source of harmony and happiness in family life, and the source of strength and perpetuity of the race.

Remember, too, the significance of the Savior's saying that if any shall commit adultery even in his or her heart, he shall not have the Spirit, but shall deny the faith and shall fear.

Resist evil, and the tempter will flee from you. If you keep your character above reproach, no matter what others may think, or what charges they make, you can hold your head erect, keep your heart light, and face the world undauntedly because you, yourself, and your God know that you have kept your soul untarnished.

The only thing which places man above the beasts of the field is his possession of spiritual gifts. Man's earthly existence is but a test as to whether he will concentrate his efforts, his mind, his soul upon things which contribute to the comfort and gratification of his physical instincts and passions, or whether he will make as his life's end and purpose the acquisition of spiritual qualities.

FACTORS IN INFLUENCING YOUTH

I said we had a little apprehension that quorums and auxiliaries were not doing all possible to guide youth along these lines. In the Church we have two great divisions: first, organized stakes, composed of wards and other groups—quorums and auxiliaries; second, the missions, divided into branches in which are also, to a limited degree, quorums and auxiliaries. These groups should become greater factors in influencing youth. Consider for a moment what the quorums might do, if the presidency of each quorum, the leaders of each group, and the members would wield influence upon their fellows as the Lord intends they should.

The quorum is an essential part of the Lord's plan for rendering mutual aid. No other organization in the world is so effectively organized into working groups as the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints; for example, there are today approximately 137,000 men holding the Melchizedek Priesthood, men inspired with the same ideals and similar hopes, bound by a solemn duty to help one another to secure economic as well as spiritual aid and comfort. There are also approximately 57,000 men under twenty-one years of age, associated together in the Aaronic Priesthood. There are 57,000 others holding the Aaronic Priesthood, or a total of 114,000 in the Aaronic Priesthood. What a mighty force for good these quorums would be if the spiritual welfare of each member and his obligation to the Church were considered the special duty of each presiding officer! That is a possibility of achievement.

All others not enrolled in quorums should be enlisted in the auxiliaries, and the whereabouts and attitude toward the Church of each one known by at least some teacher or officer.

THE HOME

But even more potent in influencing child life is the home. Upon the parents the Lord has directly placed the responsibility of teaching their children. I wish this paragraph could be written and put on the wall of every home in the Church:

"... inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance, faith in Christ the Son of the Living God, and of baptism and of the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands, when eight years old, the sin be upon the heads of the parents." (D. & C. 68:25.)

The character of a child is formed largely during the first twelve years of his life. It is estimated that in that period a child spends approximately 3200 hours in school; 416 hours in Sunday School and Church; but 52,500 hours in the home, not counting twelve hours a day for sleep.

In other words, he spends sixteen times as many waking hours in the home as in the school, and 126 times as many hours in the home as in the Church!

Thus, "In the homes of America are born the children of America, and from them go out into American life American men and women. They go out with the stamp of these homes upon them, and only as these homes are what they should be, will children be what they should be."

I shall not take time to quote all Luther Burbank said about the training of children as he trained plants, but he says the use of an influence over and over again is necessary, keeping everlastingly at it. This is what fixes traits in plants, the constant repetition of an influence until at last it is irrevocably fixed and will not change. "Parents, you cannot afford," he says, "to get discouraged. You are dealing with something far more precious than any plant, the precious soul of a child."

Parents who do not know where their children are at night are recreant to the sacred obligation of parenthood, and untrue to the high ideals of the Church regarding home life.

Do not say now in your minds that that is impossible. Just go back to your own homes and the care that you know your father and mother had regarding you.

UNDERMINING FORCES

I must not elaborate upon this further, but I wish to mention another condition that gives cause for concern and apprehension, and that is the insidious influences, as well as the blatant heralding of ideas that undermine century-tried principles of peace, of justice, and of advancement toward the day of universal brotherhood.

We are grieved when we see or hear men and women, some of whom even profess membership in the Church, looking with favor upon the pernicious teachings of these groups, especially Communism. These credulous, misguided persons claim to be advocates of peace, and accuse those who oppose them as advocates of war. They should remember that all of us should ever keep in mind that there are some eternal principles more precious than peace, dearer than life itself.

Our revolutionary fathers sensed this, and their innermost feelings were expressed in the words of Patrick Henry: "Is life so dear or peace so sweet as to be purchased at the price of chains and slavery?"

Free agency, for example, is a divine gift, more precious than peace, more to be desired even than life. Any nation, any organized group of individuals that would deprive man of this heritage should be denounced by all liberty-loving persons. Associated with this fundamental principle is the right of individual initiative, the right to worship how, where, or what one pleases, and the simple privilege to leave a country, if one choose, without having to skulk out as a culprit at the risk of being shot and killed.

At heart Communism is atheistic, and Facism is equally antagonistic to freedom and to other Christian principles—even denying the divinity of Jesus Christ, and the existence of God.

NEED FOR INTEGRITY

Today there is a great need in the world for men of integrity, men of honor, men whose words are as good as their bond, leaders of nations who will consider international agreements sacred.

The philosopher Thoreau said, "It matters not half so much what kind of ballot you drop into the ballot box once a year, as what kind of man you drop out of bed into the streets every morning."

Man's greatest need is real conversion to the eternal truths of the gospel—to the truth that Jesus Christ came to give life and light to the human family. I feel that with all my soul, and so do you fellow-workers who sit before me.

Recently, a group of friends presented one of their number with a valuable, practical gift. In accepting it, the man said that wherever he might travel, the possession of that gift would be a constant reminder of his friends' affection and regard.

Brethren and sisters, all life is a gift of God. Appreciation of that fact should inspire us with a desire to live daily exemplary lives, that others, seeing our good deeds might be led to glorify our Father in heaven, of whose existence and inspiration I testify before you this morning, and of the divinity of whose Church I bear testimony, in the name of Jesus Christ, our Redeemer. Amen.

ELDER HENRY D. MOYLE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I join with you my brethren and sisters in expressing to our Father in heaven our thanks and gratitude for our great leader and president who stands at the head of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints here and now. I hope that we shall all have that faith in his admonitions which will permit us to go forward and enact in our lives the teachings which we thus receive through the mouthpiece of our Heavenly Father, here on this earth.

DIVINITY OF THE WORK

I know that I speak the thoughts of all who are here assembled when I say that we uphold and sustain President David O. McKay as our prophet, seer, and revelator. And so it is with great humility that I stand here before you and in his presence, in the presence of my brethren, to bear my testimony to you of the divinity of the work in which we are engaged.

I am grateful for the unity which exists among the General Authorities of this Church, and I know that there is, thus, an example set to the people of the Church by which they could very well profit. That same unity should extend into every stake and into every ward, every mission, every branch of the Church. I am grateful for the sustaining power and influence that comes into my life and assists me in my work as a result of your faith and prayers, my brethren and sisters. I am grateful for the affection, the sustaining power and influence, the faith and prayers of my brethren with whom I have the privilege to associate day by day, and acknowledge before you and my Heavenly Father that our ministry would be empty were it not for these sustaining influences. I know with all my heart that God lives and that Jesus is the Christ, and I want for nothing but to dedicate my life, my energy, to proclaiming this testimony to the world, to let my fellow men know that there can be no joy in life, and certainly no salvation hereafter, unless we understand the laws of God, given to us for our happiness and our salvation, and in turn lend obedience to them.

OBEDIENCE TO LAW

I feel to repeat the revelation given us by the Prophet Joseph Smith, which President McKay has already quoted you this morning,

There is a law, irrevocably decreed in heaven before the foundations of this world, upon which all blessings are predicated,

And when we obtain any blessing from God, it is by obedience to that law upon which it is predicated. (D. & C. 130:20-21.)

The Lord has said,

I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say; but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise. (Ibid., 82:10.)

President McKay has told us here this morning the responsibilities we have resting upon us as fathers and mothers in Israel. I testify to you that if we do that which we have been commanded, our children and our children's children will be blessed and will be encouraged to walk in our footsteps and will be crowned eventually with us in the glory of our Father's kingdom.

For a long time past I have been tremendously impressed with the fact that God is no respecter of persons, that his Church and kingdom here upon this earth is governed and regulated and controlled by law, and that that law is your law; it is my law; and to that law there are no exceptions.

We have been told in the scriptures that,

For there is no respect of persons with God.

For as many as have sinned without law shall also perish without law; and as many as have sinned in the law shall be judged by the law. (Romans 2:11-12.)

I say that those of us who have received the law must of necessity be judged by it and be responsible for any disobedience we contribute to it.

For not the hearers of the law are just before God, but the doers of the law shall be justified. (Ibid., 2:13.)

That is the law of the gospel, and so, as we understand these simple fundamental laws of the gospel, we must live them; we must teach them to our children; we must be bound by them; and we must claim no exemption for ourselves.

NO SPECIAL PRIVILEGES

Brother Widtsoe, who is absent from our midst today, has recently written, "Full happiness within the Church demands that men comply with all its laws, regulations, and ordinances. Obedience is incomplete if a person decides to obey one and disobey another gospel requirement. Usually, an attempt to select some practices and ignore others leads to a weakening of the will for righteousness, and soon complete disobedience sets in." (Joseph Smith, p. 166.) I am sure we will accept that as true, that we must do nothing which weakens our will.

I have a feeling that sometimes we are inclined to exempt ourselves from the law. We seek special privileges. I don't know whether it has become so common in the world for men politically and socially to claim exemptions from the operation of the civil law as applied to them that they think maybe, within the realm of the kingdom and Church of God they are likewise entitled to special privileges. I am sure of one thing, that President McKay does not claim any special privileges for himself, and that the General Authorities follow his example, and we know and we believe that we are bound by the law.

STRICT CONFORMITY

I believe it is time when many of us should feel that it is important to hew strictly to the line, to keep our own houses in order. So I ask you in light of these suggestions, should we insist upon going on a mission or sending our sons unless we are worthy? Can we meet the requirements that have been laid down for those entitled to go? Should we ever feel it necessary to call upon our bishop or our stake president for a recommend to go to the temple if we know that we have not first met the law in respect thereto and have made ourselves worthy to receive this special privilege? Some of us may feel that we can impose upon the bishop a little bit, that we will be forgiven. I wonder how many of us realize that we cannot expect, if we go to the House of the Lord unworthily (whether we go there for our own endowments or to do vicarious work for those who have preceded us), the same efficacy will attach to our work as would to the work of those who go to the House of the Lord worthily. Let us think about that, and in place of asking for a special privilege, see that we keep the laws of God in our own homes and in our own lives, and encourage our own sons and daughters to do likewise in order that they might go to the House of the Lord worthily.

The same could be said of the Word of Wisdom, the payment of tithes, fasting. We have carried on in the Church, all this year, a great campaign connected with the welfare program of the Church to encourage our people to fast. I say to you today that there are none of the blessings of the fast that can come to you and me unless we fast. We must all fast in the same manner. There is no exception to the requirement that we do fast if we are ultimately going to have a real interest in the kingdom of our Heavenly Father, as King Benjamin once said.

In speaking of charity, Brigham Young and the Twelve said, in April, 1842, while building the temple in Nauvoo:

This is not all. It will be in vain for us to build a place where the Son of Man may lay his head, and leave the cry of the widow and the fatherless unheard by us ascending up to the orphan's God and the widow's Friend. It is in vain we cry "Lord, Lord" and do not the things our Lord hath commanded, to visit the widow, the fatherless, the sick, the lame, the blind, the destitute, and minister to their necessities. (D. H. C. 4:591.)

I call attention to prayer. Can we accomplish the purposes that President McKay has outlined for us with reference to our children if we do not pray, as a family, in the home, bring into our homes and into the lives of our youths the spirit as well as the power and inspiration of prayer? And so I say that no home should be surprised if its children do not receive the same strength and courage that other children reared in a home of prayer receive, if they are reared in a household which is a stranger to prayer.

HONESTY IN DAILY LIVES

Some of us claim the privilege of withholding support from our bishop, our stake president, and some of us feel that for one reason or another it is not incumbent on us to sustain the General Authorities of the Church, each man in his office and calling. But I say to you that we cannot fail to respond, especially those of us who hold the priesthood and our wives and our families, to the requirement which God has written into his law in respect thereto and receive the blessings that might otherwise be ours. In our daily lives it is impossible for us to cheat a little and still be honest.

The commandment is to pay every man his dues, and no man can get to heaven who justly owes his brother or his neighbor, who has or can get the means and will not pay it; it is dishonest, and no dishonest man can enter where God is. (Brigham Young and the "twelve," April 1842, Ibid., 593.)

It is impossible for us to take advantage of one another in any way, shape, or form and still have that brotherly love which should characterize the membership of the Church of Jesus Christ. We could go on and review all of the activities of life and come to the same conclusion on each. It is therefore proper for us today to Bring forth fruits meet for repentance,

And think not to say within yourselves, We have Abraham to our father; for I say unto you, that God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham. (See Matthew 3:8-9.)

For the promise, that he should be the heir of the world, was not to Abraham, or to his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith. (Romans 4:13.)

In other words, no matter whether we today boast of being of the seed of Abraham, just as the house of Israel did in the days of old, we are nevertheless to be justified only by our obedience to the law of God.

And if ye call on the Father, who without respect of persons judgeth according to every man's work, pass the time of your sojourning here in fear. (1 Peter 1:17.)

We must never forget.

That which breaketh a law, and abideth not by law, but seeketh to become a law unto itself, and willeth to abide in sin, and altogether abideth in sin, cannot be sanctified by law, neither by mercy, justice, nor judgment. Therefore, they must remain filthy still. (D. & C. 88:35.)

Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.

For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting. (Galatians 6:7-8.)

I hope and pray, my brethren and sisters, we shall as a result of this great conference go to our homes, to our work, to our wives, and to our families, and realize and appreciate that we must teach the law as it has been revealed to us in these latter days and then lend strict obedience to it, and dedicate our lives to our families and to our children that they might likewise be obedient, and this I humbly pray in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

Singing by the Choir and congregation, "Come, Come, Ye Saints."

President David O. McKay:

Elder Thomas E. McKay, one of the Assistants to the Twelve, will now speak to us. We know of the struggle he has made since he lay at death's door. We publicly acknowledge the blessings of the Lord in his behalf. He will be followed by Elder Mark E. Petersen of the Council of the Twelve.

ELDER THOMAS E. MCKAY

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

President McKay, Counselors, President Smith, brethren and sisters, while being so affectionately helped by my son from where I was sitting to where I am now standing, a statement flashed through my mind attributed to a good friend, the late J. Golden Kimball, when he stated, "If you wish to live forever, just get an incurable disease and take care of it." Yes, I confess that I am guilty of having such thoughts about others, and it is stated that the measure ye mete unto others shall be meted unto you again; so it is all right if some of you are thinking that of me; I hope that you are because I'd like that measure that I have meted to others to be wiped out or balanced before I go to the other side. I have always had an idea, a strong one, that it would be much better for all of us if we could repent of all our sins before we go to the other side. And as it has been stated this morning by President McKay, also by Brother Moyle, we may get by on this side by a little lying and a little cheating and a little stealing, but we will have to meet it, brothers and sisters, as sure as we live. The Lord is just, and these things will have to be paid for before we can progress as we would like to on the other side.

POWER OF PRAYER

I am delighted beyond expression to be here with you this morning, and I wish openly to thank my Father in heaven for hearing and answering the prayers that have so thoughtfully been offered for me, and especially do I thank you, brethren and sisters, my dear friends, for remembering me in your prayers. I believe with all my heart in the power of prayer. I have always believed in and accepted prayer as one of the great principles governing us in our lives, and I am thankful that so many are now thinking of prayer. They are speaking of it from the pulpit, in the press, and also over the radio. Just last night we listened to a play, the Home Theatre, I think it is called, over the Mutual Broadcasting System, and the sponsors of this play generally make this very pertinent statement at the close: "More things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of." (Tennyson.) The other statement, very applicable especially to this day where divorces are so prevalent: "The family that prays together, stays together."

PRAYER IN THE HOME

I am sure that many young couples who have started life, opening their homes for themselves, have heard that statement and would like very much, perhaps, to begin again by having prayer in the home. I know the young wives would like to have it, and maybe the young husbands, but some of them perhaps do not know how to pray. I know we had missionaries arrive in the field who didn't know how to pray. You could tell always when a missionary came from a home where they had family prayers and had had the opportunity to take part in that family prayer. And to avoid embarrassment of these young missionaries, who hadn't had that opportunity, because of neglect of their parents, I generally made it a point in our first meeting with the missionaries to help guide them in knowing how to pray. I told them, among other things, always to express appreciation in their prayers, followed by their requests, and if they thought of prayers divided in that manner, it would be of help to them, even if they had never prayed before. If they would just stand up and say, "We thank thee, Father in heaven," and then name the blessings: for health and strength, for our parents, for the privilege of being in the mission field, for the Church, for our citizenship, then they could go on. If they would just express their appreciation and then follow it by the requests that they have: "Continue to bless us, bless us in our family life that peace and love and unity may continue. Bless our brother who is in the war," perhaps. Well, if people would just think of prayer as being divided in that way, it might help them.

There may be young couples who are listening in who listened to that play last night, and when it was stated that "The family that prays together, stays together," I am sure they thought they would like to begin, and I hope that they will.

EXPRESSING APPRECIATION

Expressing appreciation: Do not ever forget to express appreciation to our Father in heaven for the blessings that we have received from him. There would be more love in the home if we expressed appreciation for our wives, menfolk. We love them as much as ever, but we don't tell them. We used to take them flowers occasionally, especially when we were courting them, but I am sure there are men listening in now who have never given their wives bouquets of flowers. This theme was developed in one of our stakes with scattered wards, some of them nearly fifty miles from where the conference was being held, and the presidency of the stake very wisely organized a transportation committee, comprised of adult members of the Aaronic Priesthood and adult members who have no priesthood, and even some non-members. They took their appointment seriously, and they made it possible for every person in that scattered community, stake, to be in conference. In that way the presidency, of course, had a large number of the adult members of the Aaronic Priesthood there.

After this theme had been developed, it was told that one of the men thought that the speaker was speaking directly to him. He was working at one of the defense plants at the time, making a lot of money. The men were paid every two weeks. They cashed their checks right there where they were working for convenience. As this man was driving home one night after receiving his two weeks' pay, making more in two weeks than he usually made in two months, he stopped at the drugstore and bought a box of candy, the kind he used to take to his sweetheart during his courting days. He saw a flower shop in the corner of the drugstore, and he thought, "Well, I believe I will get a bouquet of flowers. I know my sweetheart liked dark red roses." So he had the flower girl make up a beautiful bouquet of roses.

He took them home, gave his usual three rings to announce to his wife that he had arrived. She came hurrying to the door as usual, just as he was awkwardly pushing the door closed with his back. He handed the roses to his wife and then awkwardly pushed the box of candy towards her, blushing, I guess. She looked at the flowers, then the box of candy, then at her husband and said, "John, let me smell your breath." Well, he was overdoing it a little perhaps all at once, but as she placed those flowers in the vase (one I am told she had received at her wedding and had never had occasion to use), tears came into her eyes. And as they were munching over the candy in the evening, she said, "John, remember this is the kind of candy you brought me the first time you called to see me, and I was so embarrassed because father kept returning for just another piece?"

And he said, "Yes, I do remember, and how pleased I was that your father did keep returning. I was worried because I thought maybe he wouldn't like me, and I saw that he liked my candy anyhow, and maybe liked me."

APPRECIATION BRINGS LOVE

I want to tell you brethren and sisters we would have more love in our homes and in our wards and in our stakes if we just took time not only to appreciate our wives, but also to tell them that we love them, not only to appreciate what our bishops are doing for our boys in the Aaronic Priesthood, but also put our hand on the shoulder of the bishop and tell him, "Bishop, how I do appreciate what you are doing for my boys." Tell the superintendent, and the Sunday School teachers, and tell your ward teachers. Next time they come, make them feel at home, and when they get up to say good-night after delivering their lesson, kneel down and pray with them, receiving their blessings.

May we, my brethren and sisters, have the will power to express our appreciation—not only to appreciate, but also to express that appreciation more, and to pray together oftener.

TESTIMONY

And in conclusion, may I, my brethren and sisters, express with all my heart my gratitude to my Father in heaven for giving me a testimony of the divinity of this work in which we are engaged. I know that he lives, that he is our Father. We are all his children. I know that Jesus is the Christ, and that his Church is upon the earth, and that the men who have stood at the head of this Church from the time of the Prophet Joseph Smith to the present time when President David O. McKay stands at the head, have all been called of God, and they have been set apart by the laying on of hands to preside over the Church, to preach the gospel, and to administer in the ordinances thereof. I bear you this testimony humbly, and in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER MARK E. PETERSEN

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I am grateful, my brothers and sisters, to meet with you in general conference again. I was greatly impressed by that masterful sermon of our President as he opened the conference; and with these other brethren. I surely sustain him as the prophet, seer, and revelator of the Lord.

I was more than happy to see Brother Thomas E. McKay here, and I am so glad that he bore that wonderful testimony to you. I think I would like to tell you another testimony about Brother Thomas E. McKay, and I believe I will make that my address to you here in this conference.

INCIDENT OF HEALING

Not very long ago I was down in one of the California stakes attending a stake conference. At the close of the morning meeting, one of the bishops brought his mother to the stand as she wished to shake hands and send a message back home. When she reached the stand, she said, "Will you give a message from me to Brother Thomas E. McKay?"

I said, "I shall be very glad to."

She said: "It has been a couple of years since he was here to stake conference, but I want you to take a message to him."

At that time I was holding in my hands a Book of Mormon that I had used during the conference. She took the Book of Mormon from my hands and opened it and read a paragraph to me, then she closed the book and gave it back.

She said, "Two years ago Elder Thomas E. McKay was down here to our stake conference. I was blind. I knew that if he would lay his hands upon my head I would receive my sight again. I sent over to the conference and had him come. He and the other brethren laid their hands upon my head, and blessed me. Now you see that without even the use of glasses I have been able to read a paragraph from your book. When you get back to Salt Lake City, will you tell him what I have done here today and express to him the gratitude I feel to the Lord that one of his chosen servants came down here and was willing to lay his hands upon my head? Whereas I was blind two years ago, now I can see and I can read without glasses."

A TRUE SERVANT

I thought that was a beautiful testimony she bore to one of the servants of God. I have loved Brother McKay ever since I first became acquainted with him some years ago. I can testify to you along with this good sister from California that indeed Thomas E. McKay through his life has been a true servant of God, and I am glad that he stood here today and bore that fervent testimony that he knows that God lives; that he knows that Jesus is the Christ; that he knows that Joseph Smith was a true prophet of God; and that all the men who have succeeded him in the presidency of this Church likewise are prophets of the Lord.

I bear you this testimony also because I know that these things are true, and I give you this testimony in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER RICHARD L. EVANS

Of the First Council of Seventy

I wish that Brother Petersen had followed me instead of preceding me, for I should have tried to see that he had more time and I had less.

I should like to express my appreciation for my association and membership with you, my brethren and sisters, and for the confidence and encouragement of the First Presidency and my other brethren among the General Authorities, and to express my support and prayers for them in the heavy burdens they carry.

EVIDENCE OF FAITH

President McKay's report this morning of one item reminded me of an interpretation that I have placed for my own personal comfort upon the fact of our tremendous building program, and I have stated it previously to this congregation: I believe that some four hundred and twenty buildings actually in the course of construction at the present time is a great and tangible evidence of the faith of this Church and its leadership in the future, and I like to accept it as such.

TEMPLE SQUARE ACTIVITIES

Perhaps you will be interested in knowing of some of the activities on Temple Square this past year. Up to the close of September, we had had some 895,439 visitors come through the gates of Temple Square for this year of 1951. The general travel index, in this area, at least, is a little down, as compared to last year, as indicated by the business barometer of those establishments that largely deal with tourist trade. But it looks again as if we may reach or exceed, or at least closely approach, the million mark again—a million visitors who have come to see us as we are on Temple Square during this year of 1951. And we are pleased to report that despite some decrease in general tourist travel and in the number of visitors who have passed through our gates, we have had the privilege of conducting tours and telling our story to more people this year, up to this time, than ever before on record, in a like period of time.

We have the great privilege of meeting here some of the finest people from almost every part of the world, and it is encouraging and gratifying to partake of their spirit as they come here—asking and with open arms, and they are gracious guests, as we try to be gracious hosts—to Temple Square, which I believe to be the greatest ten acres in the world, that I know anything of, at least.

I remember one fine, elderly lady from a remote part of the country, who not many weeks ago looked over the valley and said, "No wonder Brigham Young and the pioneers chose this place." Well, it looks easy after the work is done; it looks desirable. But every time I look at the tabernacle and the temple, and every time I hear the organ, I am made humble in thinking of what they did with what they had.

CHURCH AFFILIATIONS

Brother Harold Lundstrom invited my attention to a most interesting figure or two from the 1951 Yearbook of American Churches published only last month. Sometimes people ask us why we send missionaries to Christian peoples. This yearbook, published by the National Council of Churches, indicates that there are about 256 religious groups in the United States at the present time, to which some eighty-seven million people belong. Only about fifty-eight percent of the population of the United States of America claims or is counted as having affiliation with any church group, which means that beside those who are somewhat disaffected or disinterested or inactive or who haven't found what they want in their own churches, there are some sixty to seventy millions of people right here among us in our own nation, who are not claimed by, and do not claim, any church. Certainly one of the greatest missionary fields in the world is here at home, besides our abundant opportunities abroad.

OBLIGATIONS TO CHILDREN

President McKay and other speakers have mentioned our obligations to our children, and some thoughts have been running through my mind concerning them: It doesn't matter what you have if you don't deliver it, no matter what talent or ability or capacity. It doesn't matter what truth you possess if you don't use it. And, so far as the next generation is concerned, it doesn't matter what you have learned if you don't pass it on. Every generation needs teaching, not only by example, but also by specific word, and, as indicated by President McKay, the great number of hours we have with our children in the home, as compared with their hours in schools and the churches, is somewhat indicative of the ratio of our responsibility concerning them. Every generation is a relay station to pass on the great, eternal truths to the next generation, and I pray that we may do so and that no part of this eternal message may stop at our relay point but may be continually passed on to the next generation—to our children and our children's children.

A PECULIAR PEOPLE

We sometimes hear the phrase applied to us (sometimes applied to us by ourselves) that we are a "peculiar people." The word peculiar is not peculiar to us; it is peculiar to scripture. It is a word by which the Lord describes a generation that he will have, peculiar in purity, in honor, in righteousness as indicated in both Old and New Testament texts. And I believe the opportunity we have with our children and with the visitors who come here prompts us more than ever to have in mind that we must be in some respects set apart and in some respects different—not queer, that is not the connotation of the word as applied in scripture—but I think we should be peculiarly honest, peculiarly dependable, peculiarly industrious, peculiarly willing in our work, peculiarly kind, peculiarly hospitable, peculiarly understanding, and peculiarly happy.

And I am sure that our young people are peculiarly blessed in many ways. For one thing they are blessed with membership in a Church that is committed to the acceptance of all truth. They are blessed in knowing that there is no truth that they could ever discover that their Church would not accept in any field of thought or learning. All that the Church asks is that what it is asked to accept shall be beyond theory, beyond supposition, beyond private opinion. They are peculiarly blessed in belonging to a Church that will accept every truth they ever discover in any field or from any source.

We should be, and I think we are, peculiarly sustained in hardship and in times of difficulty, and peculiarly comforted in times of sorrow and uncertainty; and I ask our Father in heaven that his blessings may be upon these young people of ours who are faced with uncertainty and difficult situations that they may be peculiarly blessed as they live for these blessings and keep their covenants and are faithful in the performance of their duties, wherever their country may call them, wherever mission service or any other essential service may take them.

And may this be a time for teaching our children of the mission and message of him who said, "of such is the kingdom of heaven"; and may his peace and the fulfilment of his promises be unto all of us; and may we repent where we need repentance and conform to the principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ and live so that those who come to see us will sense our "peculiarities" in the constructive sense in which the Lord used the word in scripture.

I ask that the blessing of our Father in heaven may be with each of us in all of our problems, in all of our decisions in life, in our counseling of our children, in our teaching them the great and eternal truths, and in all our meetings with others, so that our lives may be consistent with our convictions and with the commandments of God, that our conduct may be consistent with those things we profess, and I do it in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

We have been deeply impressed, as you have, with the testimonies and remarks of these Brethren.

We are now nearing the conclusion of this first session. I have been most favorably impressed with the reverential attitude of this large congregation. Truly there has been a spirit of worship. Though every seat is taken, members standing in the gallery and in the rear of the hall, there has scarcely been a sound that has been out of harmony with this peaceful spirit. I mention it as an example to all the wards in the Church.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers will now sing: "The Voice in the Wilderness," directed by Florence Jepperson Madsen.

The closing prayer will be offered by Elder Gilbert R. Tingey, formerly president of the Samoan Mission, after which this conference will stand adjourned until 2:00 o'clock this afternoon. The proceedings of that session will be broadcast over KSL, and by arrangement through KSL over the other stations named at the beginning of this meeting. The conference will also be broadcast over the television station of KSL, channel 5.

Important messages and calls coming to us for persons supposed to be in attendance at the conference will be announced at the dismissal of the meeting over the loud speaking system on the grounds. Similar messages coming in will likewise be broadcast at the close of each general session of the conference without further notice.

The choir music for this session has been furnished by the Relief Society Singing Mothers with Florence Jepperson Madsen conducting, and Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers sang, "The Voice in the Wilderness."

Elder Gilbert R. Tingey, formerly President of the Samoan Mission, offered the benediction.

Conference adjourned until 2:00 p.m.

FIRST DAY AFTERNOON MEETING

The second session of the Conference convened in the Tabernacle at 2:00 p.m., Friday, October 5, with President David O. McKay presiding and conducting the services.

President David O. McKay:

This is the second session of the One Hundred Twenty-second Semi-annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City.

These services and all general sessions of the conference will be broadcast in the Assembly Hall and in Barratt Hall, 60 North Main, over a loud speaking system and by television.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over Station KSL at Salt Lake City, and by arrangement through KSL, over the stations named in the first session of this conference.

This session will be televised also over the KSL television station, channel 5.

The choir singing for this session will be by the Relief Society Singing Mothers with Florence Jepperson Madsen conducting, and Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ.

We shall begin this service by the Relief Society Singing Mothers singing: "By the Waters of Babylon."

The opening prayer will be offered by Elder Gaskell Romney, Patriarch to the Bonneville Stake.

Singing, "By the Waters of Babylon," Relief Society Singing Mothers.

The opening prayer was offered by Elder Gaskell Romney, Patriarch to the Bonneville Stake.

The hymn, "Come Unto Me," was sung by the Relief Society Singing Mothers.

ELDER HAROLD B. LEE

Of the Council of the Twelve

I think I have never stood before a conference congregation when I have felt so utterly dependent upon the Spirit of the Lord and upon your sustaining faith and prayers. I lean heavily upon you and ask for an interest in your prayers.

Before you and my Heavenly Father I confess my weaknesses, my shortcomings, and ask for his pardon, that I might be in such a condition as to have the direction of the Holy Spirit, not only as I shall occupy these few moments, but also as I go forward and attempt to undertake the great responsibilities that devolve upon one called to serve in this great Church.

AN ABIDING TESTIMONY

I have searched my soul, and I feel that I can say to you that I count by far the most valuable of all the things which I possess today an abiding testimony in the divinity of this work. I know that my Redeemer lives. The certainty and conviction that I feel in my soul today is as certain as that night follows day.

I have been grateful that I have found myself in full harmony with that inspiring message of our leader, President McKay, this morning. His remarks and the prayer that was offered at the commencement of this service by Patriarch Gaskell Romney have led my mind into a train of thinking, which, if the spirit will bless me, I desire to follow.

PARABLE OF THE TEN VIRGINS

Patriarch Romney, in his prayer, said that the greatest weakness among us today was from within. The Master taught a great truth in a lesson which has been given to us for generations since that time to prepare us and to teach us in things that pertain to our day, and the events which are to come. This is the message, the words of which are not new to any of you who listen:

Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins, which took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom.

And five of them were wise, and five were foolish.

They that were foolish took their lamps, and took no oil with them:

But the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps.

While the bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept.

And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him.

Then all those virgins arose, and trimmed their lamps.

And the foolish said unto the wise, Give us of your oil; for our lamps are gone out.

But the wise answered, saying, Not so; lest there be not enough for us and you; but go ye rather to them that sell, and buy for yourselves.

And while they went to buy, the bridegroom came; and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage: and the door was shut.

Afterward came also the other virgins, saying, Lord, Lord, open to us.

But he answered and said, Verily I say unto you, I know you not.

Watch, therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour, wherein the Son of man cometh. (Matt. 25:1-13.)

This was a parable, as with many of the Master's teachings, based upon customs with which the people, his hearers, were already familiar.

The purpose of this lesson was to impress upon those called to the ministry and upon his followers and upon the world that there should be an unceasing watchfulness and preparation for the day which he had predicted when the Lord would come again in judgment upon the earth.

The bridegroom of the parable was the Master, the Savior of mankind. The marriage feast symbolized the second coming of the Savior to receive his Church unto himself. The virgins were those who were professed believers in Christ, because they were expectantly waiting for the coming of the bridegroom to the marriage feast, or they were connected with the Church and the events which were to transpire with reference to it.

MODERN REFERENCE

That this parable did refer particularly to the believers in Christ with a warning to them is further indicated by what the Lord has told us in modern revelation in which he said:

These are the things that ye must look for; . . . even in the day of the coming of the Son of Man.

And until that hour there will be foolish virgins among the wise; and at that hour cometh an entire separation of the righteous and the wicked. (D. & C. 63:53-54.)

undoubtedly meaning a separation of the wicked from the righteous among the professing believers in the Lord Jesus Christ.

The Lord defines the wise virgins of his parable in still another revelation in which he said,

For they that are wise and have received the truth, and have taken the Holy Spirit for their guide, and have not been deceived—verily I say unto you, they shall not be hewn down and cast into the fire, but shall abide the day. (Ibid., 45:57.)

Here is clearly indicated a truth we must all recognize, that among the people of God, the believers in the Savior of the world, there are those who are wise and keep the commandments, and yet there are those who are foolish, who are disobedient, and who neglect their duties.

PROCESS OF PREPARATION

President Brigham Young corrected an error with respect to the preparation necessary for the enjoyment of the presence of the Lord when he comes, in this statement:

Tradition has taught us that the great purpose of religion is to prepare people to die, that when they have passed through a change of heart, become converted, they are ready for glory at any moment, and to dwell with the Father and the Son in the heavens to all eternity. This is a mistake, for they have to improve, become substantially changed from bad to good, from sin to holiness, here or somewhere else, before they are prepared for the society they anticipate enjoying. (Discourses of Brigham Young, 1943 ed, p. 16.)

Preparation for that achievement is a process. For that very purpose the gospel of Jesus Christ was restored in its fulness in this dispensation. So the Prophet Joseph Smith was told by the Angel Moroni, as the Prophet has recorded in his history:

This messenger, proclaimed himself to be an angel of God, sent to bring the joyful tidings that the covenant which God made with ancient Israel was at hand to be fulfilled; that the preparatory work for the second coming of the Messiah was speedily to commence; that the time was at hand for the gospel in all its fulness to be preached in power, unto all nations, that a people might be prepared for the millennial reign. (Read Pearl of Great Price, Joseph Smith, 2.)

A VOICE OF WARNING

The responsibilities of the prophets in every dispensation have been to sound a warning for the nations to repent and to come unto the Lord and avoid the judgments that otherwise will be sent upon mankind.

President Wilford Woodruff, in a sermon delivered to temple workers in Brigham City in June 1894, made a remarkable prediction and a statement with regard to these matters. A part of his sermon is as follows:

We cannot draw a veil over the events that await this generation. No man that is inspired by the spirit and power of God can close his ears and his eyes or his lips to these things. When I have the vision of night open continually before my eyes and can see the mighty judgments that are about to be poured out upon this world; when I know these things are true, and are at the door of the Jew and Gentile; while I know they are true, while I am holding this position before God and this world, can I withhold my voice from lifting up a warning to this people and to the nations of the earth? . . . And from this very day they shall be poured out. Calamities and troubles are increasing in the earth, and there is a meaning to these things. . . . Read the scriptures and the revelations. They will tell you about these things. Great changes are at our doors. The next twenty years will see mighty changes among the nations of the earth. You will live to see these things whether I do or not. I have felt oppressed with the weight of these matters, and I have felt that I must speak of them here; it is by the power of the gospel we shall escape. (The Improvement Era, 17:1164-65.)

He enumerated a number of the calamities which he had foreseen, and then stated: "They are at our very doors, and not even this people will escape them entirely."

Twenty years later, as he had predicted, lacking one month, the great world war of July 1914 broke in all its fury. Many of you here have been witnesses of the fulfilment of what President Woodruff said, and from that time to the present time there has been an increasing intensity of the troubles and difficulties upon the earth.

He sounded a note of comfort and blessing, however, in his closing statement.

Remember this, and reflect upon these matters,
he said,

If you do your duty, and I do mine, we shall have protection, and shall pass through the afflictions in peace and safety.

WARNING OF PRESIDENT SMITH

Shortly after the general conference a year ago last April, I met a man on the street who was inclined to be critical of the fact, he said, that the Church was not receiving revelations, and why was it that the Lord wasn't revealing his mind and will to his leaders. It happened to have in my pocket a clipping from President George Albert Smith's last address, and I took it out and read this to him:

Said President Smith at the April conference just one year before his death:

Brethren and sisters, let us go to our homes; and if our houses are not in order, let us set them in order. Let us renew our determination to honor God and keep his commandments, to love one another, to make our homes the abiding place of peace. Each of us can contribute to that in the homes in which we live.

It will not be long until calamities will overtake the human family unless they seek speedy repentance. It will not be long before those who are scattered over the face of the earth by millions will die like flies because of what will come.

Our Heavenly Father has told us how it can be avoided, and that is our mission, in part, to go into the world and explain to the people how it may be avoided. (Ibid., 53:410.)

President Smith could not have made that statement except as the Lord revealed it to him.

OBLIGATION TO FOLLOW COUNSEL

The Lord in a revelation has told us that it is the obligation of the Latter-day Saints to listen to the counsel of their leaders. In the preface to the Book of Doctrine and Covenants the Lord has said this in plainness.

And the arm of the Lord shall be revealed; and the day cometh that they who will not hear the voice of the Lord, neither the voice of his servants, neither give heed to the words of the prophets and apostles shall be cut off from among the people.

For they have strayed from mine ordinances, and have broken mine everlasting covenant. (D. & C. 1:14-15.)

Could it be that these who will be cut off, of which the Lord spoke are the foolish virgins in the parable of the Master? As I thought back over the admonitions of our present leaders, President McKay, President Richards, and President Clark, I have wondered how much the Latter-day Saints have tried to recall and keep in their minds and hearts the admonitions of these, the Lord's appointed servants. May I merely mention but a few of the admonitions of our present leaders to impress the importance of heeding the counsel of the prophets of our day:

Did you listen carefully to hear President McKay re-echo what he has said on past occasions, that we should use the divine gift of agency to put to flight the degenerate tendencies in men and nations, and thereby find the way to eternal life? And did you hear him say that what you sincerely think of Christ in your heart will determine what you are, and will largely determine what your actions will be? Have you heard President Richards plead with us to keep the commandments of God; and to preserve the sacredness of the home; and heard him say that one of the greatest deterrents to wrong doing has been the fear of losing a place in the eternal family circle?

Those are messages that we should not have forgotten and should have sought to apply in our daily conduct.

President Clark's admonitions and pleas for the unity of the Saints by following the leadership of the President of the Church; his warnings against false heresies, and his efforts to arouse the people to protect our liberties as guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States, certainly are messages which we could not well afford to overlook in this day of stern judgment if we would escape the calamities of which the prophets have warned.

"A LAMP TO YOUR FEET"

Every baptized member of the Church may become a virgin of purity through baptism by immersion for the remission of sins, through the atoning power of the Lord Jesus Christ. At our baptism we had hands laid upon our heads, and we were told by the officiating elders words that went something like this,

Receive the Holy Ghost, which will be a lamp to your feet, a guide to your path, which will bring all things to your remembrance, which will show you things to come, and will even reveal by its power the Lord Jesus Christ himself.

All of those promises, of course, are conditioned upon obedience and faithfulness in keeping the commandments of God.

The Lord gives us, each one, a lamp to carry, but whether or not we shall have oil in our lamps depends solely upon each one of us. Whether or not we keep the commandments and supply the needed oil to light our way and to guide us on our way depends upon each of us individually. We cannot borrow from our Church membership. We cannot borrow from an illustrious ancestry. Whether or not we have oil in our lamps, I repeat, depends solely upon each one of us, it is determined by our faithfulness in keeping the commandments of the Living God.

We must buy from the only source from which we can obtain this kind of oil referred to by the Master—from the fountain of eternal supply.

God grant that we won't forget these admonitions, and that the parable of the ten virgins will have a meaning to us, to all leaders throughout the Church, to go out seeking in the highways and byways of the Lord's kingdom to prepare the people, that except they repent and turn unto the Lord these things which have been predicted will surely come. May all Church members remember that in the day when the Lord said peace would be taken from the earth and the devil would have power over his dominion, he also said that he, the Lord, would reign in the midst of his Saints when he would come down in judgment upon Idumea, or the world.

So he is reigning in the midst of his Saints, revealing himself to his leaders, that through them to this people we might never be left in doubt but might know of a certainty that he will do nothing save he reveals himself to his servants, the prophets.

I bear you my humble witness that I know these things are true, and the Lord has spoken and is speaking to us today in a way that he has talked to his people in every dispensation, and I bear it humbly in the name of the Lord, Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER ANTOINE R. IVINS

Of the First Council of the Seventy

My beloved brethren and sisters, as I stand before you this afternoon to bear my testimony to you, I am reminded that it is twenty years ago this month since I first had this privilege, if you will call it such, and I find it no easier today than it was then. Why it shouldn't grow easier, I don't know, except that one comes to understand greater the responsibility of the office that he holds.

TWENTY YEARS' SERVICE

During those twenty years it has been our purpose, that of Sister Ivins and me, to serve you faithfully. She has stood by my side, done everything that she possibly could to help me in what I have to do. That whole time she has never made a complaint because I have had to serve or placed an obstacle in my way. I appreciate her, and I want you all to know it.

In that service I have become acquainted with many, many fine men and women, and if in it all I have been of any aid or any comfort to anyone, it is all the blessing—all the compensation I would ask. I have never ever had any other major purpose since coming to this Council than to serve you to the best of my ability. I have had the privilege of serving under three presidents of the Church, and I want to bear you my testimony that in that acquaintance I have come to love them dearly, and I have never seen anything in their actions that I have felt to complain over. I bear you my testimony that they are in the service of God, and they are called of God; that their motives are high and holy and pure; that their whole service is in your interest and in the interests of the Church.

Now we are gathered here today to give our testimony to each other and to stimulate our faith in so doing. If we can leave this conference feeling a little more loyalty to the Church, with a little stronger resolution to do our duty, those of us who have cause for it, and a little greater determination to repent and correct our lives, even though there be but a few that need that last admonition, the conference will be well worth while. I trust that we may have just that result, that as we go away we may know better our duty and have a greater determination to serve.

FAILURE TO APPLY GOSPEL

We worry about the conditions of the world, and they are not to our liking, that is true. We would like to know the causes and the cures for them. It seems to me that the major reason for the unsavory things that are happening in the world is the failure of men to apply the gospel of Jesus Christ to their lives. First, we must know him, know what he would have us do, and then do it.

I remember that soon after my father passed away, I found in going through his papers a magazine published by the Jewish Israel Movement in which there was a purported interview with a Jewish rabbi who had cast upon Christianity the blame for all the persecutions that his people had suffered and who finished by saying that Christianity is a failure in the world. As I read it, I thought of the Crusades, and I thought of the suppression of learning of the Middle Ages, and many other things which people don't like which they say form part and parcel of the history of Christianity; but it appealed to me that it is not Christianity but the failure to apply Christianity that we are looking at, and those evils come not from its observance but from its non-observance.

THE WORLD'S NEED

If we could teach the world the proper concept of God and Christ and our relationship to them, and do it in such a way that it would sink into their hearts and impel them to study the teachings of the Savior, then apply them in their lives, all these troubles that we worry about now would cease. But the trouble is, men are avaricious; they are selfish; they are ambitious for power. They have nearly all of the attributes which, if left unbridled, lead to these terrible consequences. It is only the Spirit of God and Christ coming into the heart of man that can change his nature so that he will serve properly his fellow men. That, I think, is the purpose of the gospel of Jesus Christ, that we should learn that great commandment of God, the second, that we should love our fellows as we love ourselves. If we love God and serve him, we will serve our fellows because serving them is the only way we can manifest to him that we are willing to serve him.

THE PLACE TO BEGIN

Now, we are a small group. It is a tremendous task to think of remaking the world, but if we are going to have any influence on it, where must we start? I think that we must start with ourselves individually first, then in the family. During the conference of the Relief Society, which ended yesterday, we listened to some very wonderful talks on the family, how it should be organized and its purpose. Right there, it seems to me, is the place where we should begin to clear up these things. If every family in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints were a model family, if every family were presided over by a man holding the Melchizedek Priesthood, a man who is understanding as to his responsibilities, who has the power of leadership with his children, we could form such a strong body that all the rest of the world would eventually have to take notice of it and recognize its power, and its influence in the world would be good.

But I learn in studying the records of the stakes I visit that perhaps not more than seventy or seventy-five per cent of the families of the Church have a man standing at their head who holds the Melchizedek Priesthood. Then out of that seventy or seventy-five percent, as the case may be, there are many who make no effort to magnify this priesthood. They accept it for certain reasons, but they make little effort to magnify it.

MARRIAGE FOR ETERNITY

I have visited stakes where there were as few as thirty-two percent of the families represented in the Melchizedek Priesthood, others where it ran as high as ninety-seven percent, and there I think, brethren and sisters is the place we ought to start to correct our ills. Those of us who have children at the age where they should pair off should be tremendously careful to impress upon their minds the value of a proper family organization, the value of marriage in the temple of God for time and for all eternity. We should impress upon our children the fact that when they go to that temple they should go prepared to make it a lifelong and eternal undertaking, and that they should be serious and sober in the selection of their companions. I believe, if the proper attitude were taken toward marriage, the divorce problem which we face would be mitigated, if not abolished within the Church. There is an opportunity, there is a responsibility to teach young people the values of that institution. It is one of the characteristic things of the Church; it is the only place in the world where a marriage of that kind is celebrated; and it is desirable because it is a true institution ordained of God; and if people enter into it with the proper spirit, it is the greatest safeguard for their future conduct that has been given us by God.

We should not only teach these young people that they should go into that relationship with the determination that it is going to endure, but we should also teach them that they should expect it to endure because they are clean and pure and wholesome when they begin, and they are going to stay that way throughout. There are too many of us who miss right there. We don't seem to appreciate those things. Now is it possible to teach young people these things so that they will appreciate them? I believe it is. Sister Ivins for a number of years was a guide over at the Lion House. One day there came a group of fine young people there to visit. During that interview she took occasion to teach them this thing. After it was over, one young woman, who had expressed, on the way in, that she was not going to be married in the temple, came back with the statement that she had enjoyed the visit and she was going to insist upon a temple marriage. Can we teach them that? We can if we will, I believe, and I believe it is one of the greatest duties of fathers and mothers.

PARENTS TO SET EXAMPLE

To begin with, of course, parents should have been married there themselves, and they should be true to each other. They should observe the standards of the Church so that the example they set will be above reproach to their children, and there ought never to be a thing happen between husband and wife that would abash or embarrass a son or a daughter, so that when those sons and daughters grow to maturity they can say as I can testify to you today, "My father never did a thing that I was ashamed of or gave me an instruction that I had to blush for." That's your privilege and your duty, you fathers and mothers, to teach young people, these things as plainly as you can; then if we can build that kind of family, the family that grows up under that influence will go into a ward organization with the same type of loyalty, and passing through the ward organization will approach the stake organization with the same loyalty and desire to conform. And, of course, out of your strength in your families, your wards, and your stakes grows the strength of the Church.

DAILY REPENTANCE

The place to begin, brethren and sisters, is with ourselves and our own, and if we can come to realize the imperfections of our own practices and change them, God will bless us. That is nothing more nor less than repentance, which all of us should practice daily.

Now I hope that out of this conference there will go a determination on our part to better our lives, starting with ourselves, to develop in our young folk a loyalty to their fathers and mothers, to their ward organizations and their stake organizations and the Church. That loyalty will reduce the adverse criticism that there is. There are many of us that find fault with the things that those of us who stand here try to do in the interest of the people, but loyalty would reduce that, and we would be happier even if we should not realize perfection in sustaining the policy of the Church.

God grant us help in it, I pray in the name of Jesus. Amen.

BISHOP JOSEPH L. WIRTHLIN

First Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

I sincerely trust, my brethren and sisters, that I might enjoy an interest in your faith and prayers during the few moments that I shall stand before you.

With you I have been deeply moved and inspired by the proceedings of this great conference. I am sure the address of our beloved President this morning inspired each and every one of us to resolve to live better lives exemplifying the principles of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ as we live it day by day.

In the days of the Master there was an Apostle called John the Beloved. He was given that title because he loved the Savior with all his heart. He loved the people. It is a grand thing to know that in this day we have an Apostle of the Lord Jesus Christ, a prophet, a revelator, and a seer, who, because of his kindness and his love for the people, and his manifestations of tenderness toward them, will be known as David the Beloved. I thank the Lord today that he has been restored in his health and strength and pray that the Lord will always bless him to the end that he may be enabled to perform the great tasks that devolve upon him.

PRINCIPLE OF BELIEF

Some few weeks ago, returning from an assignment in Los Angeles, I met a man on the train who introduced himself as the representative of a great business which was sending him to Salt Lake City to establish one of its branches. He had made a previous visit, and during the visit he made a tour of the Temple Block, being deeply impressed by all that he heard and saw. I told him that I had the honor of being one of the General Authorities of the Church, after which he launched into a discussion of religion, saying he felt this great nation could be saved only through the application of spiritual principles.

He seemed to be a very devout man, as he attended the services of his church and met his financial obligations therein. His whole hope for salvation was upon the principle of belief only, and he indicated he had no responsibilities in his church other than those already mentioned. The attitude of this gentleman stimulated some thinking on my part as to the value of belief which might not develop into an abiding faith.

The Savior at no time during his ministry or in the restoration of the gospel ever promulgated the doctrine that man can be saved on the basis of belief. Rather, he made it very clear and implicit in the following statement:

Not every one that saith unto me Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven. (Matt. 7:21.)

In the analysis of this statement of the Savior, it is made very plain that belief in and of itself is not sufficient for salvation, but—"He that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven."

James made it perfectly clear when he made this statement:

What doth it profit my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? can faith save him?

If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food,
And one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit?

Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone.

Yea, a man may say, Thou hast faith, and I have works: shew me thy faith without thy works, and I will shew thee my faith by my works.
(James 2:14-18.)

STEPPINGSTONE TO FAITH

We cannot wholly discount the principle of belief, for it is the first steppingstone to faith. The Apostle Paul declared, ". . . for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." (Hebrews 11:6.)

Therefore an individual with a firm desire to know God and his purposes, expressing a willingness to keep his commandments, can be a recipient of that divine gift called faith.

The Prophet Joseph Smith declared that faith is the moving cause of all action. It is that great stimulating force which brings into fruition the plans and the desires of mankind. The genius of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ in ancient days, and in the restored gospel of this day, demands a program not only which requires faith but also works on the part of the individual who has for an objective salvation and exaltation in the kingdom of God.

We are told that the glory of God is intelligence, that no man can be saved in ignorance. Therefore, if we are to gain the intelligence and the knowledge that is necessary for a place in the celestial kingdom, it will only come about by mental and spiritual effort and works.

THE PRIVILEGE OF WORK

God, in restoring the Church of Jesus Christ, so organized it that there would be an opportunity for each and every worthy member to have the privilege of work. The restoration of the priesthood is an evidence of this. Priesthood is the power of God given unto men whereby they may act as his representatives upon the earth and fill certain assignments when called upon by those who preside over them.

Hence, with this authority upon both the older men and the young men, there is an opportunity for service, for the accomplishment of great work; for example, we think of the missionary work, wherein are involved thousands of men and women, both young and old, who are out in the world preaching the gospel to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people.

The same is equally true of the great project of teaching the people at home the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. We call it "ward teaching." If ward teaching were done as it should be, it would require the services of every worthy member of the priesthood in the Church.

GENEALOGICAL WORK

If there are any of us who are seeking to do the work of the Lord and feel that we do not have an opportunity, all that we have to do, brothers and sisters, is to become engaged in the genealogical work of the Church. I am sure those who have been touched by the spirit of Elijah, and had their hearts turned to their fathers, have gone into this work with eagerness and a desire to see that the work is going to be done or has been done or will be done for those who have not had the privilege in this life of hearing the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

The other day while visiting the St. George Stake, I was introduced to an elderly brother who is ninety years of age, and I was told that he had done the work for ten thousand people. What an achievement! What an accomplishment! I could not help thinking that when that brother passes through the veil and meets these thousands of people, they will rise up and call him blessed. This is an example of faith and works together, for the benefit and blessing of thousands of people.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR SERVICE

It is not only intended in this great organization of faith and works that all of the work is to be done by the priesthood, but that our sisters shall have opportunities of service which are found in the auxiliary organizations of the Church, teaching the children and in rendering assistance to those who are in distress of any kind.

Consider for a moment if you will a ward organization in its requirements of personnel with the presiding authorities of the ward, the officers of all the auxiliaries, and the ward teachers. Opportunities for work in the kingdom are immediately available for at least two hundred members, while in the churches of the world, only one or two people would have this opportunity.

The work of which James spoke in connection with faith is divided into two divisions; that which has to do with the spiritual and that which has to do with the temporal works. In illustrating the point of temporal works, Brigham Young declared:

Everything connected with the building up of Zion requires actual, severe labor. It is nonsense to talk about building up any kingdom except by labor; it requires the labor of every part of our organizations, whether it be mental, physical, or spiritual, and that is the only way to build up the kingdom of God. . . . If we build up the kingdom of God, or establish Zion upon the earth, we have to labor with our hands, plan with our minds, and devise ways and means to accomplish that object. (Discourses of Brigham Young, 1943 ed., p. 291.)

WELFARE PROGRAM

One of the great temporal works of the Church is found in the welfare program. It affords an opportunity for all to participate, from the young boy or girl to the aged man or woman who is physically fit. It requires much physical labor, but out of our physical effort comes a spiritual blessing—a spiritual blessing wherein, brethren and sisters we keep part of the first and great commandment to “love thy neighbour as thyself.” If we actually love our neighbors as ourselves, we are going to endeavor to do something for those who are in distress of any kind.

Construction of meetinghouses demands physical effort which in reality contributes much to the building up of the kingdom. There has never been a time in our history as a Church when so many meetinghouses have been erected as in the last five or six years, and the most inspiring factor in this great project of building is that members of the various wards have contributed physically of their labor as well as having made financial contributions.

ST. GEORGE TABERNACLE

Last Sunday it was my privilege to attend the conference of the St. George Stake, and when it is my privilege to visit the city of St. George, I am always thrilled and inspired as I admire the beautiful tabernacle erected almost a century ago by the pioneers. This lovely building is an excellent example of architectural and structural achievements. Its walls are just as straight and true today as the day that the pioneer masons laid stone upon stone. Out of the construction of this lovely building, the Lord answered the prayers of the people, and his blessings were abundantly bestowed upon them in a time of stress and difficulty. When President Brigham Young requested the people to erect a tabernacle, some were surprised because of its size and the small membership which there was to attend, but without question and with profound confidence in their great leader, they went to work.

Finally, when the roof had been placed upon the building, and it came time to buy the windowpanes, it was necessary to order them in New York. These windowpanes were shipped down along the east coast of North and South America and around the Horn, and up to San Francisco, and finally transported to the city of Stockton.

Upon arrival in Stockton, the brethren in St. George were notified that the windowpanes were there, and were now ready to be delivered for a cash consideration. By this time the cash resources of the people had been exhausted and when they were asked to pay for the windowpanes, they did not know what they were going to do; but great faith was manifest by the leaders of the people, which impressed them to call upon God for assistance. Thereafter, preparations were made to make the trip to Stockton. Finally, before departure, the brethren gathered together and supplicated God to the end that they might have the cash with which to pay for the windowpanes. In the midst of their supplication, a knock came on the door. It was opened, and an old Scandinavian brother who lived in the Washington Ward just north of St. George placed in their hands a bag containing between six hundred and seven hundred dollars which was enough to pay for the windowpanes.

The faith of these brethren was so great that their teams had been hitched up and they were ready to leave immediately after their prayers, which is an evidence of the profound faith which motivated them to go forward with their building program even though the necessary cash was not in sight, and hence, the St. George Tabernacle and the temple stand as a monument to the faith and works of these great pioneers.

FAITH AND WORKS

In the days of the Prophet Joseph Smith when the gospel was being restored, the Lord declared to the Prophet, "I will pour my Spirit out on all flesh." (See D. & C. 95:4.)

The outpouring of the Lord's Spirit generated in the hearts of men a degree of faith that moved them to great works which have brought manifold blessings to humanity. For instance, Thomas Edison had faith so great in the utilization of electricity for lighting that after hours, days, and months of work, the electric light bulb was made available in addition to many other electric appliances which have brought comfort and luxury to the people.

Another outstanding example of faith and works is the Wright brothers who were thought to be mentally weak when they advocated the idea of flying through the air with a contraption heavier than air itself, but out of their faith and their works there has now been developed one of the greatest methods of transportation that the world has ever known. Radio and television have come as the result of the faith and the works of their inventors.

LINCOLN'S FAITH

There were great souls that had a profound faith in the principles of righteousness, of whom Abraham Lincoln is a great representative. As a young man he visited the city of New Orleans where he witnessed the sale of human beings over the auction block. He declared: "If I ever have a chance to strike this thing, I will strike it hard."

His faith in the great principle of freedom motivated him to take action when he was president of the United States. He struck slavery hard, and the shackles were removed from the thousands and thousands of oppressed people who now enjoy their liberty.

Brethren and sisters, I feel in my soul as the Apostle Paul felt when he declared, "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation. . . ." (Romans 1:16.) The godly power Paul speaks of is the combination of faith, the divine motivator, and the works of the individual. These together make salvation and exaltation in the kingdom of God a certainty.

CHRISTIANITY IN ACTION

Some few days ago the office of the Presiding Bishop was visited by a Hindu doctor from India. He said he was a Christian. He pointed out to us that as he traveled from the southern boundary to the northern boundary of the state of Utah noticing the many meetinghouses that had been erected, he was convinced that he was among a Christian people. And after becoming conversant with the gospel and the religion of our people, he declared, "This is Christianity in action." Faith and the works of the gospel constitute Christianity in action as Jesus Christ revealed it to the Prophet:

Verily I say unto you all: Arise and shine forth, that thy light may be a standard for the nations. (D. & C. 115:5.)

If our light is to be a standard unto the nations, then well might we follow the admonition of James when he said:

Yea, a man may say, Thou hast faith, and I have works; shew me thy faith without thy works, and I will shew thee my faith by my works. (James 2:18.)

This people have the greatest obligation of any people in all the world; for first they have covenanted with God their Eternal Father that they will manifest their faith and their works in the cause of his beloved Son, Jesus Christ, and that the world seeing their works will declare as Isaiah of old declared: Come let us go up to the house of Jacob's God and learn of his ways and walk in his paths (See Isaiah 2:3), to the end that the world and all of us may be free of the pernicious doctrine that men can be saved by belief or grace, and that we may know that salvation and exaltation in the kingdom of God rests wholly upon faith and works, which I pray will be the blessing of all of us, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers chorus joined with the congregation in singing the hymn, "We Thank Thee, O God, For a Prophet."

ELDER ALBERT E. BOWEN

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

And when thou prayest, thou shalt not be as the hypocrites are: for they love to pray standing in the synagogues and in the corners of the streets, that they may be seen of men. Verily I say unto you, They have their reward.

But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret, and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly.

But when ye pray, use not vain repetitions, as the heathen do; for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking.

Be not ye therefore like unto them: for your Father knoweth what things ye have need of, before ye ask him.

After this manner therefore pray ye: Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name.

Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven.

Give us this day our daily bread.

And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors. (Matt. 6:5-12.)

That last is the particular passage in this prayer that I want to call attention to. If we have learned anything through the proceedings of this conference this day, it is that this gospel is not something to talk about. It is something that requires deeds. It calls for action, and it is only what we do, not what we say or what we profess, that counts.

The people of this Church can carry this message with them to their homes or wherever they may chance to go and lay it down as the foundation principle of their faith, the promise of the future.

FORGIVENESS

It is only as we do the will of God that we have claim upon the promised blessings, and one of the particular things that I want to stress is the principle inherent in this sentence in the sublime prayer which I have just read: "Forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors." That calls for action. It calls for self-control. It calls for putting into practical effect one of the teachings that the Lord has given us.

It is not easy to practice. We are all disposed to be very charitable toward ourselves and our own misdeeds, our own failures and weaknesses. We hope the Lord will be charitable to us, that when we stand before the bar of justice, notwithstanding the exactions of the law which must be obeyed, and notwithstanding our own lapses, he who knows the heart, and knows the desire, and knows the effort, and consequently being possessed of all the factors essential to a righteous judgment, will somehow be kind and generous and will take into account our good efforts, our attempts to live righteously, the piety of our purposes, the struggles we have made against odds, and he will balance all these worthy desires of the heart and struggles of the flesh over against our failures, and the things wherein we have sinned and failed to measure up to the full standard of complete perfection.

We all hope that on behalf of ourselves, but it is not so easy for us to accord the same generous consideration to those we feel have trespassed against us. We are more likely to be disposed to exact the full payment of the debt to us personally, while hoping in our hearts that God will be lenient in his judgment of us.

LOVE OF NEIGHBOR

I think there is involved in this principle the doctrine of the first great commandment, and the second, ". . . Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." (Ibid., 22:39.) Those are easy words to say, but do we ponder what they mean? How do I love myself? Certainly I do not wish myself any ill luck. I do not wish myself any misfortune. I hope my efforts will be prospered. I hope I will be spared misery and distress and sickness and suffering. I hope I will have power to do the things I have it in my heart to do, and to succeed in my undertakings. If I love my neighbor as I love myself, then I must be equally anxious for him, that he shall be prospered, that he shall escape misery and suffering and trial and distress, that his endeavors shall be fruitful of good.

I cannot hope to climb to the position I desire to achieve by stepping on the back of another and crushing him down in order that I may gain his favorable place. Suppose I am a violinist. I excel in my profession, my art. I have enjoyed the reputation for a long time of occupying first place among the members of my community. I am the greatest of them all. Then one day a younger man comes along, as will inevitably be the case, and he chances to excel me in the art, and I stand in jeopardy of losing my position as first.

I suppose I should wish for him that he break his hand so that he cannot play any more, and so that I will not be toppled from the pinnacle that I have occupied, and can still be supreme in the practice of my art. That is not keeping the commandment. That is not loving my neighbor as I love myself. I would not wish myself any such misfortune. I would always want to do my best, freed from artificial hindrance. I should, if I would obey the commandment, without regard to the consequences to me personally, my own ambitions and desires, rejoice in the excellence of the performance of my rival, and wish only for him all the good I would wish for myself.

I will, if I am honestly observing the commandment, wish for him the success, the glory that has been accorded to me by reason of my past station. It is easy to say those words, "Love your neighbor as yourself," but how hard it is to bring them right down to actual practice, even when our own superiority of position might be involved, the sacrifice of it. If we really could bring ourselves into full accord with that commandment, we should rejoice exultantly in the good fortunes that attend the efforts of our fellows, no matter in how great a degree they might eclipse us or how far they might excel us. You see, it requires that we root out envy, that we root out selfishness, and that is the way we grow in the development of character and the cultivation of those perfections which God has directed that we strive to achieve.

"Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." (Ibid., 5:48) was the admonition of Jesus and if we would attain that station and bring ourselves to that degree of conquest of our own ambitions, then we shall have to rejoice in the good fortune, the achievements, the attainments of our fellow men without regard to the eclipse of ourselves.

FORGIVE AND BE FORGIVEN

Returning to the text, we cannot expect that God will forgive us if we refuse to forgive those whom we have found occasion to criticize. The measure of man's achievement lies not altogether in where he gets to. You have to have regard for the place which he started from, and the degree of his advancement, though he has not reached so high a place as one of his fellows, may be greater because of the handicap of position from which he set out.

We all hope and trust and pray and depend upon the mercy of God. We hope he will be merciful to us, but we have no right to expect the extension of his mercy to us in any further degree than we are willing to extend mercy and charity and forgiveness to our fellow men, whose actions we scrutinize with much more care and less leniency than we scrutinize ourselves and our own deeds.

DOERS OF THE WORD

Those are some of the things we have to learn to do. That is putting into practical application some of the positive requirements of this gospel. We are learning to do, to be doers of the Word and not hearers only. So it is with every other precept. There is no teaching in the whole compass of the gospel of Jesus Christ that ever brought injury or harm to any man.

The following of those brings only happiness and joy and peace and comfort and progress. There has never been anything required of man that would degrade him or lower him in the scale of being. We are safe when we keep the commandments.

But we must analyze the commandments. We must know what they signify. We must know what they require of us individually and personally, and our greatest concern is not with somebody else. Our greatest concern is with us. Are we measuring up?

May God grant that in our daily pursuits, in our daily efforts, we shall always be mindful of the fact that it is not what we profess or what we pretend, but only that which we do and the degree in which we comply in our own actions with the commandments of God that counts.

This I pray in the name of Jesus. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

We shall next hear from Elder James L. Barker, formerly president of the French Mission.

I believe we have in the audience Brother Henry Aki who was in the presidency of the Chinese Mission, recently established at Hong Kong. We will give Brother Aki and Brother Barker twenty minutes, ten minutes each.

ELDER JAMES L. BARKER

Formerly president of the French Mission

It is now nearly eighteen months since Sister Barker and I left the French Mission. I hope, however, to be able to give a brief report of the French Mission not only while we were there but since we came back, the last eighteen months while President and Sister Woolf have been conducting the mission. The French Mission is one of the great missions of the Church. There is no finer people to which we carry the Gospel. Most of us of Germanic stock are favorably disposed to nations of northern Europe, Germany, Switzerland, and so on, but perhaps we are not aware that at least fifty per cent of the population of Northeastern France was Germanic in the first centuries of the Christian Era, and we should remember too that there are many other nations in Europe, and among these many nations are France and Spain and Italy and Greece.

The French Mission has had a difficult history. Work there has been interrupted and has ceased completely over long periods of time. With the exception of one city in Northeastern France, from 1863 until 1910 there was not a single missionary in France. When Sister Barker and I arrived in France in 1946 we found in Switzerland well organized branches presided over and admirably conducted by President Simond and his branch presidents. We found in Belgium President Devigny conducting well organized branches. I rejoiced as I heard the story of how faithfully they had attended to their duties. Even while directed missiles were falling not very far from the house of President Devigny, they held their meetings. They did their work. Each one of our three chapels was seriously damaged by guided missiles.

In France the story was not so favorable. Our first work was to find the members. There was only one man Elder Fargier in all France holding the Melchizedek Priesthood and the members said they had had visits from missionaries but usually fifteen and twenty years before.

I am glad to say this to the fathers and mothers who have missionaries in France, there is no more kind-hearted people, no more sympathetic people, no more self-sacrificing people for the missionaries. I wish I could tell you of the lives of some of our members, faithful over long periods of time without any visit from missionaries whatsoever and no contact with the Church. I have even thought how strange it is and how wonderful it is that our missionaries have such influence with the people, and yet it is not altogether strange.

The men opposed to them are often very scholarly, but all that scholarship can do is to enable them to guess what kind of experience Peter had when he said, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the Living God." What was that revelation from on High? What kind of experience did Paul have when he was guided by the Spirit? And the faithful missionaries have similar experiences first-hand. It is a great joy to be in a testimony meeting with them and the lady missionaries, who were in no way inferior to the elders.

The mission has gradually increased in the number of converts and it has increased very, very much since Sister Barker and I left the mission. This year, returning missionaries and elders tell me that the estimate of the number of converts in the mission will be somewhere between 100 and 150. When you think of the difficulties of language, when you think of other difficulties, I think that is most encouraging. The missionaries of the French Mission, I think, nearly all long for the time when they can go back on another mission, and it is astounding how eager audiences are to listen to the Gospel. You probably would expect the greatest number of converts and the greatest interest in Northeastern France where the Germanic blood, perhaps is in a larger percentage than elsewhere, but the greatest interest in the Gospel and the greatest number of converts is in Southeastern France. There we have had meetings attended by as high as 400 people. A year and a half ago there were some 3 or 4 members. Six months before that there were none, and no friends. Now there are 20 members and meetings are being attended by 100 to 125 in a meeting.

The government of France has been friendly, of course we have had some opposition, of course we had a few connected with the government who were not friendly, but by and large they have been very friendly. We frequently had halls that cost us nothing. In Bordeaux and other cities of Western France we have been able to get a large hall in the City Hall with no cost to us, not even the janitorial services, and they have treated us well.

My time I think of ten minutes is up. I would like to say this before sitting down, however, I know that the first vision was a reality, our missionaries know it, that it was a reality, that we are engaged, second only to living the Gospel, in the next greatest work possible on the earth, carrying that Gospel to our fellows. He is happy who has had one mission; he is happier who has had two, and I feel positive that he would be happier who had four. This is a great work and in France it is going to grow faster and faster because now we have a large body of converts, relatively from France, Switzerland and Belgium. They are writing to friends and acquaintances, they are dispelling false stories about us, they are explaining the truths of the Gospel, and I pray that there may be as few as possible among us without sometime having had the experience of a mission. I sincerely pray for the blessings of the Lord on the world, that peace may be restored (we now have war) and that no further Wars will break out, that the Gospel may be carried to the rest of the world and in particular to Spain, to Italy, to Greece, to the Mediterranean countries, countries that were once the only ones where missionaries worked in the propagation of the Gospel and wherein were the early centers of the Christian Church. I pray this and I pray the Lord to bless our inspired leadership that we may all give our full undivided loyalty in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder James L. Barker, to whom we have just listened, was formerly president of the French Mission. Brother Henry Aki, who will now speak to us, was in the presidency of the Chinese Mission.

ELDER HENRY AKI

Formerly in the presidency of the Chinese Mission

Aloha! I bring you greetings from the saints of Oahu, my brothers and sisters. I stand before you with fear and trembling. I trust that I may have the spirit of our Father in Heaven that has existed here since the beginning of our conference. I thank our Heavenly Father for the privilege of attending this conference and of meeting with you, my good brothers and sisters, who have brought the Gospel to the islands of Hawaii where I had the privilege of joining this great and glorious Church.

On February 28th, 1949, along about 9 o'clock in the morning while laboring in my establishment in Honolulu, the telephone rang. I lifted up the receiver and I heard an operator from San Francisco calling for Aki. The people in San Francisco could not pronounce my name Aki, so she had to spell it. "Are you Aki?" she said.

"Yes, this is Aki speaking."

"Just a minute, Salt Lake City, Mr. David O. McKay wants to talk to you."

Within a second we got the connection and President McKay said: "Brother Aki this is David O. McKay. You know Hilton A. Robertson, formerly of the Japanese Mission?"

I said, "Yes, very well."

"Fine. The brethren have decided to open a mission in China. Will you accept the call to be his counselor?"

Without any hesitation I said; "Yes, Brother McKay."

I accepted the call without consulting my wife whether I would be able to accept it. Finally I called back home to my wife, saying I had received a call from President McKay asking us to go on a mission to China.

"Fine," she said.

I said: "I will talk to you further when I get home."

I went home and my wife said: "We will go."

I am thankful that I had the privilege. The only thing I regret is that we had to fold up the mission and return home to Honolulu. That is the only regret in my heart. My desire was to fulfill an honorable mission, that we could have a mission home there, a church building, and preach the Gospel to the one hundred and fifty millions of people in China, probably more. We love them. When we were up to the Peak of Hong Kong we could look on the other side to China proper (and on this side we could look into the Hong Kong Bay). We went there with Brother Cowley to dedicate the land for the opening of the mission. While we were there Brother Cowley called each one of us to take turn in praying and I shed tears facing my ancestors, my great-grandfather and my forefathers, that I, the only one having the privilege to hold the Priesthood, had come up to the land of China, to spread this Gospel of Jesus Christ among the people.

I rejoice in that work and I thank our Heavenly Father for the privilege I had. I appreciate the Priesthood of God. It is precious to me. I want to tell you, in bearing my testimony, that I want to thank my father-in-law, my wife and their family who prayed earnestly for me that I might become a member of this Church. For ten years we were married and I was not a member of the Church. My wife had to steal away out of the house to go and perform her Church duties, to teach Primary and to go to the Relief Society, and then she had to watch the time and come home before I got home from work. Those are the conditions that prevailed for the first ten years of our married life. Oftentimes I heard my mother-in-law in devotion and they asked me to join with them. All the time I stared at them. I oftentimes heard my mother-in-law pray to our Heavenly Father to soften the heart of her son-in-law that some day his heart would be touched and he would become a member of this Faith. There was a big tract of land opened near the Auwaiolima Church. Some of you returned missionaries know where the Auwaiolima Church is. There were choice lots facing the main street and the school street, and I decided to buy a lot on one of those main streets and I purposefully bought a lot just below the Church, with the idea, well, if I build my home here my children would be growing up, saving carfare to Primary and Sunday School. My wife can go to Relief Society and teach in the Primary, so I can save a little money in carfare. So I bought a lot just near the Auwaiolima Church and when we got our house half-way built I asked my wife if I could be baptized in her Church and she asked me, "Really do you want to join the Church?" I said, "Yes." She went up to the Mission Home and made arrangements with the branch president, Ernest L. Miner, and Brother Miner was surprised to learn that I had made up my mind to be baptized. He turned around and called my wife and said, "You have been faithful and the Lord has answered your prayers. All these years, in presiding over this branch I could not touch your house with a fifty foot pole." (Laughter) So really the Lord has moved things in a mysterious way His wonders to perform.

I rejoice to bear you my testimony, my brethren and sisters. I am really glad and thankful that I had the privilege of accepting the Gospel, it has made me a good husband, a good businessman whereby I can face my fellowmen, my creditors and my associates. Through that, my name has been spread abroad. Some of my friends have joined the Church. Some of my friends saw me going into the chapel and the following day they wanted to know what I was doing in the Mormon Church. I said, "I am a member of that Church." They said, "Are you? I am surprised. If I knew you had determined to join any church I would have asked you to join the Central Union Church," which is a Protestant church in Honolulu, "so if you need any help, if you go to the bank, people will give you an extended hand." That is the answer I got, and finally after that I became loosed from all my friends and associates just because I joined the Church.

It is up to me to let the Gospel light so shine that others may see my good works and glorify our Father which is in Heaven. From that time on I have tried my best to live up to the teachings of the Gospel and to have the whole world look up to me. When I got my call to go to China they had my picture in the Honolulu paper.

My time is up. I hope and pray that we as Latter-day Saints will live the Gospel and that we will let our lights so shine before men that others seeing our good works will be led to glorify our Father which is in heaven.

President McKay will please forgive me if I have gone beyond my allotted time. I ask the Lord's blessings upon you. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

The Relief Society Singing Mothers will now sing: "Like as the Hart Desireth the Water Brooks," conducted by Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen.

The closing prayer will be offered by Elder A. Lorenzo Anderson, formerly president of the Mexican Mission, after which this conference will stand adjourned until ten o'clock tomorrow morning.

Tonight at seven o'clock here in the Tabernacle there will be a meeting of ward bishoprics and others as listed in the public announcement, under the direction of the Presiding Bishopric.

Important messages and calls coming to us for persons supposed to be in attendance at the conference will be announced at the dismissal of the meeting over the loud speaking system.

The choir music for this session has been furnished by the Relief Society Singing Mothers, Florence Jepperson Madsen conducting, and Frank W. Asper at the organ.

May we just take a minute again to commend these charming mothers. Their presence, I repeat, and their singing have been an inspiration. Sister Madsen, thank you. I know I express the prayer of all present when I say, "God bless our mothers."

The Relief Society Singing Mothers sang "Like as the Hart Desireth the Water Brooks."

The benediction was offered by Elder A. Lorenzo Anderson.

Conference adjourned until 10:00 a.m., Saturday, October 6.

SECOND DAY

MORNING MEETING

Conference reconvened Saturday morning, October 6, at 10:00. President David O. McKay conducted the services and made the following introductory remarks:

President David O. McKay:

For the information of the radio and television audience we announce that this is the third session of the One Hundred Twenty-second Semi-annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City, Utah.

These services and all general sessions of the conference will be broadcast in the Assembly Hall and in Barratt Hall over a loud-speaking system and by television. The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over Station KSL at Salt Lake City, and by arrangement through KSL over the stations named in the first session of the conference.

This session will be televised over KSL television station, channel 5.

The singing will be by the congregation, Brother J. Spencer Cornwall conducting, and Brother Alexander Schreiner at the organ.

We shall begin the services by the congregation singing: "Now Let Us Rejoice," conducted by Brother Cornwall.

The opening prayer will be offered by Elder Arnold D. Miller, formerly Patriarch to the North Davis Stake.

---

The congregation sang the hymn, "Now Let Us Rejoice in the Day of Salvation."

Elder Arnold D. Miller, Patriarch of the North Davis Stake, offered the invocation.

Singing by the congregation, "How Firm A Foundation."

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

Second Counselor in the First Presidency

My brothers and sisters, I stand before you this morning to make a few remarks with a hope in my heart that the Lord will bless me and direct me in what I shall say and that I may be aided by your faith and prayers. With those prayers coming to me in my behalf, I shall be blessed, and you also.

ABSENCE NOTED

I think I would like to begin by noting the absence of a man who was with us for forty-seven years as an Apostle, as President of the Quorum, and as President of the Church; a man who had as great love for his fellow men as any man I have ever met; a man who left with us, or left with me, two great sayings—"We are all children of our Heavenly Father," and "Keep out of the devil's territory"—fundamental principles. I am referring, of course, to President George Albert Smith.

In this Church there never is an interregnum. So soon as one President dies, the Twelve take over; then, on their proposal, a President of the Church is chosen and sustained. And always, the powers and authorities, the prerogatives of the one who has passed descend to the one who comes. Those powers and authorities, responsibilities, have descended upon our present President, David O. McKay, who is administering the affairs of the Church with wisdom, with understanding, and inspired by the revelations of the Lord's mind and will.

THE FAMILY RELATIONSHIP

During this conference much has been said about a subject that has been running in my mind for several months, and notwithstanding that it has been discussed so much, I should like to add a few words during the time I shall address you, of my own feeling about it. I am referring to the home and the family relationship.

The family, looked at broadly, is as nearly basic to the principles and plan of the restored gospel as any principle of which I know. We have a Heavenly Father and Mother, the eternal parents of the spirits of us who are here. And those spirits were created that they might come to this earth and receive mortal tabernacles, so that in the due time of the Lord we shall lay away the mortal tabernacle; then in due time we shall resume it and become the perfect soul, the body and the spirit reunited.

The Lord has created, so he has told us, worlds without number, and I am sure for this same purpose.

That, I repeat, that family relationship is fundamental, because without it we cannot reach out to the destiny which our Heavenly Father has provided for us. When Adam came, he was alone. And the Lord said, "It is not good that the man should be alone." He said to Adam, "Multiply, and replenish the earth." (Gen. 1:28.) Eve came, then the command was given that a man "shall cleave unto his wife," leaving father and mother, "and they twain shall be one flesh." (Matt. 19:5.) That was reiterated by the Savior replying to the query of the taunting Pharisees. And out of that union came ourselves, our mortal tabernacles. In our day the Lord has revealed another element, and that is the sealing of man and wife for time and for all eternity, and out of that union they twain beget blood and flesh.

RESPONSIBILITY OF PARENTS

And I would like you to reflect upon the fact that our children came to us with spirits that did not ask us to bring them, but with spirits, through some operation of which I am not aware, that are assigned to us; and they come to us as our guests. We are responsible for the mortal tabernacling of that spirit; and I should like each and every Latter-day Saint to get that fact into his heart, that the child which is his, or hers, comes at the invitation, virtually, of them who beget it, and then I would like you to reflect upon the responsibility which that brings home to each and every man and woman who is a parent. Yours is the responsibility to see that this tabernacled spirit loses no opportunity, through you, to prove his worthiness and righteousness in living through his second estate.

Now the point that I wish particularly to emphasize is this—you parents cannot shift that responsibility to anyone else. It is yours; you cannot divest yourselves of it.

You cannot give it to the state, and you ought not to give it to the state, for when the state takes over the direction, instruction, and rearing of its youth, then passes out, as the whole history of the world shows, the great principle of free agency, and not only that, but all the sacred principles of chastity and morality, with a host of other virtues which belong to a free society and are inherent in the governing principles of the kingdom of God.

You cannot entrust your children, in the sense of having them take over your responsibility, to our schools. They cannot do your work. They may aid, and, sometimes, they may detract and defeat. I have referred before to pernicious doctrines which are appearing in our schools, not only political doctrines, which I would like you to note, but moral. The doctrine that the sex urge is like the urge for food and drink, is born of Satan, and the man or woman who teaches it, is Satan-inspired. Every effort you can make to prevent the spread of this doctrine, you should make.

You cannot entrust your children to society. That will never do. Society is too tolerant of wrong, too ignorant of matters of right living, too easy to betray and debauch.

And lastly, the Church cannot take over the responsibility which is yours to train your children. The Church can aid, and should be the greatest aid; and we are derelict if we do not, as Church members and as Church organizations, provide that assistance. But beyond the Church—the Sunday Schools, the Mutual Improvement Associations, the Primary, the Relief Society, and all the priesthood organizations—beyond that is the family, and it is our responsibility as parents to see to it that we fully perform our duties in this respect.

THE MOTHER'S PART

Now, brethren, at best we are somewhat clumsy at leading and directing our children. We are away from home, of necessity, a great part of the time, our thoughts are along other lines, we have to battle for our existence, for the livelihood of our families. Those of us who hold Church positions are absent in the evenings, in addition to the days that we spend getting our livelihood. I repeat, we are a little bit clumsy. And so to the sisters of the Church, the mothers of the Church, they whom the Lord has designed and planned should be the immediate instrumentality of perpetuating the race and of bringing spirits to this earth, providing bodies for them, to them we must primarily look for the rearing of our children.

Sisters, when you think of what a child is, the mortal tabernacle of a spirit created by our Heavenly Father, a mortal tabernacle which you, with all the sacrifice that it has entailed, with all the danger that has been involved of going down into the valley of the shadow of death to bring the child forth, when you think of that, do you not sense how urgent, how immediate, how great is the responsibility which you have assumed? And, oh, how well the great bulk of the sisters, the mothers of the Latter-day Saints are performing that, going on through their whole lives sacrificing for their children, for their grandchildren, and sometimes for their great-grandchildren! The Lord will bless you sisters, out of the abundance of his blessings, for every sacrifice which you make for these children. And do keep close to them! And above all, you, yourselves, lead lives that will be an example to these little ones that you have brought into the world. After all, perhaps that is your greatest responsibility—to live righteously before the Lord.

NOT BEYOND TEMPTATION

One thing other I would like to mention for a moment, and that is—I hope that none of you will feel that your children are beyond the reach of temptation or transgression. The more firmly you feel that, the greater the danger to your family. No one is safe from the wiles and the persuasions of Satan. He reached Adam and Eve before mortality came. He reached into the family of Adam, and Adam's family produced the first murderer. All down through history he has reached into the families and to the persons of those who are in high and responsible positions. Satan reached David, a man after the Lord's own heart, who committed the great sin which he committed; the great Solomon, and stole his heart away. And in modern times we have too many illustrations of where children of our leaders do not live just as we would wish. So I beg of you, do not assume, my dear brothers and sisters, that your children are beyond the reach of Satan, but always go forward, always conduct your family life, always be parents, fathers and mothers acting on the fact that Satan stands at the elbow of your dear one to lead him astray. Never forget that, my brothers and sisters.

A LIGHT TO GUIDE

Now, in conclusion, I am reminded that Moses, herding his father-in-law's sheep at Mount Horeb, saw one day a flaming bush, and the flame did not consume. Being curious, he started to walk toward this flaming bush, and the voice of the Lord came out of the bush forbidding him to come farther, for, said the Lord, ". . . the place whereon thou standest is holy ground." (Ex. 3:5.) So I think that in every Latter-day Saint home the Spirit of the Lord is a flaming, non-consuming fire, there to light our way, to guide us, to protect us, and to help us do our duty, and every inch of space in that home is holy ground. We should never forget it. Always remember, and always live so that we shall not defile in any way the holiness of the home which should be ours.

May God bless the Saints in their trials and in their tribulations, may he help them to guide and direct their children, may he give them the power to rear their children in righteousness, so that this work of ours shall fulfil its destiny and roll forth and fill the earth; this blessing I ask in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Our next speaker will be Marion G. Romney, whom you have just sustained as a member of the Council of the Twelve

ELDER MARION G. ROMNEY

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My beloved brothers and sisters, coming to this stand and speaking to you is not a new experience. This is the twenty-second time I have climbed up here in the last ten and a half years. I am not a stranger to you. Many of you know me—some of you may know me too well. This call has set up a tremendous emotional reaction in me. I didn't think there could be such a big tempest in such a little teapot. I suppose that I need the help of the Lord now more than I ever needed it in my life. Will you please ask him to give me strength to make a few remarks appropriate to this occasion.

RESPECT FOR OFFICE

The great respect I have always had for the office to which I am now called contributes greatly to the emotional strain I am experiencing. Men who held these offices were godlike men in the eyes of my parents. When they came to Old Mexico where I lived as a little child, I almost thought they were of a different race.

I remember what we thought of President Joseph F. Smith when he came. I don't remember any of the brethren who are now living coming down.

I have always thought of this office as the office of a special witness of the Redeemer of the world, and when I think about the Redeemer of the world, I think about the great council in the spirit world when he undertook to be the instrument and made the sacrifice to put into operation the gospel of redemption. I understand that God the Eternal Father was the author of the plan. I get that from President John Taylor. Jesus sponsored it.

"I will go," he said. I believe Brother Whitney put it in these terms: "Mine be the willing sacrifice, the endless glory thine."

EVENTS IN LIFE OF REDEEMER

Next I think of the Redeemer on the mount with the brother of Jared twenty-two hundred years before he was born in the flesh, as the infant child of Mary. There I get the idea of what I think a spirit looks like. The brother of Jared thought he had beheld flesh and blood, but the Spirit spake to him, saying, "Thou hast seen that I shall take upon me flesh and blood." (Ether 3:9.)

Then he said, "Seest thou that ye are created after mine own image? Yea, even all men were created in the beginning after mine own image.

"Behold this body," [which looked to the brother of Jared like a body of flesh and blood and bone] said the Spirit Jesus Christ, "this body, which ye now behold, is the body of my spirit; and even as I appear unto thee to be in the spirit will I appear unto my people in the flesh." (See Ether 3:15-16.)

And then I think of the Redeemer, that great spirit who created the world under the direction of God, our Eternal Father, entering the body of a tiny infant in a manger in Bethlehem.

I think of him in the temple at the age of twelve already somewhat conversant with his mission, when he said to his mother—I don't think in any sense of disrespect when she chided him a little about being there without her knowledge: "... wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" (Luke 2:49.)

I think about him through his ministry. I could mention many cases, but I shall not take much time. I think about his baptism as the beginning of the pattern that we must follow. I think about him at the well with the Samaritan woman when he said that whosoever would drink of the water that he would give would never thirst again, because that water would be a well of living water, springing up into eternal life.

I think about him when Lazarus had passed away, and Mary and Martha came out to meet him. I don't remember the conversation exactly, but I believe Martha said, "Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died," and Jesus said, "... I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." (John 11:21, 25-26.)

I think of him in the temple during those last days of his mortal life. I think of him in Gethsemane. I will pass the scene. It moves me too deeply. He suffered for me there, and for you. I think of him on the cross. I think of him in the Grove with the Prophet Joseph, and the Father, his Father, the Father of that Spirit of his which appeared to the brother of Jared, the Father of my spirit, as President Clark has just explained, the Father of the spirits of all men.

When I think about being a special witness of him, and I remember that Peter, James, and John could not stay awake through his last suffering in Gethsemane, I think of some who have failed. I don't want to fail.

I think of those who have given their lives for the witness. I have counted that. If it should be necessary, I hope I will not falter to give my life for the testimony of Jesus. I know he lives. I doubt if I will know it better when I meet him.

LOVE FOR THE BRETHREN

I shall not go further. I would like to pay my respects to these men. I know President McKay holds the authority that the Prophet had, and I know the Prophet held the authority that Peter held. I have loved President McKay for a long, long time. He doesn't remember when I first fell in love with him. I guess he doesn't remember when you did, either.

Saturday, October 6Second Day

It was down in Los Angeles in the winter of 1912 and 1913. We were known then as Mormon refugees. We had lost our home in Mexico—invited out down there. Brother McKay came to Los Angeles; he came to Sunday School, and he took a glass of water. He had a pen in his hand. He showed us how clear and beautiful the water was, and then he dropped a drop of ink in the water, and it clouded it all through, and he said to us little fellows, "That is what sin does to a life," and I have ever since then, President McKay, been trying to keep that sin out of my life.

I met him over in Australia. I got frightened of him over there. I was president of the conference. They used to call districts "conferences." I was conducting, and when he looked at his watch, he said, "Brother Romney, I believe it is thirty seconds late." So the next time we started a meeting, we weren't late, and Brother McKay looked at his watch and said, "Brother Romney, I believe it is fifteen seconds early."

Then he didn't take me with him when he went up to visit the Genolean Caves; he took Elder Bischoff. I remember when he came back and taught us a lesson, telling us how those great stalagmites and stalactites in the caves were made by infinitesimally small deposits from drops of water.

Then he told us that was how a life was built. Every thought we thought, every word we spoke, every deed we did, registered on our character. I never have forgotten that, either.

I have always loved President Richards since I knew him. I went out with him in my early work as an Assistant, and I remember how he conducted conferences. He did it with the skill with which an artist paints a picture. I think everything he does is done beautifully. I sustain him with all my heart.

Then this great man, President Clark, has been closest to me of all the Presidency, in the administrations of President Grant and President Smith and now President McKay, because he has been directing for the Presidency the work that I have been assigned to. I don't think there is a man in the world who loves righteousness and is acquainted with Brother Clark who doesn't love him. He has been to me as a father. I love you, Brother Clark, with all the strength of my life.

I love Brother Smith, President Joseph Fielding Smith. He has been most kind and thoughtful of me. I thought he treated me especially good until I got talking to the other brethren about him and found out that he treated them all the same.

Now I love all the brethren, every one of them. I don't go down through the Twelve, except to mention Brother Lee and Brother Moyle. They are my closest associates. Brother Lee is a seer. I know I'll never go wrong if I'm with him, and I know I'll never go hungry if I'm with Brother Moyle because he is so liberal.

I love the brethren I have worked with, Thomas and Clifford and Alma, and Nicholas who passed away, the Patriarch, the Seventy, the Bishopric, and these new men who come in. Some of them I have been close to.

GRATITUDE FOR HERITAGE

Now I would just like to say I am grateful for my heritage. Both my families are of long-standing in the Church, the Redds and the Romneys. I am claimed by both of them. The Redds claim I am a Romney, and the Romneys claim I am a Redd, but I am proud of them both. I am very grateful for my father, the late George S. Romney, and my sainted mother who sits here today in tears. I am grateful for the righteous home they reared me in—Mother, I tell you I am grateful.

I am grateful for my own family and their support of me; my sons and daughter-in-law, my sixteen-month-old granddaughter who gives me lots of joy, and last, but not least, my beloved companion, the sweetheart of my youth, and the mother of my children. They have never put a straw in my way. We had been married seventeen years when I became an Assistant to the Twelve, and I had only been away from home, leaving Ida alone two nights. When I first started traveling around the Church, it was hard for her. She used to cry every time I left and every time I came back. Now she only cries when I come back.

LOYALTY OF MEMBERS

I am very grateful to you, my brothers and sisters. I love every one of you. I know some of the contributions you make. As I go about the Church and see you come to the meetings the brethren authorize me to call, I learn your hearts and your loyalty.

I sat in a meeting this morning with two regional councils, and I saw them yield to the decisions that have been made by these great men of the Presidency with the finest spirit of unity that I have ever beheld. I love you for what you have done for me as you have received me into your homes.

I will do everything I can to serve you, and I will do everything I can to honor this high calling. God bless you, and God bless me, and will you please pray for me that no enemy shall dent the small sector of the line which I am assigned to defend, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

He to whom you have just listened, Elder Marion G. Romney, was this day sustained as a member of the Council of the Twelve.

The congregation will now join in singing: "Redeemer of Israel."

The congregation sang the hymn, "Redeemer of Israel."

ELDER LEVI EDGAR YOUNG

Of the First Council of the Seventy

Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord." (Psalm 33:12.)

My brethren and sisters, I pray for an interest in your faith and prayers, for this is a holy place from which to speak.

In the dedicatory prayer in the Kirtland Temple given by the Prophet Joseph Smith we have these words, "seek ye diligently and teach one another words of wisdom; yea, seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom, seek learning even by study and also by faith." (D. & C. 109:7.)

But where shall wisdom be found? and where is the place of understanding?

Man knoweth not the price thereof; neither is it found in the land of the living.

The depth saith, It is not in me; and the sea saith, It is not with me.

It cannot be gotten for gold, neither shall silver be weighed for the price thereof.

It cannot be valued with the gold of Ophir, with the precious onyx, or the sapphire.

The gold and the crystal cannot equal it; and the exchange of it shall not be for jewels of fine gold. . . .

Behold, the fear of the Lord, that is wisdom; and to depart from evil is understanding. (Job 28:12-17, 28.)

LACK OF WISDOM

To me, one of the great defects of our day is the lack of wisdom. If there were wisdom enough in the world to direct the course of human conduct, we need not have wars. If we were wise enough, we would search for truth in solving all of our problems. We would try to discover the causes of these problems, and we would seek more wisdom in their solution. We would search for the truth without prejudice, but with an understanding mind and heart until through wisdom we could agree among men on important solutions for permanent peace and the betterment of mankind. Such wisdom demands that we have a deep faith in God, active minds, with insight and understanding of the realities of life, and the teachings of the Redeemer. In the book of Ecclesiastes we read, Wisdom is better than strength . . .

Wisdom is better than weapons of war. (Ecc. 9:16, 18.)

SEARCH FOR TRUTH

We Latter-day Saints are searching for truth in ourselves in order to contribute to the peace and the betterment of the world. Yet we cannot find truth without hard work, patient and sincere work in the form of study, over a long period of time.

This is what a French writer meant when he said, "Nothing is really known until it has been known a long time." Wisdom considers things in the long run; it considers life from the standpoint beyond the individual, beyond the local, beyond the temporary and changing. It looks upon society from a high plane and in the pattern of eternal progression. In other words the goal of wisdom is the building of the kingdom of God upon the earth.

EDUCATION OF YOUTH

The young people of today must be taught to work and study hard that they may establish a good beginning in their search for truth. We read again, "The things that thou hast not gathered in thy youth, how shall thou find them in thine old age?" How important it is that the early education of our children be encouraged and developed that a sound basis of study may be established. There are only a very few years in every life, when the mind is fresh and plastic and the memory able to retain. These years should not be wasted; they should be used to every possible advantage in the search for light, in the development and growth of thought and deeds. Let everyone remember that the work he does shall rise up in judgment against him, and the roots of self-respect lie in work done to the best of man's abilities.

President Joseph Young, who for many years was the head of the First Council of the Seventy, taught that the most effective way to satisfy one's noble impulses is training one's intelligence to its highest pitch, having a depth of faith in Almighty God. Such training means years of study of good books, years of devotion to the search for truth. This is what the gospel of Jesus Christ demands of you and me.

NEED FOR TEACHERS

Every man to be educated on any rung of the ladder must have a teacher, not necessarily in the schoolroom, but he must be taught by a good book, a good friend, a leader. Let us not be accused as were the Stoics of ancient times that "The nourishment of religion was drawn from the shallow springs of their own intelligence." That is our trouble today.

Let me read to you from the Acts of the Apostles. One Philip is admonished by the angel of the Lord to go to the man of Ethiopia to be taught and to understand what he is reading. As a result the Ethiopian was converted to Christianity.

And the angel of the Lord spake unto Philip, saying, Arise, and go toward the south unto the way that goeth down from Jerusalem unto Gaza, which is desert.

And he arose and went: and, behold, a man of Ethiopia, a man of great authority under Candace queen of the Ethiopians who had the charge of all her treasure, and had come to Jerusalem for to worship,

Was returning, and sitting in his chariot read Esaias the prophet.

Then the Spirit said unto Philip, Go near, and join thyself to this chariot.

And Philip ran thither to him, and heard him read the prophet Esaias, and said, Understand thou what thou readest?

And he said, How can I, except some man should guide me? And he desired Philip that he would come up and sit with him. (Acts 8:26-31.)

PAUL'S SEARCH

The great missionary of Christ, Paul the Apostle, was a man that was ever searching for truth, ever alert, never at any time mentally inactive. His was an active mind, seeking truth in the university at Tarsus. He was a student of the great teachers, Gamaliel and Hillel. When Paul received the vision and was converted on the road to Damascus, even then was his mind active in his intense search to understand the word of God and obtain the wisdom of the great message. Paul knew that the life spent in the search of truth was not an easy one. He realized that his mission was to gain understanding of the truth of Christ and to teach this truth to others. Paul might have said: "The easier road I leave to others, I have chosen the harder one." It was Emerson who said, "God gives to every man the choice between truth and repose; he cannot have both." But when Paul said, "I have chosen the harder road," he might have added, "but I have also chosen the happier one," for the search for truth is a happy search, an interesting one, an adventuresome, exciting road to travel.

A child begins his search for truth with his mother to guide him, in the reading of childhood rhymes and stories and classics, Bible stories, tales of heroes, and as he grows and develops, he continues his search in the study of history, certainly one of the great fields in which the wisdom of the ages is contained. Unexcelled in the field of history are the Old and New Testaments, in connection with the other great works of Holy Writ. We find in the scriptures the words of great poets, great writers—the highest, the most exalted expressions of human thought.

SCHOOL AT KIRTLAND

Every student of Church history knows about the high school established in the Kirtland Temple. The students were taught English by reading the best literature and the ancient classics. The principal of the school was Professor H. M. Hawes. There were also established Hebrew, Greek, and Latin classes; the professor of Hebrew was Joshua Seixas. I have found out that the attendance at these classes on the part of the elders was very large, and we have from the records the statement of how the Prophet Joseph Smith attended night in and night out the Hebrew and Greek classes. He undoubtedly felt and responded to the beauty of these languages, for only those who have studied Greek and Latin and Hebrew know of the beauty and richness of the literature that has come down to the present day from those far-off times. The Prophet Joseph Smith shows us the majesty of the statement, "Seek ye knowledge out of the best books," and Joseph Young, president of all the seventies in his day, insisted that the seventies in their respective quorums become students of literature and philosophy and religion. Thousands of them adopted the motto that, "Knowledge is Power." The beauty of this idea lies in the fact that the concept of what knowledge means with the Latter-day Saints is this truth that God blesses us as we approach him with deep faith and ask his blessing in our obtaining knowledge. Our minds and hearts are opened, and we become students in the true sense of the term, for it is under God's direction that we learn, and Jesus Christ our Redeemer becomes our greatest teacher.

KNOWLEDGE THROUGH FAITH

The young student devotes himself to the study of literature and art, engineering and medicine, and whatever he may choose, and in all he learns the truth and beauty of morality, the truths of nature, and of life itself, the truth by which he gains the understanding and knowledge of God through his faith. Then these young people are on their way to life everlasting. They put into practice our Thirteenth Article of Faith:

We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul—We believe all things, we hope all things, we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report, or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—Joseph Smith.

I pray that we, and all America, may hark back to our forebears in our American history, to those who gave us by the divine will of God the Constitution of the United States, and who saw in this government the grandeur that God himself wished, for the word of the Lord is right, and all his works are true.

He loved righteousness and judgment: the earth is full of the goodness of the Lord.

By the word of the Lord were the heavens made; and all the host of them by the breath of his mouth. . . .

Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord. (Psalm 33:5-6, 12.)

May the American people bring back the ideal of the search for wisdom through faith in God, may God become again the Lord of this nation, I ask in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Levi Edgar Young, president of the First Council of the Seventy, has just spoken to us.

Stayner Richards, president of the British Mission, who has this day been sustained as an Assistant to the Twelve, will now speak to us. He will be followed by Brother ElRay L. Christiansen.

ELDER STAYNER RICHARDS

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve

My dear brothers and sisters, during my life I have had a number of shocks, but this one that has come to me today is the greatest of them all. Like Elder Romney, I have always loved, admired, respected, and in my humble way, attempted to support the General Authorities of the Church. I have placed them upon a higher plane. I have appreciated their wisdom, their judgment, their counsel, and their righteousness.

GRATITUDE FOR APPOINTMENT

Now, realizing my inability, my inadequacy, to be asked to step in and associate with those brethren completely overwhelms me. I would be ungrateful if I did not thank them for this appointment, and thank you for sustaining me today, and all I can do is to promise you that I shall give to this calling the best that I have.

If you will pardon a personal allusion, I would like to say that throughout all my Church life, in the bishopric, stake presidency, and in the mission field, I have had a wonderful example in the life of my elder brother. Because of his great devotion to the Church, and the study and the preparation and the effort that he has made to qualify himself to measure up to what was expected of him, he has been an inspiration to me.

Knowing as I do his great appreciation of propriety, of ethics, and how sensitive he is pertaining to these matters, in making sure that none of his family or relations ever received any favoritism, I want to assure you now that if you regard this appointment as a mistake, as I do at the present time, that you will not blame Brother Stephen L. for it.

Possibly the only resemblance we have is that we have about the same amount of covering to go over our heads, and if you will observe, we both part our hair in the middle.

MISSIONARY LABORS

I shall take just a few minutes to tell you about missionary labors in Great Britain. First, I would like to say that that's a beautiful country, with its green pastures and countryside the year round. They are good people that inhabit those islands. Most of you, I think, can trace your genealogy and your blood strain back to those people.

They are courteous. They are honest. They have a sense of justice, and I regard England as one of the cradles of real democracy. No one can come into that land as a refugee from any country where he has been persecuted, but what he finds asylum. I have a high regard for the English people.

Right now they are greatly concerned about the health of their monarch, and I would like to advise if it is not already being done by those of the English people, that they pray for King George VI. He and his family are real Christians, as they understand Christianity. They are very self-sacrificing, and they are greatly loved and respected by all their subjects.

In the mission field, I am happy to report, conditions are quite satisfactory. Sister Richards and I have had the pleasure of trying to build upon the fine foundation that was laid by President and Sister Boyer. They did an excellent work there. The mission will always be grateful to them for the excellent work that they accomplished and the devotion that they gave to the cause.

Our auxiliary organizations are functioning very well considering the obstacles that they have to face. Most of them are officered by local people, and those local people are assuming their responsibilities with a high degree of seriousness, and they are meeting with considerable success.

GENEROUS SUPPORT

I would like to thank on behalf of the presidency of the British Mission the fine parents who have maintained those missionaries that we have there. We thank you for the encouragement that you have given to them, and the financial support that has made their presence there possible.

May I tell this group assembled today that among those parents we have found those who were very willing to give of their means to help out in the cause. We have had two of them who have each given a thousand copies of the Book of Mormon for the work. One couple gave $1680.00 to purchase an automobile for the two special representatives of the mission presidency to travel over the different districts. We had a couple that gave $675.00 to make it possible for those branches that could not afford new song books to receive an adequate supply.

Also in the mission field we have those with generous hearts. As we concluded one district conference, one good brother and his wife came up to me and handed me an envelope and said, "President Richards, there is one hundred pounds that I wish you would use for the missionary work."

Just before I left, I was called to the hospital to see a brother who has been sick for some time, and for whom we have prayed to the Lord that he might be blessed and made well. When I arrived, he handed me a piece of paper and said, "Would you read that?"

As I read it, I found out that it was a codicil to his will in which he had provided that when he died, a sufficient amount of his money should come to our Church to pay the full cost of one of the new buildings that we contemplate building.

These acts of generosity naturally make us feel that the gospel of Jesus Christ is penetrating the hearts of the people, who are being made to realize that, after all, it isn't what you have, but it is how you use it, and they love the gospel so much that they are willing to give of their means for its support.

MISSIONARY PLAN

Our missionaries are a wonderful lot. Sister Richards and I love them with all our hearts, just as we do our own children. We adopted, when we went into the mission field, what is called the Anderson Plan of proselyting. I may possibly not be considered out of order when I pay respect to Elder Anderson and whoever assisted him in working out that plan, for we found out that it is a very practical and methodical way of presenting the gospel of Jesus Christ.

I remember well forty years ago as a missionary when we used to pass a series of three tracts to the door, attempt to get a conversation, or attempt to get a cottage meeting, and finally carry on in that work.

Brethren and sisters, that is only the A B C's compared with this plan. Christ told his disciples, ". . . Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." (Mark 16:15.) That is what the missionaries are doing with this plan. They go to the door and with smiles on their faces, and the best personality they can develop, hold up the Book of Mormon, and they try for fifteen minutes to preach the gospel. They try to lend that book and then secure a cottage meeting. Then they carry on twelve different lessons in which they take up one at a time the principles of the gospel and try to secure an agreement on the truth of every one of those principles.

FAITHFULNESS OF MISSIONARIES

I don't know about the other missions, but I know that it is working among our missionaries, and I thank God for the way they work. They are willing to work from nine o'clock in the morning until ten or eleven o'clock at night, and they love it.

They are happy because they are busy, and I think I will try to prove to you just how hard they are working.

The last report showed that some districts are averaging 107 hours tracting a month among the missionaries, twenty-six street meetings a month, twenty-eight copies of the Book of Mormon lent a month, and as high as forty-seven cottage meetings a month, which means that each missionary is attending ninety-four because each missionary takes credit for only the ones that he conducts. That can't be done without work, and work in the Church never hurt anybody; and it never will.

As a result of their work they have lent out up to date over 29,000 copies of the Book of Mormon. They have had the pleasure of baptizing, because of the Lord's blessings upon them, almost eight hundred, and at the present rate they should lend out about 40,000 copies of the Book of Mormon by the end of the year, and they should be servants in the hands of the Lord in bringing in between 1,000 and 1,100 new members into the Church.

We rejoice in the great work that they are doing. May I say that they are living so close to our Father in heaven that they feel to call upon him on every occasion, and when the question comes up among the investigators, "How can we give up tea, coffee, and tobacco that we have used all our lives?" these missionaries, with their faith in God, say, "You kneel down and ask your Father in heaven to help you, and he will take the desire for those poisons away from you that you will never feel the urge to take them again."

When they ask, "On the amount that we make, how can we pay one-tenth into the Church?" they tell them the same way, that if they will trust the Lord, the Lord will bless them so that the nine-tenths that they have left will go farther than the ten-tenths that they receive.

EFFORTS REWARDED

The Lord has answered their requests in the most wonderful ways. I wonder if you realize how much faith these missionaries have. It is a marvel to me.

One of our district presidents went into Colchester in the Norwich District there. He just happened to be there at noon with his companion to work with the two missionaries. One of them said, "Will you go out and hold a street meeting with us?"

He said, "Why, you are not going out in a rain like this? It is raining cats and dogs outside."

The other replied, "Sure, we are going out."

He said, "All right, I'll go with you."

They knelt down and had a word of prayer. By the time they got to the corner and started their street meeting the rain ceased, and that is unusual in England. They held their street meeting and started home, and the rain started up again. That elder told his president that every time that week it had been exactly the same way.

Our missionaries entered upon a program for six months of preaching love and kindness. Let me tell you how it worked with one of the missionaries. He was on a street meeting corner in Leeds and as he stood up, one of the hecklers gave him one of the worst lashings of invectives that any man could receive. He tore him down and tore the religion down.

What did this elder do? He lived what he had been preaching. He stepped down, walked over to the gentleman and said, "You have given me an awful calling down today. Possibly it is all right. I just want you to know that I hold nothing against you for it, that I love you, brother, and I would like to shake your hand." Then he went back to the stand.

A young woman was heard to comment to another, "I didn't know that anything like that could happen outside of the New Testament."

THE LORD'S BLESSING

There are other things that I could tell you, but I must not take more time. I must not close without saying that if I have given the impression to any that I claim any credit for what has been done there, and is being done, I am sorry, because I claim no credit at all. It has all been done by the missionaries, and the Lord's blessings that have attended them. Sister Richards and I have been merely innocent and admiring bystanders on the sidelines urging them on.

I would like to say that I do appreciate my beloved wife. All my life she has been a wonderful companion. She is so full of faith and devotion to this work that she has been an inspiration to me, and I think it is only fair to say that I feel she has done an excellent work in presiding over the Relief Society there in the British Mission.

May God bless you, my brethren and sisters, bless all the missionaries throughout the world, and cause that his Spirit may ever attend them in their labors is my humble prayer in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Stayner Richards, whom you have just sustained as an Assistant to the Twelve, has just concluded speaking. We shall hear from Elder Christiansen this afternoon, or sometime later.

It is suggested that we sing: "Praise to the Man Who Communed With Jehovah."

The closing prayer will be offered by Elder James P. Jensen, formerly president of the East Central States Mission, after which this conference will stand adjourned until two o'clock this afternoon. The proceedings of that session will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City, and, by arrangement through KSL, over the other stations named at the beginning of the Friday morning session.

Important messages and calls coming to us for persons supposed to be in attendance at the conference will be broadcast at the dismissal of the meeting over the loud speaking system on the grounds, and similar messages coming in will likewise be broadcast at the close of each general session of this conference without further notice.

The singing for this session has been furnished by the congregation, as you know, Brother Cornwall conducting, and Brother Alexander Schreiner at the organ.

We will all join in singing (we will remain seated): Praise to the Man Who Communed With Jehovah."

Singing by the congregation, "Praise to the Man Who Communed With Jehovah."

James P. Jensen, formerly president of the East Central States Mission, offered the benediction.

Conference adjourned until 2 o'clock p.m.

SECOND DAY

AFTERNOON MEETING

President David O. McKay, who conducted the services at the Saturday afternoon session of Conference, opened the meeting promptly at 2 o'clock.

President David O. McKay:

To the audience listening in over the radio we are pleased to announce that this session of the One Hundred Twenty-second Semi-annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is being held in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City. These services, as all general sessions of the conference, are broadcast in the Assembly Hall and in Barratt Hall over a loud-speaking system, and by television. The proceedings are also broadcast over KSL of Salt Lake City and by arrangement through KSL over the stations named in the first session of the conference.

This session will be televised also over KSL television station, channel 5.

The singing will be by the congregation, with Richard P. Condie, assistant conductor of the Tabernacle Choir, conducting, and Roy M. Darley, assistant organist, is at the organ.

We shall begin the services by the congregation singing: "High On The Mountain Top."

The opening prayer will be offered by Brother Walter Miller, formerly president of the Western Canadian Mission. We will remain seated as we sing.

---

The congregation sang the hymn, "High on the Mountain Top."

Elder Walter Miller, formerly President of the Western Canadian Mission, offered the opening prayer.

President David O. McKay:

All please join now in singing: "Do What Is Right." We shall be pleased to have any groups and individuals who are listening in join with us.

---

Singing by the congregation, "Do What Is Right."

President David O. McKay:

Our first speaker this afternoon will be Elder ElRay L. Christiansen, president of the Logan Temple, president of the East Cache Stake, and sustained this morning as an Assistant to the Twelve. Brother Christiansen will be followed by Brother John Longden.

ELDER ELRAY L. CHRISTIANSEN

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve

My brothers and sisters: In spite of the many kindly and sincere words of commendation and confidence that have been spoken to me in the past two hours, I stand before you in the depths of humility, and with fear and trembling do I accept this calling that has come to me at this time. Never once have I thought that such a great assignment would ever be given to me, but I can assure you that inasmuch as it has come through the proper authority, I shall do my utmost to do honor to the position and to the work that I am assigned, and to this great Church, and to serve the Lord and you people with all my heart and strength.

WILLINGNESS TO SERVE

Long ago, I promised the Lord that I stood ready to give or to do anything and all things which he would ask of me through his servants. I have tried to do that, and again I commit myself, in your presence, to that course in life.

I have never yet been up against a task that was difficult for me but what I have found the immediate and sustaining support of my wonderful wife, and along with that, the encouragement of my children. That support has been one of the most helpful, strengthening influences that has come to me in my life. With their help, and with the help of the Lord we have gone along and done our best.

I remember one time, a few years ago, I was asked if I would serve as the first counselor in the presidency of the East Cache Stake. I already had what I thought was all I could do. I was given about an hour to decide whether I would or would not accept the call. I was debating it seriously, although I knew in my heart that I couldn't refuse. My son, my only son, was at home; (my daughters were not at home), and after conferring with my wife about it, I decided to call him from his room and tell him what had happened and see what he might say. I said, "John, they have asked me to become first counselor in the presidency of this stake."

Before I could ask his opinion he said, "Well, you're going to take it, aren't you?" And so I hesitated no longer. How I appreciate that! Now that this call has come, I am sure that my family will help me to become composed and to do my duty.

I have wondered just how long this stupor lasts when one is called into these positions. I have felt as if I were in a daze, and it doesn't seem to leave quickly, either.

LOVE FOR GENERAL AUTHORITIES

I have learned to love these brethren, the General Authorities of the Church, and I have tried to sustain them, and I here pledge that I shall sustain them continually in their work. Some of them toured the mission with us. We were "greenhorns" at the work, but the comfort and encouragement and assurance from these wonderful men I shall never forget.

We sang with them as we journeyed and talked with them intimately. They pointed out needful and useful things that we might do, commended us on the few that we had done, but the confidence they inspired and instilled into us was most helpful and heartening. I can never forget that! Then the association now and again in the transacting of the business that I have had to do with the other brethren; their coming into our stakes; the kindness and the wisdom that they show is beyond compare.

I am sure that they will yet be patient with me, and tolerant and helpful. I beg this of them, along with the help of my family which I may well expect. And, I still can look to my Father in heaven for added support, and be assured that as he has always done, he will continue to strengthen and help me in the work that I am to do in his Church and kingdom.

I like that song we sang this morning, "I'll strengthen thee, help thee, and cause thee to stand, upheld by my righteous, omnipotent hand." I am sure that help will be forthcoming.

TESTIMONY

Brethren, and sisters, I have a testimony of this gospel. Were it not so, I would not accept these assignments. I know that God lives; that Jesus is the Christ, and that Joseph Smith was the instrument in his hands to restore to the earth the gospel, the power of the priesthood in the last days for the last time. There is no doubt about this in my mind, and I testify to you that it is so.

I realize that this testimony, in order to be sincere and genuine, and any testimony which we declare, should be accompanied by good works and by serving our Father in heaven; by doing his will and keeping his commandments, otherwise it is merely as sounding brass.

Two passages of scripture have helped me greatly as I have come along through life. When I first read them, they made an impression upon me.

Seek not for riches but for wisdom, and behold, the mysteries of God shall be unfolded unto you, and then shall you be made rich. Behold, he that hath eternal life is rich. (D. & C. 6:7.)

That helped me.

And the other one which has helped me to dedicate my time as needed is found in the 103rd section of the Doctrine and Covenants and reads:

Let no man be afraid to lay down his life for my sake; for whoso layeth down his life for my sake shall find it again.

And whoso is not willing to lay down his life for my sake is not my disciple. (Ibid., 103:27-28.)

I hope I shall never falter in my determination to serve him, for I love the Lord with all my heart.

STAKE WORK

There are things that I would like to have finished that we have begun in our stake. We have a 372-acre farm as a stake welfare project, and I, along with my brethren, have had a great deal of satisfaction out on that farm this summer, working hard and seeing these buildings being erected and equipped to carry on our dairy project. It has been a great thrill to be out there with the brethren and enjoy the fellowship and the association that come under those conditions.

We have some little cards that we have the brethren fill out at the end of each day's work showing the amount of time they spend and the type of work they do. I looked over some of those cards one day and found one of the young elders, who was out there for the first time, had been digging a trench part of the day and running cement the other part. Opposite the question as to the nature of the work done, he wrote in big letters, "Hard." Well, it has been just that, but it has been enjoyable.

I know that this farm and the other affairs will be in good hands because I have had wonderful help in the association of my counselors, the high council and the bishoprics of the wards,—and the brethren of the priesthood. It has been an inspiration. The work will go on, and I will watch it with great eagerness and with great interest.

My work in directing the affairs of the Logan Temple has been most satisfying and enjoyable. The devotion of those who serve there is commendable and praiseworthy.

I must not speak longer, but I pray God to bless you, my brothers and sisters, that we may be faithful and be counted among those who would, if necessary, give our all for his sake as he has given his for our sake, and that I may so be ready, I pray. And I ask you, my friends and associates who know me so well and know my limitations as I know them, to help me and to pray for me. I need your prayers. May God bless us to be faithful and true, I ask in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

We have just listened to Brother ElRay L. Christiansen, who was sustained this morning as an Assistant to the Twelve.

Brother John Longden, who has served as bishop, high councilman, member of the General Welfare Committee, and sustained this morning as an Assistant to the Twelve, will now speak to us. He will be followed by Eldred G. Smith, Patriarch to the Church.

ELDER JOHN LONGDEN

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve

I am still surprised, amazed, and shocked at the glorious honor that has come to me. I assure you that I am most humble in accepting this responsibility. The experience of the last seventeen or eighteen hours I would not trade for anything of a monetary value.

President McKay called me to his home last evening, pulled up a chair next to me, took my hand and looked me in the eyes; there was a chill went up my spine. It was a warm chill, that I shall never forget, and I have been impressed since with the thought that if each member of the Church could have such an experience as I had last evening, he would gain strength and a support the like of which he has never experienced.

VOTE OF CONFIDENCE

It is consoling to know you have the vote of confidence of the membership of the Church assembled here. I am reminded of a story of a man who was running for the Senate in one of the states recently. He had made what he thought was an excellent speech, after which one who was in the audience came up and shook his fist in his face and said, "I wouldn't vote for you if you were Saint Peter." The would-be senator said in return, "If I were Saint Peter, I wouldn't need your vote because you wouldn't be in my district."

I am grateful that I am in your district, brothers and sisters, and that I have had the privilege for about a year and a half of coming into some of the stakes and partaking of your spirit and fine hospitality and kindness. This gives me strength to face the task ahead.

If my life is of no value to my friends, I assure you that it is of no value to me. Sister Longden and I have said many times, that we would like to die with our boots on in the service of the Lord.

TESTIMONY

I have a testimony of this gospel, that it is the gospel of Jesus Christ, that his Church is restored to the earth in its fulness. I am grateful for that testimony. I am grateful for faith in a divine, living, personal God. I am grateful for faith in the divine mission of Jesus Christ. I am grateful for faith that his gospel has been restored in its fulness. I am grateful for faith in the divine mission of the Prophet Joseph Smith.

And most of all I am grateful that there is a spirit burning within me that tells me that these men whom we have sustained today are our leaders; that they are divine; they are men chosen of our Heavenly Father through his Son Jesus Christ to lead us in this the Dispensation of the Fulness of Times, and that they lead us with love and kindness. I bear you witness and testimony that if we will do the things that these men whom we have sustained counsel us in, we will have no need to fear.

GRATITUDE FOR BLESSINGS

I am grateful for a loving wife, one who has overlooked my shortcomings, errors, and mistakes, and has been most patient with me now for twenty-seven years. I am grateful for two lovely daughters that we have been permitted to rear thus far, one who three days ago bore a son. I am grateful for these blessings.

Everything I have I owe to this Church. How grateful I am that the missionaries came and sought out my parents in England some sixty years ago, and that they listened to their warning voice.

Let the Spirit of the Savior be in our hearts whether we are working in the shop, or whether we are in school. You young people need not be ashamed of the gospel of Jesus Christ. I don't care what you might be doing by way of earning your livelihood. As you testify of his goodness, he verily will bless you. And so I realize as I stand before you today that in and of myself I could accomplish nothing, but I understand the scriptures, and I believe it was the Savior speaking to Nephi when he said he would not command anything of his children unless he prepared the way and made it possible for them to accomplish those things. I have faith in that teaching of the Savior. I know with your help, with your love, with your prayers and faith that I will be able to accomplish the bit which I have been called upon to fulfill.

May God's choice blessings be upon us, may we have the spirit of love in our homes as we were exhorted this morning.

EXPERIENCE AT SCHOOL

I recall a glorious experience just a few months ago in taking a group of young junior high school students to the deaf and dumb school in Ogden. It was a thrilling experience to see a patient teacher with children seven and eight years of age who could not hear and could not speak, yet with the aid of the child's hand upon the teacher's throat, a mirror in front of them, and with an arm around that child, she was able through the vibrations to teach some sentences. They were these (a lesson to the world in this time of turmoil and confusion): "I love God," "I love father." "I love mother." "I love my neighbor." To me that was the action of the commandment of Jesus Christ in very deed.

May we have this love in our hearts as we go back into our wards and into our stakes, I humbly pray, as I bear my testimony to you with all sincerity and humility that this is the Church of Jesus Christ, and I do it in his name. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

He to whom we have just listened is John Longden, who this morning was sustained as an Assistant to the Twelve.

We sustained also Brother George Q. Morris who is presiding over the Eastern States Mission, whom we consulted yesterday, and who has willingly accepted, saying in words, "Whatever you Brethren wish me to do, that I gladly and willingly will do my best to do."

We shall now listen to Eldred G. Smith, Patriarch to the Church, who will be followed by Spencer W. Kimball, a member of the Council of the Twelve.

ELDER ELDRED G. SMITH

Patriarch to the Church

It is truly a privilege and honor to be here and partake of the spirit and influence of this occasion. I pray that the Spirit of the Lord will be with me while I occupy this time. I want to acknowledge my gratitude for the prayer that was offered in my behalf and in behalf of the other patriarchs at the opening of this conference. I rejoice in the spirit of this conference and in the influence that radiates from such gatherings. I appreciate the privilege of being in the presence of the General Authorities and such a multitude of the priesthood and Saints. Truly, this is a happy people, and why shouldn't we be happy? We possess the greatest knowledge given to man—the knowledge of the gospel. Then the greatest happiness comes from our efforts to give it to others.

Henry Thoreau wrote:

It is something to be able to paint a particular picture, or to carve a statue and to so make a few objects beautiful, but it is far more glorious to carve and paint the very atmosphere and medium through which we look—to affect the quality of the day. That is the highest of arts.

THE ART OF LIVING

Thoreau is trying to remind us that great art is not restricted to painting, music, sculpture, and writing. There is an art to living, too. Who of all people are better prepared to affect the quality of the day for others than are the members of the Church of Jesus Christ. The art of living should be at its best among the Latter-day Saints. One must first have his own house in order. He must first live the gospel himself; then he can affect the quality of the day for others.

What can bring greater joy to man than a knowledge of the gospel of Jesus Christ, to know that God lives and that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the Living God, to know the plan of salvation, and to know that he has an opportunity to follow that plan and receive salvation—yes, even exaltation. Then take that knowledge and give it to others, paint the atmosphere and medium through which they look.

It thrills me to see the faces of converts to the Church fill with joy when they tell me their experiences through which they joined the Church, to see the reverence paid to those missionaries who brought them the gospel; how they, too, know that God lives and that Jesus is the Christ; and that his gospel has been restored to the earth. Those missionaries were the greatest artists.

Such art is not confined to the ordained missionaries. Every member of the Church can so live as to change the atmosphere around him for the benefit of others. Teach the principles of the gospel through your very deeds, acts of kindness; be sincere in your religion and live it strictly, that through your deeds others shall follow.

Said the Savior,

Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on an hill cannot be hid.

Neither do men light a candle and put it under a bushel, but on a candlestick; and it giveth light unto all that are in the house.

Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven. (Matthew 5:14-16.)

Christ was speaking to his disciples in that greatest of all sermons, the Sermon on the Mount, when he gave this commandment. It was to those same disciples that Jesus had explained the gospel plan in all its fulness. They had listened to him, talked to him, come under the influence of his divine personality. They had witnessed the miracles he had performed, so because of their greater knowledge and their great privileges theirs was the responsibility to let their light so shine before men that others might see their good works and glorify their Father, which is in heaven.

EXEMPLARS OF RIGHTEOUSNESS

Today, my brothers and sisters, that command is directed to us. We have received a light and knowledge that was given to the disciples of old. It is our responsibility to let our light so shine until it really reaches the ends of the earth.

If each individual member of this entire Church would sincerely strive to do his or her best, just think what might be accomplished. We can spread gloom around us, we can spread good cheer, or we can be such an example of righteousness that others will want to follow the pattern of our lives. A chain reaction goes on that is endless in its effects. When a knowledge of the divinity of the gospel is given to you, you can pass it on to others. If you are living the gospel, they will hear your testimony. Remember the saying: "How can I hear what you are saying, when what you are is ringing so loudly in my ears?"

POWER IN TESTIMONIES

Live the gospel first, then teach it to others. Declare your testimony to others on every occasion. There is a power in bearing your testimony.

I remember an occasion in the mission field in Germany, when I had been tracting. I was getting a bit discouraged, having met nothing but passive attention. After climbing some stairs I knocked on a door, and a large man opened it and with a very gruff attitude greeted me. I gave him my brief message, as we did in those days in presenting a tract at the door; he turned and picked up a handful of leaflets off the table near the door and shook them in my face and declared to me that I was the fifth person who had been to his door that day with just such leaflets. He was a large man and very rough in his approach. I expected any moment that I might be thrown down the stairs, but he declared that none of us knew that we had the gospel. He said, "You all say that it is true; this is the way; you all say that. None of you know."

I met the challenge, and I stood straight before him and looked him square in the eyes, and I bore my testimony to him that I knew that this is the gospel of Jesus Christ and the only method by which he could gain salvation, and I went on at some length bearing my testimony to this man. Afterward I was surprised at the fluency of my speech because I had not been in Germany very long, I did not understand the language very well, but when I had finished, he had changed his tone entirely and very humbly begged my pardon and promised to read the tract, which I am sure he did.

I am sure that as we bear our testimonies in our sacrament meetings, that same effect goes out to others and assists others in strengthening their testimonies. And as we have heard testimonies here in this conference, they are a strengthening power to all of us. It was the strengthening power of their testimonies of the divinity of the gospel that was the motivating power to the pioneers in their trek across the plains; it gave them the courage to face the hardships and trials of that long journey.

A testimony is more than a mathematical calculation. It is more than the result of a given experience. As a young man enumerated a number of experiences in the process of his conversion, after each experience he said, "That was not what converted me." Again, "And that was not what converted me." It was the accumulation of many experiences with sincerity and prayer which put him in tune to the promptings of the Holy Ghost. And so it is with me and all others who have a testimony. The Spirit testifies from within.

THE SPIRIT WITHIN

Yes, I have had many experiences in the mission field and at home of healings, the blind made to see, the evil spirits rebuked, but the testimony of the divinity of the gospel comes not alone from these experiences but from the spirit within, which testifies of God and that he lives, that Jesus is the Christ, and that he has established his gospel in the earth, with the full power of the priesthood through which all the ordinances unto salvation and exaltation may be performed.

That knowledge burns within me, and even though Satan has tried to take it from me, he has not succeeded and never shall, for I know this is the gospel of Jesus Christ, the power unto salvation, the light and life of the world. I know that President David O. McKay has been chosen of God to lead this people in this day. I sustain him and his Counselors and all the other General Authorities, and I pray God's blessings upon them.

May the Lord bless each of us with a burning testimony of the divinity of this gospel, and may the Lord help us to extend it to others that they too may receive the joy and blessings of the gospel, that the earth may speedily be prepared for his coming. May we all carry with us from this conference a renewed determination to go forth proclaiming his gospel in deed and in precept is my prayer in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER SPENCER W. KIMBALL

Of the Council of the Twelve

My beloved brethren and sisters, I want to assure you today of my humility and my desire to say something which will be helpful.

I assure you also of my loyalty, my love for, and my faith in the prophet, seer, and revelator, President David O. McKay, and his Counselors.

As the statistics were read this morning of the growth of the Church, the thought came to me that perhaps our beloved President George Albert Smith, President Heber J. Grant, President Joseph F. Smith, all of whom I knew personally, and those others who have presided in this Tabernacle and over this Church, would be gratified to see the tremendous development in the Church. We hope that the spiritual growth has kept pace.

NEW CHURCH OFFICERS

Today we have sustained some new men in official positions as General Authorities of the Church. Having known each of these men, my heart is filled with gratitude to have them close to us. I have watched Brother Longden grow these past eight years since I met him first. I have been in Brother Stayner Richards' stake and have seen the precision with which his work was carried on. With Brother Moyle I helped to install Brother ElRay Christiansen as president of the East Cache Stake over which he now presides, and there I came in contact with a man of God, one whose love for his Heavenly Father was unsurpassed. It was my privilege just very recently to spend a week with President George Q. Morris in the Eastern States. I had never had the privilege of getting intimately acquainted with him before, but this week convinced me that he is one of God's great servants. And so I am grateful for these four men who are going to be associated with us a little closer than they have been in the past, and I am sure you people will be inspired by them. For a decade Brother Romney has been growing ever closer to his Maker. He has served faithfully; he has proved himself; he has stood the test and measured up. I am grateful to have Brother Marion Romney as one of our Council, and I shall fully sustain him.

As I think of the calling of these brethren, I am reminded of the statement made by the Savior in the ninth chapter of Luke, in which he says,

And it came to pass, that, as they went in the way, a certain man said unto him, Lord, I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest.

And Jesus said unto him, Foxes have holes, and birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head.

And he said unto another, Follow me. But he said, Lord, suffer me first to go and bury my father.

Jesus said unto him, Let the dead bury their dead: but go thou and preach the kingdom of God.

And another also said, Lord, I will follow thee; but let me first go bid them farewell, which are at home at my house.

And Jesus said unto him, No man, having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God. (Luke 9:57-62.)

Five men today have put their hands firmly on the plow, never to turn back. They have been willing to make adjustments, whatever is required, and the adjustments will not be few. They do not fear sacrifice. And so it is with the members of the Church to a greater or lesser extent.

"PROVE THEM HEREWITH"

Before we came into the world, the Lord said to us and to the great multitude,

... we will go down, for there is space there, and we will take of these materials, and we will make an earth whereon these may dwell; And we will prove them herewith, to see if they will do all things whatsoever the Lord their God shall command them. (Abraham 3:24-25.)

I believe it was from this very pulpit that my grandfather presented a sermon in which he said, "The test, the test, the TEST is coming." Well, the test is here. The test has always been here. We came into the world as a test. All the way down the line there are adjustments to make. There are sins to overcome. There is much to learn. There are weaknesses above which we must rise. We must gain self-mastery, become righteous, and attain unto perfection.

In the early days of the ministry of the Savior, he gave to us in a great sermon:

And if any man will sue thee at the law, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also.

And whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain. (Matt. 5:40-41.)

And he says a little later,

... Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you;

That ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven:

... For if ye love them which love you, what reward have ye? do not even the publicans the same?

Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect. (Ibid., 5:44-46, 48.)

SPIRIT GIVETH LIFE

The letter killeth and the spirit giveth life, and in all of our activities we should remember that.

Brother Romney spoke of the beautiful life of the Savior, his life of sacrifice. I wonder as we go into our testimony meetings if we ponder on the atonement and his sacrifice. The letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life. Do we take the bread and the water in remembrance of the body, the flesh and the blood of our Lord Jesus Christ, or do we just take bread and water?

When we pray to our Heavenly Father, do we follow routine procedures and pray a prayer of words or do we pray unto the Lord with all our hearts and souls? The letter killeth, and the spirit giveth life. Just this week a young woman said to me that she had been praying for light and for the solution to some of her problems, but though she had uttered many prayers she felt that her petitions had not gone higher than the ceiling.

And with the other principles of the gospel—are we sincere and devout? Do we pay our tithes with a great devotion—with a gratitude for the privilege, or do we pay as a matter of fact and through routine, or because we feel under pressure? It is my candid opinion that the Lord does not need the tithes we pay. Certainly he puts them to beneficial use, in the erection of chapels, temples, in missionary work, in educational endeavors, but the Lord could find other ways and means to finance his program without the tithes. It is you and I who are blessed when we pay the tithes. We have obeyed a principle; we have mastered our desires; we have obeyed a commandment without necessarily knowing fully why. You will remember that the angel said to Adam, "Why dost thou offer sacrifices unto the Lord? And Adam said unto him: I know not, save the Lord commanded me." (P. of G. P., Moses 5:6.) Adam was a man of God with a great faith, and he continued to offer sacrifices unto the Lord because it had been commanded, even though he did not fully understand why, and even though it meant a considerable financial sacrifice to him. Why did he offer sacrifices—because it was a commandment of his Heavenly Father. He had been told to perform this act by one whom he knew to be his God. He had absolute faith and confidence that blessings would come through such obedience, and he did not hesitate. After he had lived the law, then came the understanding, for the miracle follows the faith rather than faith the miracle. The angel explained to him that it was to keep him in constant memory of the coming of the Christ who would save the world, and exalt those of the people who would live the commandments.

Had Adam waited until he could have fully understood and rationalized the program, perhaps in the meantime his family would have fallen away from the truth, and he himself might have lost his faith. He needed something tangible—a constant sacrifice—to help him to remember the coming of the Savior at a later time. And so we partake of the sacrament to remind us of the sacrifice that the Savior did make, and now we may pay our tithes which will be a constant reminder to us of the promises and the requirements of our Heavenly Father. So each time we pay our tithes it is a personal sacrifice and brings with it a blessing in faith and closeness to our Heavenly Father.

THE WORD OF WISDOM

Frequently I hear people talk about the Word of Wisdom and emphasize the fact that it will increase the period of their lives if they observe it strictly. I, also, believe that it is the Lord's law of health and that it will extend our lives and will give us better health while we live. But that is not the reason I obey the law of the Word of Wisdom, and I wish to digress to emphasize again that the Word of Wisdom is a law. From this very pulpit it has been declared by prophets of God to be a law—not just a suggestion.

President Francis M. Lyman, in the April 1908 general conference said:

... I believe the time is ripe for the Latter-day Saints, particularly, to place themselves in accord with this revelation, the Word of Wisdom, which was given in the beginning by the Prophet Joseph as a Word of Wisdom, with promises which are very precious. In the beginning, it was not laid down as a strict commandment. I do not know whether or not the Lord took into account the fact that our forefathers, and our fathers had been so used to many things forbidden in the Word of Wisdom that it might be difficult for them to order their lives in harmony with those requirements: so we were given perhaps thirty to forty years of training and experience before the Lord announced, through his servant the Prophet Brigham Young, that the Word of Wisdom has now become a commandment of the Lord. President Young laid it down very strictly and exactly from this stand that from that time henceforth the Word of Wisdom is a commandment from the Lord, and all Latter-day Saints are required to observe it. (Conference Report, April 1908, 14-15.)

The Lord has insisted upon our refraining from the use of liquor, tobacco, and tea and coffee. I am sure that such abstinence will increase the length of our lives and increase the vigor of our lives. But I am sure that a deeper value comes from the observance of the Word of Wisdom than the mere length of life, for after all we must finally all pass away. The time will come when our bodies and spirits are separated, and our bodies will be laid in Mother Earth to go through the regular process, and though we do wish to continue our mortal existence as long as we can consistently, I am confident that there are greater blessings which will come to us than the strictly physical.

OBEDIENCE BRINGS BLESSINGS

When I refrain from the use of these forbidden things, I am obeying my Heavenly Father, and whether or not I understand the purpose I will still receive the blessing. The Lord has promised to all of us who obey his commandments and live his statutes that all that he has is ours. The living of the Word of Wisdom is a test. Perhaps he chose to make a part of this test those things which would be universally used and would take character and courage and strength to leave alone. It was given as a principle and "... adapted to the capacity of the weak and the weakest of all saints, who are or can be called saints." (D. & C. 89:3.) If one obeys the Word of Wisdom only because of the physical, perhaps it is of the letter. But if he can stand the test and prove himself, that he will obey the commands of God, then it is of the spirit, and he will reap rich blessings. There may be other things which are destructive to the body, but since the Lord through his prophets has specifically mentioned certain items, then these we must refrain from using. Should the Lord later include in the Word of Wisdom any other things which are difficult, we will also obey them.

LAW OF THE FAST

The law of the fast is another test. If we merely go without food to supply welfare funds, it is much of the letter, but in real fasting, for spiritual blessings, come self-mastery and increased spirituality.

In the fourteenth chapter of Luke the Lord says,

. . . When thou makest a dinner or a supper, call not thy friends, nor thy brethren, neither thy kinsmen, nor thy rich neighbours; lest they also bid thee again, and a recompence be made thee.

But when thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind:

And thou shalt be blessed; for they cannot recompense thee: for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just. (Luke 14:12-14.)

Are we interested in what we can get or are we interested in what we can give? The Savior's life was one of unselfish service. The Savior's doctrine and gospel is one of selflessness. Are we interested in the glamorous and in the spectacular? Is our Church service like the prayer of the Pharisee or like the Publican? You will remember the Savior gave us the parable,

Two men went up into the temple to pray; the one a Pharisee, and the other a publican.

The Pharisee stood and prayed thus with himself, God, I thank thee, that I am not as other men are, extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as this publican.

I fast twice in the week, I give tithes of all that I possess.

And the publican, standing afar off would not lift up so much as his eyes unto heaven, but smote upon his breast saying, God be merciful to me a sinner.

I tell you, this man went down to his house justified rather than the other: for every one that exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted. (Ibid., 18:10-14.)

THE MANSION

In his booklet The Mansion,* Henry Van Dyke gives us a most interesting picture of the type of man who prays for show and for his great words, who makes his gifts where they will bring him personal return, who serves himself first and his neighbor as a convenience to himself. His story is of one John Weightman who lived in a large stone house which carried the air of calm and reserved opulence. Like his house he was a self-made man, firm, solid, successful. The stern architecture of his home was symbolical of his social position, religious doctrine, and business creed. He gave generously to established charities. There were foundations which he established. He gave his family luxuries, trips, court presentations, seasons on the Riviera. His name was known and respected far and wide. Over a hundred million dollars had sat around his table at banquets.

Weightman had expressed to his critical son, "I have never made a single dollar that the courts would not uphold, at least in the long run, and yet my affairs have prospered. Not one of my charities but has brought me in a good return, either in the increase of influence, the building up of credit, or the association with substantial people. Of course, you have to be careful how you give to secure the best results. No indiscriminate giving, no pennies in beggars' hats."

His check in the collection plate was far more valuable to him than an equal amount in cash would have been. He identified himself with all public drives and reminded his son, "You will learn, my boy, that it is wisdom to put your gifts where they can be identified and do you good also."

His son would have him assist a sick man whose business was failing, but the father said, "Give him a few hundred, but don't overwork your gratitude. All you'll get from him will be a letter of thanks. Don't get sentimental. Religion is not a matter of sentiment, but principle."

When the son had left, John Weightman sat alone in his carved chair feeling strangely old and dull. On the library table were clippings praising him for his benevolence. One editor called them the "Weightman Charities." There were hospitals he had endowed, schools he had helped, community enterprises which he had fostered. His son's denunciation had caused him to think. Could he be wrong in his philosophy of life? He sat at the table; the opened Bible lay before him. His eyes fell upon the words, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth . . ." then sleepily, heavily, he tried to fix his mind upon it. He read further, ". . . but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven. . . ." The book seemed to float away—the light vanished. Could this be death? The thought came quietly, irresistibly. He sank to the table and slipped into the blank unknown.

His life seemed to be returning to him after a blank interval, and Mr. Weightman found himself in a strange land traversing paths and meeting friendly groups clothed in white, among whom he recognized the old village doctor, a plain, hard-working, self-sacrificing man. Another one he recognized was a poor bookkeeper who had slaved through the years to care for a crippled daughter while the mother was in an institution for the insane. This also had been a life of sacrifice. He saw a widow who had labored long and with much sacrifice for her children; a schoolmaster who had devoted himself to the training of youth, and many others with joyful countenances and light steps—all these people seemed to be going to the Eternal City to possess their mansions.

As the stream of people came to the Holy City, a robed personage welcomed them. "Come in, your mansions are ready." One by one the individuals left the party and entered the mansions which were prepared for them. There was evidence of surprised joy, as though their buildings were lovelier than they had expected. From within came sweet voices of welcome, low laughter, and sweet songs.

The largest mansion and the most beautiful of them all was pointed out to the doctor as his, and John Weightman was left alone with the guide.

"Where do you wish to go?" asked the guide. And Weightman recounted his many charities, his gifts, and his endowments, and when the guide stopped before a rude hut, small as the shepherd's shelter, apparently made of discarded scraps and cast-off materials, the earth-man was shocked! Surely there must be a mistake! He renamed the many things he had done for schools and churches and hospitals, and the angel-guide said, "We have saved and used everything you sent to us—this is the mansion prepared for you. All the things you did on earth—many of them were good—but verily you have had your reward for them. Would you be paid twice? The good you accomplished in the world counted where you counted it, but it does not belong here."

The deep, searching, flaming look of the guide seemed to strip John Weightman naked and withered him as he winced and cried brokenly, "Tell me, then, if my life has been of such little worth, how came I here at all?"

"Through the mercy of the King," it came softly.

"Then how have I earned it?" John asked.

"It was not earned—it was—given. Only that good which is done for the love of duty, only those plans in which the welfare of others is the master-thought, only those labors in which the sacrifice is greater than the reward, only those gifts in which the giver forgets himself. Was there nothing like that in your life?"

"Nothing," he sighed. "If so, they were few, and I have long ago forgotten them."

The guide smiled gently, "These are the things that the King never forgets; and because there were a few of them in your life, you have a little place here."

* * * * *

"John Weightman's numbness prickled into normalcy. Bodily weariness and lassitude weighted upon him, but he was calm, resolute, and light of heart. What had happened to him he knew not. But this he knew—great truths had been forced into his consciousness."

This man Weightman, like many of the moderns, forgot the admonition of the Lord when he said:

But when thou doest alms, let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth: That thine alms may be in secret: and thy Father which seeth in secret himself shall reward thee openly. (Matt. 6:3-4.)

They also forget that the Lord said:

And when thou prayest, thou shalt not be as the hypocrites are; for they love to pray standing in the synagogues and in the corners of the streets, that they may be seen of men. Verily I say unto you, They have their reward. (Matt. 6:5.)

They forget also that the Lord said again:

Moreover, when ye fast, be not, as the hypocrites, of a sad countenance: for they disfigure their faces, that they may appear unto men to fast. Verily I say unto you, They have their reward. (Ibid., 6:16.)

GRATITUDE FOR UNSELFISHNESS

I am grateful that all through this great Church there are many people who live unselfishly, who pray in the quiet of their homes, who are far more interested in paying their tithes, of which no one knows except their bishop, than they are to pay large contributions which may be heralded far and wide. I am grateful that there are numerous people in this Church who go quietly week after week to attend their meetings; worship the Lord in their assemblies; bear testimony in their fast meetings; serve faithfully as ward teachers, stake missionaries, or in the auxiliaries or priesthood quorums without glamor, without praise, without public notice.

God bless us, brothers and sisters, that we may "seek first the kingdom," that we may forget all else, and that we may project ourselves out of ourselves into the great world of service to our fellow men, realizing that after all, the two great commandments which the Lord gave to us did this very thing. He did not mention ourselves, he mentioned others. He said,

. . . thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength; . . . love thy neighbor as thyself. (Mark 12:30-31.)

All of this is service to others—love of others, not love of nor service to ourselves. May the Lord bless us that we may be unselfish in this kingdom, give of ourselves generously that we may live by the spirit rather than by the letter, that we may continue to rear large families, training them in righteousness to the end. And all this I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The congregation arose and sang the hymn, "Come, O Thou King of Kings."

ELDER OSCAR A. KIRKHAM

Of the First Council of Seventy

I sincerely pray that I may enjoy the blessings of the Lord as I speak to you.

GEORGE Q. MORRIS

For years I labored at the side of Brother George Q. Morris, the absent member of the newly sustained brethren, Assistants to the Twelve. He truly is a noble man, a devoted man.

I would like to pay a tribute to Brother Morris. Some time ago I visited a university in the South. In the great rotunda of that university was the statue of a man, but at the base of it no name was carved. All that was said was, "A Southern Gentleman," and on the wall on a bronze plaque were these words: "Robert E. Lee, on leaving the battlefield lighted from his horse and gave help to a Union soldier." I think of George Q. Morris as a Latter-day Saint gentleman, one of the very finest men that I have ever met. Thank God for the contribution of his fineness, his sturdy testimony, and his helpfulness.

In the Thirteenth Article of Faith we find, "If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things." Where you find truth, there you find part of Mormonism; we seek after it.

WORLD JAMBOREE OF BOY SCOUTS

I am humbly grateful for a great privilege that came to me during this last summer, when the First Presidency of the Church allowed me to fill an assignment and sustained me in it with their blessing. I attended the World Jamboree of Boy Scouts. I want to say a few words about it, for I sincerely feel that it has in it hope; it has in it great purpose.

Seventeen thousand youth of the world came to camp at Bad Ischl, Osterreich, far away in a lovely valley in the heart of the Austrian mountains. They came from forty-seven nations of the world—seventeen thousand of them. It was truly a world gathering of youth.

Men are looking everywhere—serious and thoughtful men—to see if there isn't something positive to tie to, and as has been the history of youth through the ages, men of great responsibility have always looked to them for help. Yes, I love to think that it was a twelve-year-old boy who was in the temple, challenging the wise men. I love to think that it was a boy, kneeling at the sacred Grove, whom God heard and through whom he brought in this dispensation of his glorious gospel.

It was wonderful to see these chaps come from all over the world with their color, their enthusiasm, their desire to meet their fellows from everywhere. The leadership of this gathering had put into it very serious purpose. They tried to fasten the ideals that they wanted to establish around three great words—friendship, brotherhood, spirituality.

FRIENDSHIP AND BROTHERHOOD

For an expression of friendship Austria lighted on seven of her highest peaks fires of friendship. No meals were eaten without boys of other lands being present. Somewhere in the group at their campfires were lads that had been invited from other countries.

When the closing exercises of this great gathering of youth came, we were invited not to go with our own but to find a new friend. That night I took to the campfire a dark-skinned man from Pakistan and a man from Denmark. We watched the dying embers of a great campfire fade away, then from a high tower we heard a voice saying, "Soon you will be back to your homes again. Do not forget you have made new friends; you have found new brothers."

Then, when bands were playing, and finally when prayers were offered, out from that high tower there flew four hundred homing pigeons, and all of them circled the tower and then flew back again to their homelands. Austria tried to say, "So you must go back with love in your heart from this camp to those dear to you, and may God help you to take the message to all of friendship, brotherhood, and spirituality."

SPIRITUALITY

Spirituality came in the great religious services of the churches of the world. The cardinal of Vienna came and gave mass to thousands of boys. The archbishop of Austria came and gave his blessing to Protestant boys. A Jewish rabbi from Jerusalem stimulated the hearts of the children of Israel. These boys had, just a few days prior, been to a sacred spot where sixty thousand Jews had been killed during the recent war.

LATTER-DAY SAINT GATHERING

May I humbly say that the small band of Latter-day Saint youth and friends rallied, after these larger gatherings to a quiet spot in the forest. We heard the story from two Vienna mothers who said, "When you get home, tell your brothers that we are so grateful they brought us the gospel of Jesus Christ, for when the trials were very difficult, then the gospel gave us strength." These mothers lived only a few miles away from the Iron Curtain. A brother from West Germany said, "We are building twelve new meetinghouses. Do not forget us in your prayers. We have not lost our faith." A new building place for a Latter-day Saint chapel has been purchased near Vienna in the American quarters.

A man one day said to me, on the ship going over, "Kirkham, I want to know something. Today, I was deeply impressed. I saw two of your boys kneeling when you had your sacrament service, and they blessed the sacrament, and asked the Lord, as they renewed their covenants, to help them to keep his commandments. Won't you sit down and tell me more about this? These youth have definitely stimulated me."

A thousand doors are open. Brethren and sisters, everywhere the world is hungry for the word of God. The call has gone forth. Rally to that call. I love the testimony of Heber C. Kimball. When the Prophet went down the aisle in the Kirtland Temple and said to him, "Heber, the Lord wants you to open up the mission in England," he replied: "Oh, but my tongue is stammering. My family is in want." But he went, and fifteen hundred were baptized in the first eight months by Heber C. Kimball.

Brethren and sisters, in all humility, and with a deep prayer in my heart because of this lovely experience, I know the world is now awaiting the word of God—Answer the call.

God be with us as we bring this glorious message to the children of the earth, that the blessings we enjoy may be theirs also, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER ALMA SONNE

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve

My brethren and sisters, something over a year ago when Sister Sonne and I boarded the great ocean liner to return to our homes from Europe, the news was flashed to the passengers that Harry Lauder, the Scotch comedian, had just died. We read in the paper the next day something about Mr. Lauder. I recall now that he lost his only son in the Battle of the Marne in World War I.

Lauder was heartbroken. He was inconsolable, and he grieved much. After a week or two he received word from the military authorities that he might visit the graveside of his boy, buried over in France. Thereupon, with some of his friends, Harry Lauder crossed the channel and went to the cemetery where his son lay buried beneath the sod of France.

The little group with Mr. Lauder stood around the graveside. Someone in the group said in a whisper, "I wonder if God weeps when such laddies fall?"

Harry Lauder stepped forward. He looked down at the grave of his boy and said to those assembled there, "When a man has been struck as I have, there are three roads open to him. One road leads to depravity and drink. Another road leads to despair and suicide. A third road leads to God. I am determined at this moment to take the road that leads to God."

He forgot all about his commercial engagements; and he volunteered his services to the British and American armies and began to sing his Scotch melodies and to tell his stories to the British and American soldiers.

UNSELFISH SERVICE

After all, brethren and sisters, how do we find God except in the service of our fellow men? I know from actual experience and observation that the leaders of this Church are unselfish in their service and in their devotion. I was greatly impressed this morning when they announced the additions to the General Authorities of the Church.

For more than ten years now I have leaned heavily upon my friend and associate, Marion G. Romney. As a result I have come to love him and to depend upon him, and when I went over to Europe, it was Brother Romney with whom I had correspondence relative to the distribution of welfare supplies in the countries across the sea, and together he and I and others have sat in council many times.

I thought of these men who have been called to be Assistants to the Quorum. I knew President George Q. Morris for many years when he led the great M.I.A. movement. He used to come to our stake when my chief responsibility was with that organization. I met Brother Stayner Richards forty years ago, in Newcastle, England, where he was serving as a missionary.

I have also met the other brethren: Brother ElRay L. Christiansen lives in my home town, the place I call home, and the place I visit occasionally as opportunity permits. I know something about his work in the Logan Temple and in the East Cache Stake of Zion. I can truthfully say he is a man of God.

I have visited the stakes of Zion with Brother John Longden. I have heard him preach the gospel, and I have heard him sing the gospel, as he can do. Brethren and sisters, the Church is growing and expanding. It has never gone forward at a more rapid pace than it is at this moment.

The barriers which were raised against it at one time are crumbling, and we are permitted to preach the gospel in the lands of the free.

A GREAT CHURCH

Just before leaving London, I attended a district conference. At the close of the morning session, a man who had been sitting in the audience came to the front. In a loud tone of voice, so everyone could hear, he said, "I resent the audacity of your claims," and he followed it up with these words: "You refer to yourselves as a great church. It isn't great," he said. "You have only a membership of a million. I belong to a church that has a membership of two hundred and fifty million."

Then a young man stepped forward. He was a missionary of the Church in the British Mission. Calmly he stepped up to the man and said, "Well, from a standpoint of numbers yours is a great church, perhaps the greatest church amongst all Christian denominations. But," he said, "I recall that at one time the primitive Church which was established by the Lord Jesus and the Twelve Apostles was but a small group. The Savior entrusted his gospel message to a very few people, most of them unlearned but very humble."

Then the young elder continued, "That primitive Church, though small in numbers, was nevertheless a great Church. It was great in its missionary endeavor. It was great in its calling to preach the gospel to the civilized world of that day. There is something in a church that makes it great besides its numbers."

WORK TO GO FORWARD

I frequently think of that circumstance. God's work will go forward in the earth. I am sure it will never be weaker than it is today. It will grow in strength and in influence until this gospel of the kingdom has been preached as a witness in all the world, and until every knee shall bow and every tongue confess that Jesus is the Christ.

May we, you and I, assist in this great enterprise, and may we work out our salvation in fear before our Heavenly Father, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER GERMAN E. ELLSWORTH

Former President of the Northern California Mission

My Brethren and Sisters, it is certainly a high honor to be called to occupy this pulpit, and I pray God, my Father, that he will grant me utterance while I bear my testimony to the truth of the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

Three years ago in President Clark's office, he said to me, "President Ellsworth, when a car has gone 77,000 miles, the bottom may drop out anytime. You slow down."

Facetiously, I said, "President Clark, I'm not as old as you are."

Then he said, "Well, what is the difference?"

I said, "Six weeks." (Laughter)

I went back to the mission determined to build another eight or ten meeting houses, that they might be rallying spots where hundreds of the sons and grandsons of the Church who have wandered away without anchor from the Church, might meet. When President Clark set me apart ten years ago he especially blessed me that I might have power to gather up the lost sheep of the Church. People who had moved and settled in the northern part of California without regard to any organization of the Church.

In and around San Francisco there was a feeling among the people that they were going to move away from the Coast because of the impending war, but when we established the mission house in San Francisco, they seemed to settle down and accept the situation as a place of safety. In looking over the mission we found not more than 3500 people who had any affiliation with the Church. When we left the mission seven and a half years later, it had grown to approximately ten thousand. Branches that had been branches for years and years had no home of their own in which to worship.

In Klamath Falls, Oregon, 75 to 100 people were meeting in the basement of the city library. I asked the president of the branch, "How long have you been meeting in this basement?" He said, "Eleven years."

I said, "Eleven years too long," and placed another man in charge of the branch with a commission to build a house.

Even though the war was on they procured material by wrecking an old lumber drying building, and built a beautiful meeting house. From a letter received yesterday, they have now 800 members in that branch. I never saw more than 75 to 100 before they had a chapel of their own.

The Santa Rosa Branch, 50 miles north of San Francisco, had been a branch for 40 years, with attendance of 75 to 100 at our conferences in old lodge halls. Now, after three or four years in their own building it is the center of a stake, with four or five hundred members in the ward.

That was true all over the mission. We built 12 new chapels, remodeled seven others and procured building lots in 13 other branches. The Lord blessed us. We gave all we had, and unquestionably a little more because of my present nervous condition.

The last two years we have been fighting to get back, and I praise the Lord that we have gotten nearly all the way back.

Fifty-five years ago I sat in a boat in San Diego Harbor with President Wilford Woodruff. I was on my first mission in California, and at that time the mission president was delivering a beautiful sermon on the head and horns of Daniel. I was a new missionary and it worried me, so I said to President Woodruff, by whose side I was sitting in the boat, "President Woodruff, how about the head and horns of Daniel?"

He turned and put his arm around me, patted me on the shoulder and said, "Brother Ellsworth, you have a long missionary life ahead of you, and if you will stay as far away from the head and horns as you can you will never get hooked." The mysteries of the head and horns have never bothered me from that day.

I remember that when I first got a call to go on a mission, I was laying plans to go to medical college. It was quite a difficult decision. It took all my hard-earned money to fill my first mission.

On that mission things changed in my life. I found God. With my eyes opened, the Lord blessed me with miracle after miracle.

In thinking back over the miracles today, having labored with nearly 2500 young men and women in the mission field, the greatest miracle of my life is the transformation that comes into the lives of young men and women under the power and influence of the Spirit of God. Truly it is a miracle for something to touch the hearts of young men and young women as the Gospel does.

Going back in my life I can remember the impression made upon me in the Aaronic Priesthood, where we used to sing, "Come all ye sons of God who have received the priesthood;" "Ye who are called to labor in the ministry for God;" "You are the true born sons of Zion, who with them none can compare;" "You are the royal seed of Joseph, the bright and the glorious morning star." Throughout my life I have tried to impress upon the young men and young women with whom we have associated to remember who they are, that no people in all the world know who they are like the Latter-day Saints. The patriarchs of the Church have pointed it out to everyone who has solicited a blessing from them, that they were reserved in Heaven to come to earth at this particular time, when the gospel was in the earth that they had a special mission as sons of God to help establish his kingdom in the earth.

It was hard to go on my second mission. In fact we moved away from Salt Lake County because the then stake president, O. P. Miller, had us out nearly every night on some work for the Church.

One night when I came home my wife said, half-disgustedly, "If we do not move away from here you will be fulfilling your prophecy, and I will be a missionary widow in less than five years." The statement was made to her the day before we were married. So we moved from Salt Lake County to Lehi, Utah County in June. In February following I attended a conference in American Fork.

At the close of the meeting the stake president called me up and introduced me to Mathias F. Cowley, who said, "Brother Ellsworth, while I was talking I felt like you were wanted in the Northern States on a mission. Will you go if you are called?"

I said, "Brother Cowley, I have been home only a little over four years."

He said, "I don't care if you have been home only four weeks. You are wanted in the Northern States on a mission."

The bishop, who was a close associate of President Joseph F. Smith, said, "Brother Ellsworth, it is a financial tragedy for you to go on a mission. I have fifty men in this ward, who can go more easily than you. I am with President Joseph F. Smith almost every day, and one word from me and you won't have to go."

I said, "Bishop, don't you say it. I do not have anything, but all I have is on the altar."

When I met President Joseph F. Smith I told him of my desire to be a medical man. He looked me straight in the eye, and said, "Brother Ellsworth, your life is in the ministry. You go on this mission and be a doctor of souls."

Saturday, October 6Second Day

A year later I was called by telegram to preside over the mission of six states and part of Canada and 170 missionaries.

My predecessor had been getting three or four hundred dollars a quarter to help carry the expenses of the mission and pay return fares of missionaries. Sister Ellsworth and I made a pledge that we would try to carry the mission without any help from Salt Lake City, and I think we hurt ourselves in trying to do so, especially in a crowded mission home and the many long over night trips in poor railroad chair cars. It was a strenuous job but the Lord was good to us and we were grateful for the opportunity of serving him as well as being near where my people first joined the Church.

My grandfather, German Ellsworth, was buried in the Salt Lake Cemetery a hundred and two years ago, leaving my father, six weeks old and a mother with six children older than himself. All we knew of the Ellsworth genealogy was from the Salt Lake Cemetery record, that German, the son of I. Ellsworth was from Michigan.

We became interested in genealogy, my wife doing the work, like she has done most of the work in rearing our children in my absence, because year after year, if I was in Chicago one or two Sundays a year, that was about all.

With the assistance of a genealogist interested in the Ellsworth name Sister Ellsworth gathered approximately 1500 Ellsworth family names. Later after we were released, she went to England and returned with more than 1000 Ellsworth names as well as a checkup on three or four thousand of her parents' line. The temple work for both the Ellsworth line and the Jesse Smith line including 600 of my mother's Swedish line has been largely completed. We are truly grateful to the Lord for his wonderful blessings and in shaping our lives so that we could do all this work.

In the Northern California Mission we enjoyed ourselves greatly. The work was rather heavy, and we were just a little bit old; too old for government work. Sister Ellsworth had two terrible experiences with cancer, one cured by operation and the other through administration. In 1947 she had a stroke in her right side and a few weeks ago one in her left leg. Today we are continuing our work, in gathering up lost ends of our genealogical Ellsworth and Smith lines for work in the temple.

God has been wonderfully kind to us. My wife has reared a wonderful family. Six children were born to us while we were in Chicago. Three of them died, but we have six living, and all six of them have had college work, five of them have filled missions. All married in the temple, and all are working in the Church today, largely due to the counsel and love given by a wonderful mother.

Today the Brethren here praise their wives, and I think they are justly entitled to it, for the Lord said to Sister Ellsworth, through the interpretation of tongues, one time in a meeting in Lehi, "I the Lord love the women of Zion above all other women in the earth for their willingness to bear the sons and daughters of men, and when they have finished their missions here upon the earth they will be twice blessed, and crowned in my kingdom above all other women."

I thank God for the women of Zion, and for the wonderful mothers that have helped to build this Church in the earth.

Brethren and sisters, "We are the true born sons of Zion, who with us can compare? The royal seed of Joseph, the bright and glorious morning star," and the development and teaching of the sons and daughters of Zion as put out by President Clark depends largely upon the women.

John Henry Smith's wife one time said to us in the mission field that she had had a great ambition to keep her children close to the Lord. She said, "Why, if any of them fails, people will say, 'See who her mother was—just Sarah Farr.' If they amount to anything they are John Henry Smith's children."

Well, I think if our sons and grandsons amount to anything it will be because of the powerful example and powerful teachings and the deep spirituality of my wife Mary Smith Ellsworth.

God bless the Latter-day Saints and help us keep our children close to us. Had we been able to do this—keep our children close—there would now be no Adult Aaronic Priesthood—we would not necessarily need converts from the world in order to build the Kingdom of God.

All our sons and daughters were happy when the time came that they could go to the temple. Our eldest daughter at sixteen took her endowments. She went through college. She suffered at times some little inconveniences, but she thanks God today for the sobering influence that came into her life through the holy temple covenants and obligations. President Joseph F. Smith told me one time that the greatest power and influence that ever came into his life was his temple endowments at a very early age. President John Henry Smith and President Francis M. Lyman both bore testimony to me of what their early endowments meant in their lives.

Brethren and sisters, the Gospel of Jesus Christ is absolutely true. Its foundation was laid by God our Father. We are his sons and daughters, and upon our shoulders rests the responsibility of carrying the message of the restored gospel to the ends of the earth. May God help us to do it I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

President David O. McKay:

German E. Ellsworth, veteran missionary of the Church, has just spoken to us.

The congregation will now sing: "God Be With You Till We Meet Again," conducted by Richard P. Condie.

The closing prayer will be offered by Elder A. R. Curtis, Patriarch to the Highland Stake, after which this conference will stand adjourned until seven o'clock this evening, at which time the general meeting of the Priesthood of the Church will be held. Only those holding the priesthood are invited to be present. That session will not be broadcast.

The Church of the Air broadcast on which Elder Matthew Cowley of the Council of the Twelve will be the speaker will begin at eight o'clock tomorrow morning. Those desiring to attend this broadcast must be in their seats at 7:50 a.m. The Tabernacle Choir broadcast will be given from nine to nine-thirty tomorrow morning. Those desiring to attend this broadcast must be in their seats by 8:50 a.m., ten minutes to nine.

The regular session of the conference will begin at ten o'clock tomorrow morning.

At the conclusion of this meeting, after singing and benediction, the general sessions of the conference will be adjourned until ten o'clock Sunday morning for the general public.

We will now sing: "God Be With You 'Till We Meet Again."

---

The congregation sang the hymn, "God Be With You 'Till We Meet Again."

President David O. McKay:

I am reminded that there will be overflow meetings this night (Priesthood meeting) in the Assembly Hall and Barratt Hall. At both places, we are informed, there will be television.

A. R. Curtis, Patriarch to the Highland Stake, will now offer the benediction.

---

Elder A. R. Curtis, Patriarch to the Highland Stake, offered the benediction.

Conference adjourned until 10:00 Sunday morning.

THIRD DAY

CHURCH OF THE AIR

The Church of the Air broadcast was presented Sunday morning, October 7, from 8:00 to 8:30 over radio station KSL and the Columbia Broadcasting System, with Elder Matthew Cowley as the speaker. The following is a report of this broadcast:

The Tabernacle Choir, under the leadership of J. Spencer Cornwall, furnished the music for this service. Frank W. Asper was at the Organ. Richard L. Evans was the announcer.

Announcer: The Church of the Air is presented by the CBS Radio Network so that men of different faiths may speak to a nationwide organization. Today's program, presented in conjunction with the Semi-annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints comes to you from the Tabernacle on Temple Square, through the facilities of Station KSL in Salt Lake City. The speaker will be Matthew Cowley of the Council of the Twelve Apostles of the Church. Music is provided by the Tabernacle Choir under the direction of J. Spencer Cornwall. Frank Asper is at the organ.

The Choir opens with a harvest hymn: "Come, Ye Thankful People, Come," followed by Ebenezer Beesley's music with the words of Charles W. Penrose: "God of our Fathers we come unto Thee, Children of those whom Thy truth has made free. Grant us the joy of Thy Presence today, never from thee let us stray."

(The Choir sang: "Come, Ye Thankful People"—Elvey)

(The Choir sang: "God of Our Fathers"—Beesley)

Announcer: We shall hear on this Church of the Air service, Matthew Cowley of the Council of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Matthew Cowley was a lawyer by profession before he came to his present church position. He has titled today's talk with a scriptural text: "Man Shall Not Live By Bread Alone."

ELDER MATTHEW COWLEY

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

The matter we discuss briefly this Sabbath morning I trust shall not be considered as too far removed from practical application to command your interest. The subject of this discussion was suggested by an episode in the early ministry of our Lord, and the title is taken from the memorable words addressed to His adversary on that occasion.

"MAN SHALL NOT LIVE BY BREAD ALONE"

It will be recalled that soon after His baptism by John in the waters of Jordan, Jesus retired into the wilderness where He sought communion with His Father. During this period of voluntary seclusion He engaged Himself in prayer and fasting. At the end of forty days, during which His body had been without bread or other physical sustenance, the tempter appeared and challenged Him to exercise His Divine Power to provide food for His famished body, with these words, "If thou be the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread." (Matthew 4:3.)

Suffering though He was from extreme physical weakness induced by prolonged hunger, the Master quickly discerned the treachery behind the tempting suggestion and the danger of providing bread on the terms proposed. Knowing that the strategy of the tempter's challenge would mean the provision of physical sustenance alone, to the exclusion of spiritual requirements, Jesus immediately replied, "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." (Matthew 4:4.)

During forty long days he had been constantly aware that not only does the body of man need bread, but that the spirit of man needs God. Even without bread during an extended fast, communion with God sustained the Son of God though He suffered the throes of hunger like unto a son of man.

WORTH OF THE SOUL

Later in His ministry Christ was to remind His disciples that the soul of man was worth more than bread, more even than the wealth of the world. He said to them, "For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" (Matthew 16:26.)

A man's soul is too exorbitant a price to pay for bread alone, even if the whole world is his loaf.

A man's worldly wealth may determine his social standing, which side of the tracks he will live on, which school his children will attend, which golf club he will belong to, the horsepower of his car, and which pew he will occupy in his church; but it is not the sole determining factor as to the fulness of his life. That is determined not by his material possessions, nor by his lack of them, but by his living by the words that proceed out of the mouth of God.

The supreme joy of living cannot be measured by a man's financial rating. It can be measured only by his willingness to accept a divine influence as the controlling force in his life. Neither the millionaire nor the pauper can live by bread alone, but both can live and enjoy living to the fullest degree if they will accept the spiritual influences that sustain the soul of man.

HAPPINESS IN WORD OF GOD

In unfurnished thatch-roofed huts in the South Seas I have witnessed greater peace of mind, more happiness and contentment, enjoyed by simple natives than exists in too many of the luxuriously appointed mansions of the rich.

In the humble native hut man is not existing by bread alone. The words of God play a great part in the program of his living. Each day is commenced by invoking the blessings of heaven upon himself and his family, and at the close of each day prayers of gratitude are offered for blessings received.

His profound knowledge of sacred books, which may be the only literature translated into his native tongue, is his most prized possession. The great value he places upon divinely inspired literature may be appreciated when one hears him say these words about his European brother: "When the white man came to these islands we had the land and he had the Bible. Now after a hundred years he has the land and we have the Bible, and we are still richer than he." His bread gives sustenance to his physical being only. The words of God give life to his soul.

GOLD WITHOUT GOD

On the other hand, in the homes where there is an abundance of the material things that gold will provide and where divine principles are rejected—where man is striving to live by bread alone—there may be an excessive gratification of physical appetites, but there cannot be a fullness of living.

There is deep damnation in the possession of gold without God.

The sorrow, the fear, the frustration and confusion which beset men all about us may be traced to an impulse, which is not restrained, to live by bread alone. Disruption of family ties, moral degeneration, addiction to the use of stimulants and narcotics, dishonesty in dealing with one's fellow men, and all other manner of crimes and vice are the natural concomitants to a bread-alone diet.

If living is not tempered by the divine will, man is not prepared to face unexpected losses of wealth and other forms of adversity. He finds it impossible to step down from living with the Joneses, and his life becomes of so little value that he takes it by his own hand. I need not remind you of the high incidence of suicide which cuts down the lives of men of financial means who thought they could live by bread alone. They simply cannot make the adjustment when the rations are reduced. Neither need I call to your attention the unethical, immoral, illegal and gangster methods which have recently been exposed by investigating committees, as the means whereby men in both high and low places give their souls in exchange for the goods of the world. Even their country's soul is considered not to be too high a price to pay.

NATIONAL SPIRITUAL NEEDS

If the individual cannot live by bread alone, neither can the nation. This great country owes its birth and preservation to men who were guided by spiritual values. The Pilgrim fathers who first set foot upon the rugged shores of New England and the great pioneers who conquered the mountains and deserts from the Atlantic to the Pacific were men of God. They survived the hunger and hardships incident to colonizing and pioneering because they were motivated by a quest for God rather than by a lust for gold.

They penetrated the forests and pushed on to forbidding waste lands with confidence that with the help of God they would live, and that without His help they would perish. They broke the scorched earth, turned the virgin soil, planted their crops and then called upon God to bring forth the harvest. They lived by His words and He provided them with sustenance.

LESSONS OF HISTORY

History records the decline and fall of great nations and empires, both ancient and modern, which have rejected God and denied man the right to live in accordance with His divine will.

The institutions of our own nation, which were founded by men who invoked divine aid, may be lost to future generations if the lessons of history are ignored. If God loses control in the affairs of this great nation, the decline and decay of its structure of freedom and liberty will surely follow. The loss of its soul will be inevitable because ours is a nation which cannot survive on material values alone.

To say that "it can't happen here" is to disregard the destructive forces of evil that are abroad in the land. If credence can be given to recent reports, then never before has the underworld wielded the influence that it does today. Its tentacles are reaching into the vitals of society on every level, into business institutions both large and small, and into both local and federal governments. The complacent attitude of decent people toward these diabolical practices indicates an almost universal rejection of God as the sustaining force in the lives of men.

LINCOLN'S PROCLAMATION

At another time in the Nation's history when men were trying to live by bread alone and were forgetting God, Abraham Lincoln issued a timely proclamation which reads as follows:

"And whereas it is the duty of nations as well as of men, to own their dependence upon the overruling power of God, to confess their sins and transgressions, in humble sorrow, yet with assured hope that genuine repentance will lead to mercy and pardon; and to recognize the sublime truth, announced in the holy scriptures and proven by all history, that those nations only are blessed whose God is the Lord.

"And, insomuch as we know that by His divine law nations, like individuals, are subjected to punishments and chastisements in this world, may we not justly fear that the awful calamity of war which now desolates the land may be but a punishment inflicted upon us for our presumptuous sins, to the needful end of our national reformation of a whole people? We have been the recipients of the choicest bounties of heaven; we have grown in numbers, wealth, and power as no other nation has ever grown. But we have forgotten God. We have forgotten the gracious hand which preserved us in peace and multiplied and enriched and strengthened us, and we have vainly imagined, in the deceitfulness of our hearts, that all these blessings were produced by some superior wisdom and virtue of our own. Intoxicated with unbroken success, we have become too self-sufficient to feel the necessity of redeeming and preserving grace, too proud to pray to the God that made us."

PRESENT SPIRITUAL NEEDS

This proclamation, which was timely in Lincoln's day, is certainly not untimely in our own. How well he himself knew the futility of trying to live by bread alone. Often in his own life, as he was wont to say, "I went to my knees because I had nowhere else to go." In his darkest hours he sought the sustaining influence which comes from God.

Is it out of order to assert that we need that divine influence and regenerating force in this day just as the nation did in Lincoln's time? Are we not passing through times more perilous than the darkest days of the Civil War?

Our nation is spending billions for defense against enemies beyond our borders yet, may I ask, what have we to defend if enemies within our borders are permitted to stalk abroad in the land and destroy our faith in God and induce us to live by bread alone? Is it not time that we all, like Lincoln, go to our knees and ask God to implement our armaments with His power and to give us the will to stem the tide which is carrying men to Caesar and turning them from God?

ORIGIN OF AMERICAN SYSTEM

An editor of Fortune Magazine, writing in the issue of January, 1940, had this to say, and I quote only in part:

"By no conceivable set of circumstances could materialism have produced the great 'solution' of the Eighteenth Century that we have come to know as the American System. The American System has its origin, on the one hand, in passionate religious sects who believed in the spiritual absolutes that today are lacking; and on the other hand in those rationalists of the Golden Age of the American colonies for whom reason was not merely mechanistic but divine. Similarly, by no conceivable set of circumstances, will it be possible to solve by materialism the titanic problems, domestic and international, with which humanity is faced today. The ultimate answers to the questions that humanity raises are not, and never have been, in the flesh."

In seeking a solution to our present difficulties, he concludes:

"The way out is the sound of a voice, not our voice, but a voice coming from something not ourselves, in the existence of which we cannot disbelieve. . . . Without it we are no more capable of saving the world than we were capable of creating it in the first place."

THE WORD OF GOD

If man in his seeking for the word of God does not find it, it is not because God has withdrawn from man, but because man has withdrawn from God. I bear testimony that he has not left us without direction. Both in times of old and in our generation His voice has declared the way. To survive the ills that beset us on every hand let us lift up our eyes and lend listening ears to Him who said, "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

Selection by the Choir—"Guide Us, O Thou Great Jehovah"—Hughes.

The Choir then sang: "Turn Thee to the Lord Thy God," an excerpt from Gallia by Charles Gounod.

CHOIR AND ORGAN BROADCAST

The following broadcast, written and announced by Richard L. Evans, and originating with Station KSL, Salt Lake City, was presented from 9:00 to 9:30 a.m., through the courtesy and facilities of the Columbia Broadcasting System's network, throughout the United States. This broadcast was as follows:

(Organ played "As the Dew," and on signal the Choir and Organ broke into "Gently Raise the Sacred Strain," singing words to end of second line and humming to end of verse for announcer's background.)

Announcer: Once more we welcome you within these walls with music and the spoken word from the Crossroads of the West.

The CBS and its affiliated stations bring you at this hour another presentation from Temple Square in Salt Lake City, with J. Spencer Cornwall conducting the Tabernacle Choir, Frank Asper, Tabernacle Organist, and the spoken word by Richard Evans.

We first hear the choir recall a cherished 12th century melody as arranged by F. Melius Christiansen: "Beautiful Savior! Lord of the nations! Son of God and Son of Man! Glory and honor, Praise, adoration, Now and forevermore be Thine."

(Choir sang: "Beautiful Savior"—arranged by Christiansen)

Announcer: Frank Asper, Tabernacle Organist, first presents from Temple Square today the quietly contemplative phrases of the "Communion in G" by Batiste—also sometimes titled "The Pilgrim's Song of Hope."

(Organ: "Communion in G"—Batiste)

Announcer: The Tabernacle Choir continues with the worshipful music of an old French melody as arranged by Gustav Holst, and with G. Moultrie's translation of the original Greek: "Let all mortal flesh keep silence, and with fear and trembling stand; . . . Christ our Lord to earth descendeth our full homage to demand. . . . Rank on rank the host of heaven spreads its vanguard on the way as the light of light descendeth from the realms of endless day, that the powers of hell may vanish as the darkness clears away."

(Choir: "Let All Mortal Flesh Keep Silence"—arr. Holst.)

THE SPOKEN WORD

It is a dramatic and terrifying fact that a man can do a thing right a thousand times, and then when he does it wrong just once, tragedy comes. Except for some very narrow escapes, perhaps any of us or even all of us could be numbered with those whom we pity or with those whom we condemn. And we may never know how narrowly we may have missed the fate of someone who has had a terrible tragedy. This thought is unforgetably expressed in the comment commonly credited to John Bradford, Chaplain to Edward VI of sixteenth century England. Seeing a condemned man marched off to his death, and knowing of the narrow margins by which men are often made and unmade, he exclaimed: "There, but for the grace of God goes John Bradford." Significantly he himself later met similar unfortunate fate. There is often only a very fine line between winning and losing. In a race the difference may be only the shaving of a second. In business, the difference may be only one wrong decision among a thousand right ones. In a contest, the difference may be only one judge. In an accident, the difference may be only one small mechanical mishap or one small error of judgment. In so many things we do in life, there is an exceedingly thin line between safety and sorrow. We ourselves may not see it at the moment. But often others see it, and are frightened for us. And afterwards we are frightened for ourselves. This is one reason why parents are so often afraid for children. Parents have the experience and perspective to see how fine the line can be between safety and sorrow, between success and failure. The differences in cause may sometimes seem inconsequential, but the differences in result may be eternally great. And we should have compassion for the man who has met misfortune, for the man who has made a mistake, for the man who narrowly missed being what he might have been—and we should never forget that "there but for the grace of God" am I. And the thought should help to keep us humble and help to keep us holding hard and fast to the right side of every decision, and to the right side of every road.

Announcer: With words from the scriptures and music from the "Toccata in F" as arranged by Guy Chamber Filkins from "Widor's 5th Symphony," we have heard an Alleluia—"Alleluia Sing unto the Lord—Sing praise unto our God—His Name is high above all things in earth and Heav'n, . . . Praise to the Lord my soul, Sing Alleluia."

Sunday, October 7

Third Day

(Choir: "Alleluia"—Toccata in F—Widor's 5th Symphony)

(Organ: "Softly Beams the Sacred Dawning"—George Careless)

Announcer: With Frank Asper at the organ we have heard a hymn tune by George Careless: "Softly Beams the sacred Dawning of the great Millennial morn, and to Saints gives welcome warning that the day is hasting on."

The Choir closes this day from Temple Square with an excerpt from the "Holy City" by A. R. Gaul: "Great and Marvellous are thy works, Lord God; just and true are Thy ways."

(Choir: "Great and Marvellous"—Gaul)

Announcer: Once more we leave you within the shadows of the everlasting hills. May peace be with you, this day—and always.

This concludes the eleven hundred and fifty-fifth presentation, continuing the 23rd year of this traditional broadcast from the Mormon Tabernacle on Temple Square, brought to you by CBS Radio, and originating with Radio Station KSL in Salt Lake City. . . ."

SUNDAY MORNING MEETING

Conference reconvened at 10:00 a.m.

The great Tabernacle was crowded to capacity long before the commencement of the Choir and Organ Broadcast, as were also the Assembly Hall, to the south of the Tabernacle, and Barratt Hall (60 North Main Street). In addition, great numbers of people assembled upon the Tabernacle grounds, where they listened, by means of amplifying equipment, to the services as they went forward in the Tabernacle and were broadcast.

President David O. McKay, who presided and conducted the services, called the meeting to order promptly at 10:00 o'clock.

President David O. McKay:

The fifth session of this general conference was not broadcast. It was a general Priesthood meeting held last evening in the Tabernacle, with overflow meetings in the Assembly Hall and the Barratt Hall. An estimated number of over 400 men were on the grounds who could not gain entrance to any of the buildings.

The speakers were Presiding Bishop LeGrand Richards and members of the First Presidency. The Men's Chorus of the Tabernacle Choir furnished the music. By count as nearly as could be obtained, there were 12,908 men assembled last evening, approximately 13,000 men of the Priesthood.

This is the sixth session, therefore, of the One Hundred Twenty-second Semi-annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City. These services will be broadcast in the Assembly Hall and Barratt Hall over a loud-speaking system, and by television. The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over Station KSL, and by arrangement through KSL over the stations named in the first session of the conference.

This session will also be televised over the KSL television station, channel 5.

The choir singing for this morning's session of the conference will be by the Tabernacle Choir, with J. Spencer Cornwall conducting, and Frank W. Asper at the organ.

We shall begin the services by the congregation and the Tabernacle Choir singing: "For the Strength of the Hills," conducted by Richard P. Condie, assistant Tabernacle Choir director.

The opening prayer will be offered by Elijah Allen, formerly president of the California Mission.

---

The Choir and congregation sang the hymn, "For the Strength of the Hills."

Elder Elijah Allen offered the opening prayer.

Following the prayer, the Tabernacle Choir sang: "Behold A Host."

PRESIDENT STEPHEN L RICHARDS

First Counselor in the First Presidency

*"Up, awake, ye defenders of Zion!
The foe's at the door of your homes;
Let each heart be the heart of a lion,
Ungielding and proud as he roams."*

These are the opening lines of a militant hymn by the late Charles W. Penrose, written on the occasion of a great threatening danger to the communities of the Latter-day Saints during their early establishment in the valleys of these mountains. The foe was an army, with a mission inimical to the liberties, the interests, and the aspirations of the people. This clarion call, which but echoed the proclamations of the leaders, electrified the people. "To a man" they responded to their various assignments. There is no record of any dissension. The defenders saved Zion.

CHALLENGING CALL

I believe, my brethren and sisters, in the Restored Church of our Lord, that it is within the proprieties and the urgent needs of the hour to issue another such challenging call today. I would not welcome the charge of "alarmist," but I would endure it if I thought such a militant call would arouse our people to a state of alarm over the ominous conditions which threaten us.

"The foe at the door of our homes" is not an army of marching men with military equipment, as it was nearly a hundred years ago. And the homes to be defended are not the houses in which we dwell.

The foe today is far less tangible and discernible. He is widely diffused and insidious. His methods are multiple, and it is much more difficult to prepare for defense, for the foe of the present-day attacks both within and without the Church.

If in the time allotted to me in this great conference, I can add anything, however small, to the admonitions of my brethren, which may serve to alert our people to dangers confronting them, I shall be extremely grateful to my Father in heaven.

ZION AND THE WORLD

I repeat, the foe of today assumes many forms. I think, however, they may be generally classified under the caption, "Aping the Ways of the World." I know of few more salutary things for a Latter-day Saint than constantly to bear in mind the distinction between Zion and the world. Both terms are somewhat confusing because they are used with varying meanings and applications. Both have geographical application, and both have theological and moral import.

For my purpose here today, I shall look upon Zion as being a condition and not a place, and the world likewise. "... verily, thus saith the Lord, let Zion rejoice, for this is Zion,—the pure in heart." (D. C. 97:21.)

There is no fence around Zion or the world, but to one of discernment, they are separated more completely than if each were surrounded with high unscalable walls. Their underlying concepts, philosophies, and purposes are at complete variance one with the other. The philosophy of the world is self-sufficient, egotistical, materialistic, and skeptical. The philosophy of Zion is humility, not servility, but a willing recognition of the sovereignty of God and dependence on his providence.

A PRINCIPLE OF STRENGTH

The critics of Zion mistake humility for weakness. In their ignorance or shortsightedness they have failed to observe that generally speaking, the humble of the earth have been its greatest benefactors, in science, in statesmanship, and in great movements for the elevation of humanity, foremost among all being the Author of humility, our Lord and Savior. It is sometimes difficult to comprehend how humility can be a principle of strength and power, and why the great victories of life have gone to the humble.

I think the explanation is this: The self-sufficient are not in a position to call to their aid the one greatest and most effective force in the world—the Spirit of God. The humble depend upon this power; it does not fail them. The battles for righteousness and liberty which is a divine endowment can always be won if those who wage the war are worthy of victory. This is the explanation and the lesson which, more than any other, the world needs today.

I feel hesitant to say it, but I am constrained to make the assertion, even though it may seem highly presumptuous to many who hear it, that the Restored Church of our Lord, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, is in better position, is more specifically charged with the responsibility, and has greater revealed knowledge than any other institution to teach to the world this one vital lesson it so sorely needs.

In making this statement I intend no disparagement of the righteous and pure in heart of the world. I have not time to try to define their relationship to the Zion of the kingdom. They will receive the Lord's compensation for their own goodness, and lasting gratitude for their contribution to the welfare of mankind.

We can effectively bring this lesson to the world only as we build up Zion and protect her from her foes. I propose to enumerate, with your indulgence, and I hope not offensively, some of the attacks which the subtle and insidious foe, coming from the world and its philosophy and practices, is making against Zion.

ATTACKS UPON THE HOME

I shall begin with the home, the most fundamental institution in our society. The foe is attacking our divinely-given concept that marriage is an eternal compact between a priest and a priestess of the Most High, charged with the sacred mission of bringing children into the world, and then guiding them safely back into the presence of God, whence their spirits came. President Clark gave us a most illuminating and impressive discourse on that subject yesterday. The fulfilment of this mission involves sacrifice. The ever-growing practice of the world would eliminate that sacrifice.

It would emancipate women (I think that is what they call it). It wouldn't have them stay home as much as they have in the past. It would have them better educated in general culture and in civic responsibilities, which sounds very good and seems highly desirable, except for one serious flaw in the program.

This worldly practice in many instances takes a woman out of her home so much of the time, and absorbs her attention to such an extent, that she cannot and does not give to her family the loving, patient, intelligent care which they so much deserve and need. There are mothers whose club work has ostensibly been devoted to social improvement, whose very offspring have been the problems of the society they seek to serve.

There are other more frivolous distractions drawing mothers away from their homes. These are justified by the allegation that mothers need more relaxation and more freedom from the responsibilities of home. We grant that such allegations must be true with women who have never discovered the art of happy, contented living in their homes and with their families. In Zion we say to mothers, it's true, you need some diversion. Even though you love your home life, a respite from your work and cares is desirable.

The Church presents many opportunities for your service in social, educational, charitable, missionary, and recreational fields. You will find more lasting happiness and satisfaction in a Relief Society meeting than in a bridge club; and generally speaking, your social diversions had better be had in company with your husband. The world is making butterflies out of women and a prison out of home.

CURTAILMENT OF FAMILIES

Perhaps the most serious aspect of this attack of the foe being made on our homes is in the arbitrary curtailment of the size of families. The proponents of this worldly doctrine grow bolder and bolder every year. They claim support from mathematical prognostications as to the increasing demands of populations, and the limited supply of the earth's sustenance. They claim improvement of the race by its limitation. They have been making these claims for many years, and they have won many adherents to their cause, especially among the so-called intelligentsia of the world.

For the most part the world has been under the leadership of this birth-restricting intelligentsia for many years. And where are we? We have more physical comfort, more education perhaps. Do we have better government? Are we making more progress in developing the Christian virtues among men? Do we have more brotherhood, peace, and unselfishness?

I doubt if there exists in all the world any place or institution comparable to a big family for the inculcation of the principle of unselfishness and mutual consideration, the high qualities of character so indispensable in the solution of the world's problems. I know there are bad big families and bad small families; but take it by and large, I would assume that there is a thousand percent better chance of a great leader in a good cause coming from a family of ten than from a family of one.

Now, if I am not careful, I will be debating this issue. I don't want to do this, first, because I am sure I am not fortified with all the arguments, and I might get bested, depending on who the judges are; and second, because we of Zion do not have to debate this issue. We know of the doctrine that emanates from the revelations of the Lord.

We know that he has commanded the replenishment of the earth from the homes of his people, as President Clark said yesterday. The Lord pity those who subject themselves to his rebuke for denying entrance to the spirit children whom he would send into mortality, and the Lord pity those sophisticated couples who would pervert the sacred institution of marriage into an arrangement for social convenience and selfish personal gratification.

SYMPATHY FOR PARENTS

Now, fathers and mothers of the Church, some will conclude after hearing these comments that I am without sympathy for the sacrifice mothers make, and for the hardships put upon fathers in rearing a family in these oppressive economic times. Those who so conclude are partly right and partly wrong. I don't have too much sympathy for a father, a Latter-day Saint father, who decides that a baby cannot come into the home until a ten or fifteen thousand dollar house has been built and furnished, and the money is in the bank to pay expenses, and who will let his wife go to work to bring about this so-called economic security. I don't have too much sympathy for Latter-day Saint couples who do not have faith that if they do God's will, he will bless them.

I do have sympathy, however, for all parents in these days in the Herculean effort required to keep children in the paths of virtue and truth. I have sympathy for the endurance, the sleepless nights of excruciating anxiety of parents who don't know where their children are and what they are doing; and my heart bleeds for the innocent ones who are the victims of disgrace brought upon their families by the sins of the wayward.

I am persuaded, my brethren and sisters, that there is no remedial measure which offers more promise in the alleviation of domestic distress as affecting husband and wife, and parents and children than the firm establishment of the sacred and religious character of family life, marriage in the Church and in the temple; and, as a necessary adjunct thereto, the reestablishment of the God-given principle of sacrifice in discharging parental and filial obligations.

We want to relieve mother of drudgery. If I could, I would put a dishwasher in every home, but good mothers and good fathers, with the vision of home vouchsafed to them in the restored gospel, don't want to be relieved of the obligation to expend their strength and energies, and to give their lives for God's children entrusted to their care.

ATTACK ON MORAL PURITY

There is another threat to Zion perhaps transcending all others in serious import. It is the attack of the foe on our traditional concept and standard of personal moral purity. This attack is so evil and so repugnant to our sense of decency and virtue that I will not discuss it in this reverential presence.

I must content myself with the prayer that God, who sees our need, will come to our rescue, and that he will arouse the mighty power of Zion against this devastating enemy, that every man, woman, and child among us may be fortified with the armor of righteousness and virtue, that the offenders may be rebuked, and repent in sackcloth and ashes; and that the watchmen on the towers, the officers and the priesthood of the Church, may be alerted to the enemy, discharge their solemn duties, and protect us.

I have taken so much time in the endeavor to point out what we have to fear in the encroachment of worldly concepts and practices on home life and virtue that there is little time remaining for me to mention other aspects of great dangers confronting us. I trust, however, that the serious nature of these items will warrant a brief consideration of them.

CRITICISM OF UNITY

The foe is attacking our unity. We in Zion have enjoyed a most uncommon reputation for unity of purpose and achievement. This has come about because it has ever been our disposition to follow and yield obedience to our leaders. Our critics, who have not understood our concepts, who have observed our unanimous voting in sustaining officers, and other evidences of our concerted action, have called it blind obedience, induced by some sort of fear or other compulsion.

I haven't time to analyze and point out the false premise of this criticism, but I flatly deny its validity. The obedience we render is voluntary and not blind, but intelligent; and the unity we manifest arises out of a common understanding of our purposes and a common devotion to their achievement. We seek for and enjoy the influence of the Holy Spirit, which, in the larger aspects of life, motivates us all alike. Our unanimity is in response to that Spirit.

That condition is not generally prevalent in the world. Division, divided views, and debate thereon are commended. Perhaps when people don't know where they are going and have no defined objectives, criticism and debate are commendable. Men and women within and without the Church fail to observe this distinction. They want to debate our objectives. They have forgotten that they are divinely set for us and beyond debate. They seem to think our unity belittles us. This is a worldly doctrine. It has no place in Zion.

A threat to our unity derives from unseemly personal antagonisms developed in partisan political controversy. The Church, while reserving the right to advocate principles of good government underlying equity, justice, and liberty, the political integrity of officials, and the active participation of its members, and the fulfillment of their obligations in civic affairs, exercises no constraint on the freedom of individuals to make their own choices and affiliations. I am authorized by President McKay to say that any man who makes representation to the contrary does so without authority and justification in fact.

FAIRNESS IN POLITICAL VIEWS

It is reasonable to assume that men may entertain honest differences of opinions with reference to governmental policy. In America, and in many other countries, an orderly system has been devised for the determination of issues arising out of such differences. With such methods available, why should any men, particularly those in the brotherhood of Zion, permit themselves to entertain personal animosities against their opponents. There is surely nothing Christian in impugning motives merely because of a difference of opinion.

I hope with all my heart that men of the priesthood, of the same quorum perhaps, and women of the sisterhood of the Church will not permit themselves to be estranged in any degree by these considerations, and that they will always subordinate such differences and their own personal ambitions to the achievement of the lofty and exalted goal to which they have pledged their eternal allegiance—the building of the kingdom of God.

I have been going about this Church for nearly thirty-five years, filling assignments to instal officers in stakes and wards and missions, and I have never yet asked a single person about his politics, and in very few instances have I ever had any knowledge on the subject. I think my own experience has been comparable to that of my brethren. We have been fair with you, my fellow members of the Church. Now we ask you to be fair with each other.

THREAT OF INDIFFERENCE

Perhaps the greatest threat to both our unity and our progress in Zion is that of indifference and neglect. These deficiencies are not new. They have existed in some degree throughout our history. I am forced to believe that they have increased as a deterrent force in recent years. I believe also that this regrettable indifference to duty and opportunity is in large measure ascribable to "aping the ways of the world."

A man of the priesthood, we will say, is associated in business, in club life, and in other capacities, with a man of the world. This man may be his neighbor. He sees his neighbor on a Sunday morning out on the porch smoking his pipe and reading the newspaper, or he sees him go off to a golf game, or on a fishing trip. It all looks relaxing and pleasant to him, and then he forgets who he is and where he is. He forgets that he has been commissioned as a servant of God, and he forgets that he is in Zion; and forgetting, he steps out of Zion into the world, not all in one step, sometimes so gradually that the change is almost imperceptible to him, and he is loath to acknowledge his new status. He persuades himself that this comfortable, easy life is very enjoyable.

Then he goes farther—farther than he intended. He succumbs to many practices he once abhorred. He stops paying tithing, and the twinges of conscience he once had about forsaking duty gradually subside. He is comfortably out of Zion. After awhile he comes to the realization that his growing sons are disposed to ape his own practices, as he does those of the world.

He also begins to realize that his dear, devoted wife is suffering great disappointment. She sets great store by the promises made at their marriage and realizes that the eternal blessings are obtainable only through the faithfulness of herself and her man. She sees him losing his priesthood through neglect. It saddens her, and if his conscience is not too deadened, he perceives her sorrow. He has the power to change, to gladden the hearts of his wife and children, but he lacks courage and resolution.

The worldly habits have fastened themselves with a hundred tentacles into his very soul. He cannot throw them off. He despairs; and then one day something touches him—a death, a tragedy, a friend, his bishop perhaps, or quorum president, or a missionary. Finally the light that he had lost is re-kindled in him. The Spirit again comes to dwell within him. In penitence and humility he cries out, "O God, forgive me for my neglect." Thank the Lord there is forgiveness and mercy for those who repent, and surpassing joy in the reclamation of those who have strayed. Let no man among us be ashamed of his priesthood. Nothing greater will ever come into his life.

DISPARAGEMENT OF ORTHODOXY

One more item and I shall conclude. There is a worldly threat to our theological teaching and to the faith of youth. Sporadically it has always been so, but in recent years it is more pronounced. This is not a frontal attack by the foe. We have never had too much difficulty in meeting open charges or criticisms. The foe is striking from ambush, with snipers and fifth columnists, with traps for the unwary.

A part of the propaganda is that there is no warrant for official interpretation of the doctrines and standards of the Church, that everyone may read and interpret for himself, and adopt only so much of the doctrine as he chooses, and that he may classify the revelations as essential or non-essential. These propagandists are either ignorant of or ignore the Lord's declaration that "no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation." (II Peter 1:20.) They disparage orthodoxy as such and pride themselves on liberal thinking. Many of them maintain their loyalty to the Church, and some may honestly believe they are doing the Church a favor and a service in advocating their so-called broad-minded concepts.

Unfortunately, some people within the Church subscribing to these views do not realize that they are falling into a trap themselves. They are giving aid and comfort to the foe; they are undermining their own testimonies and those of others. I warn the Church against them, and I warn them against themselves; and I plead with them to desist, to abandon their agnostic discussions, and to join with the faithful in promoting the cause which in their hearts they once loved, and I think they still love.

ATTACKS ON JOSEPH SMITH

Not a few of these snipers delight to take a shot at Joseph Smith. In some surprising way it has become somewhat popular, stimulated, I presume, by books which have been written for students and scholars, to undertake exhaustive research into the life of this great man. In some instances, perhaps, the purpose of the research projects may be laudable, to exploit the great and noble things in the life and works of the Prophet, but in all too many instances I fear the purpose of the research is merely exploratory, with the hope of discovering something that would make for sensational reading and perhaps a profit for the writer. I have never been able to discover any very substantial reason for these researches other than that I have just mentioned.

Here is a life recently lived. Many of us here in this assembly today have known and talked with persons who knew the Prophet, and yet you would think from the way the researchers go after him that he was a person of great antiquity, and that something in the nature of excavation for prehistoric materials had to be undertaken to discover the facts of his life. I doubt if there is a person who has lived in the last two centuries whose life is more fully documented than that of this man, unless perchance it be among royalty or those in high public office.

Almost every important event in his life has been recorded by himself, by his mother, and by those who immediately knew him. His life is not a mystery; it is an open book, at least to members of the Church who have access to the knowledge which he brought to the world.

I rebuke the members of the Church who cast aspersion upon the honored name of the Prophet Joseph Smith, and who in any manner disparage his noble work. By so doing they destroy faith, their own and that of others, and the Lord will hold them accountable.

TESTIMONY OF DIVINE MISSION

I repeat what I have said in this pulpit before: My grandfather was the close friend and companion of this man. He knew him as intimately as one man may know another. He had abundant opportunity to detect any flaws in his character and discover any deceit in his work. He found none, and he has left his testimony to his family and to all the world that this man was true, that he was divinely commissioned for the work he had to do, and that he gave his life to the fulfilment of his mission. I have complete assurance that Willard Richards did not lie about his friend, and on my own account, independent of my grandfather's testimony, borne out of the spirit within me, I know that Joseph Smith was a prophet of the Living God, and the work he was instrumental in setting up in the earth is the veritable kingdom of our Father in heaven.

Having that knowledge and a deep reverence for his illustrious name, I deplore and resent the miserable attempts made to discredit him; and I predict that they will all come to nought, that he will survive every attack, that he will yet win the esteem and respect of all good men, and that the Father has already glorified him.

PRESERVATION OF ZION

If I have been able in any degree to clarify our understanding about Zion and her relationship to the world, if the Spirit of the Lord has entered into your hearts, my brethren and sisters, to give you a greater love for Zion and awake within you a keener apprehension of the dangers which the foe has brought to our very doors, and if resolution shall now grip your hearts to arise and defend Zion, I will be profoundly grateful. And some day the righteous of the world will be grateful, for "Ye are the salt of the earth: but if the salt have lost his savour, wherewith shall it be salted?" (Matt. 5:13.)

O God, help us, thy favored children, to preserve Zion, I humbly pray in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH FIELDING SMITH

President of the Council of the Twelve

With the help of the Lord, which I seek, and your faith and prayers, I shall try not to trespass too far upon the excellent remarks that we have heard by others in this conference. But I have been impressed with the thought of saying something in addition to what has been said in relation to the sacred and holy covenant of marriage.

MISUNDERSTANDING OF SCRIPTURES

There is plenty that can be said, I think, without my crossing the lines and necessarily repeating. The Lord never intended, never designated nor designed that marriage should come to an end with death. There isn't anything in the scriptures when properly understood that indicates anything of that kind. It is due to a misunderstanding through a lack of the guidance of the Spirit of the Lord that has led the world almost universally to believe that marriage is for time only, that when death comes, there comes a separation of husbands and wives, and children are left without any claim in the eternities upon their parents.

The one passage of scripture above all others that is relied on in the world to attempt to prove that marriage comes to an end and that there is no marriage hereafter is taken from the remarks of our Savior to the Sadducees who came tempting him. You recall that these Sadducees did not believe in the resurrection. They came with a story, which no doubt is fictitious, to the effect that a woman had been married consecutively seven times, and trying to catch him in a trap, they asked him which of these seven husbands would be the husband of the woman in eternity. Our Lord gave them the proper answer because he was speaking to people who did not believe in the hereafter. So he said in answer to their questions: "The children of this world marry and are given in marriage." I call your attention to the fact that the Lord said that he and his disciples did not belong to this world; the Sadducees did. To continue: "But they which shall be counted worthy to attain that world and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage." (See Matt. 22:23-30.) This is absolutely true.

And the Lord has revealed this same doctrine to the Church in the day in which we live. He says unto those who are married for time only, and those who do not believe in marriage for eternity:

Therefore, when they are out of the world they neither marry nor are given in marriage; but are appointed angels in heaven; which angels are ministering servants, to minister for those who are worthy of a far more, and an exceeding, and an eternal weight of glory.

For these angels did not abide my law; therefore, they cannot be enlarged, but remain separately and singly, without exaltation, in their saved condition, to all eternity; and from henceforth are not gods, but are angels of God forever and ever. (D. & C. 132:16-17.)

So the Lord says those of that class, who may be worthy to enter the kingdom of heaven, shall be like the angels, and they remain separately and singly in eternity.

MARRIAGE AN ETERNAL PRINCIPLE

But the Lord very definitely has declared that marriage is an eternal principle. That is recorded in our scriptures, in the Bible. I call your attention to the fact that the very first marriage on the face of this earth was performed by the Lord, and it was not for time only because there was no time. That was declared, and that ceremony given, to a couple who were not subject to death. Therefore, marriage was not intended to come to an end. And after the Fall, when Adam and Eve were driven from the Garden of Eden, the Lord did not say that they should return to the dust, and their bodies should remain, but he gave them the promise of the resurrection; nor did he say to them that this marriage that was performed for eternity, if you please, would come to an end.

When the Lord was confronted by the Pharisees, who believed in the resurrection, his answer to them was a very different one. Likewise they came tempting him. They wanted to know if it is lawful for a man to put away his wife for every cause. And the answer was given them:

... Have ye not read, that he which made them at the beginning made them male and female,

And said for this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife: and they twain shall be one flesh? (Matthew 19:4-5.)

Where is any idea of separation in that remark? "Wherefore they are no more twain"—that sounds like eternity. "No more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let no man put asunder." (Ibid., 19:6.)

MARRIAGE BY DIVINE COMMANDMENT

In the temples of the Lord men and women are sealed, married for time and for all eternity. The Lord has commanded it. Children born to them will be their children not only in this life, but also in eternity; and the family relationship, according to the plan of the Lord, is not designed to come to an end. But, of course, if people will not accept marriage by divine commandment, it cannot be recognized. What God has joined together must be something that will endure, for he does not perform ceremonies for time only. The Lord did not say to these Pharisees, "There is no marriage in eternity," but he said, where God joins, it endures forever. That, I read into this passage of scripture, and I think I read it correctly.

COVENANTS AND OBLIGATIONS

Now I want to plead to my good brethren and sisters, good members of the Church, to go to the temple to be married for time and all eternity. I want to plead with those who have been to the temple and have been so married to be faithful and true to their covenants and their obligations, for in the House of the Lord they have made solemn covenants and have taken upon themselves before God, angels, and witnesses, obligations that sometimes are broken.

What does marriage mean to members of the Church? It means that they are receiving in that ordinance the greatest, the crowning blessing, the blessing of eternal lives. Now that's the way the Lord puts it, "eternal lives," which means not only will the husband and the wife enter into eternal life, but their children who were born under the covenant likewise will be entitled through their faithfulness to eternal lives. And further, that the husband and the wife after the resurrection of the dead will not come to an end. By that the Lord means that they will have a continuation of the seeds forever, and the family organization does not come to an end.

REASON FOR DIVORCE

We have too many marriages in the temple of the Lord where the parties entering into the covenants violate them. If we as members of the Church were living in full accord with the principles of the gospel, living by every word that proceedeth forth from the mouth of God, divorce would practically disappear so far as the Church is concerned; that is, among those who are married in the temple.

When divorce comes to those who are married in the temple, it has come because they have violated the covenants and the obligations they have taken upon themselves to be true to each other, true to God, true to the Church. If they will continue to live in that faithfulness, if they will have love in their hearts for each other, respect each other's rights and not one attempt to take an advantage unduly of the other but have the proper consideration, there will be no failures. When the separation comes, as I say, too frequently, it is because of violation of the covenants and obligations of this sacred and holy ceremony.

And when a man and a woman are married in the temple for time and all eternity and then seek through the courts a separation, and perhaps come to the President of the Church to get a cancellation, what have they done? Children likely have been born, and as we have already heard, these children belong to God; they are his children sent to that home with all the rights of protection from father and mother, guidance from father and mother, to be built up and strengthened in the faith, and to go into the heavens, into the celestial kingdom with the father and mother to sit with them in exaltation and glory. But frequently a man and a woman cannot live together, many times because of some trivial thing that arises, and they separate. What have they done to those children? They have destroyed their God-given rights, taken them away from them, destroyed a family. And how are they going to go into the eternities and face their Maker under those conditions?

Now I realize, the Savior realized it, I did not read far enough to take that into consideration because that was not what I was talking about at the time, that there are some cases where a wife needs to have a separation, perhaps a husband should have a separation, but always because of a violation, a serious violation of the covenants that have been made. But here you have the broken home; children left without one and maybe without both parents, to be taken perhaps through the mercy of the Almighty into some other faithful family to be adopted in such a family to be theirs through all eternity.

Now time will not permit me to say more. There is so much that could be said, much perhaps that ought to be said. But those who violate this sacred and solemn covenant are going to have a sorry time of it if they are guilty when they come to the judgment seat of God, for they have broken the bands of an eternal union and lost their promise of exaltation in the kingdom of God.

The Lord bless you I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER DELBERT L. STAPLEY

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My brothers and sisters, I rejoice with you for the blessings of this conference. I have completed one year of service, and I am most grateful for the experiences of this past year. I want to welcome Elder Marion G. Romney into the Council of the Twelve. For years I have admired and respected him for his devotion and for his friendly spirit. I am sure we will all be happy with the quality of the service he is able to give the people of the Church. I also want to welcome those who have been selected as assistants to the Quorum of the Apostles, and pledge them my love and support.

I hope, my brothers and sisters, I will not detract from the spirit of this conference. I earnestly pray for the blessings of our Heavenly Father. Through the sessions of this conference we have had a tremendous spiritual uplift, and the counsel given to keep the commandments of God and to stand in holy places has been timely indeed.

FASTING AND PRAYER

As I have traveled about the Church these past few months with members of the general welfare committee and listened to their talks on fasting and prayer, I have felt this principle has great spiritual power and opportunity for the blessings of God to the people of the Church and to the Church itself. I have been impressed by its great spiritual significance. It seems to me it is a source of strength, a source of power, a source of blessing that perhaps as a people we are not using enough; that it does have tremendous spiritual value to those who observe the law, and who apply it faithfully. It also seems to me that fasting and prayer can be employed to bless others, and if we would faithfully observe the law, the blessings of our Heavenly Father would collectively be given to the people of the Church.

President Joseph F. Smith said, speaking of the fast, that "the law to the Latter-day Saints as understood by the Authorities of the Church is that food and drink are not to be partaken of for twenty-four hours, 'from eve to eve,' and that the Saints are to refrain from all bodily gratifications and indulgences." Most Latter-day Saints, I think, understand the doing without two meals in connection with the monthly fast and giving the cash equivalent to the bishop as fast offerings, but I am wondering along with our fasting do we gather our families together and pray with them that they may enjoy the blessings of the Lord? Do we also understand that the true fast presupposes self-restraint and purity of body by refraining from all bodily gratifications and indulgences? It seems to me that the soul cannot be humbled nor sanctified for the blessings of God unless this is true.

OBSERVANCE BRINGS BLESSINGS

The Saints by fasting and praying can sanctify the soul and elevate the spirit to Christlike perfection, and thus the body would be brought into subjection to the spirit, promote communion with the Holy Ghost, and insure spiritual strength and power to the individual.

By observing fasting and prayer in its true spirit, the Latter-day Saints cannot be overpowered by Satan tempting them to evil. This morning in the radio address of Elder Cowley, titled, "Man Cannot Live by Bread Alone," he emphasized the forty-day fast of the Savior. As I have thought about the Savior's long fast and prayers unto God, I know his spirit was humbled, his soul was sanctified, and it gave him the moral strength and the spiritual power to resist the temptations of Satan. It also prepared him to go forward and complete the great mission that God had sent him on earth to perform in the interest of mankind.

It was through fasting and prayer that the angel of God appeared to Cornelius, and gained for him and his household the gospel of Jesus Christ. When Peter came to the home of Cornelius, he wanted to know for what reason he had been called. Cornelius said:

Four days ago I was fasting until this hour, and at the ninth hour I prayed in my house and behold a man stood before me in bright clothing and said, Cornelius thy prayer is heard and thine alms are had in remembrance in the sight of God. (See Acts 10:3-4.)

SONS OF MOSIAH

When Alma was traveling southward from Gideon to the land of Manti, he encountered the sons of Mosiah returning to the land of Zarahemla. These sons of Mosiah had spent fourteen years doing missionary work among the Lamanites. Alma in all this time had not seen them and was overjoyed at this chance meeting. He was made glad because they were still brethren in the Church and kingdom of God, and says Mormon in his abridgment of Alma's record:

... yea, and they had waxed strong in the knowledge of the truth; for they were men of a sound understanding and they had searched the scriptures diligently, that they might know the word of God.

But this is not all; they had given themselves to much prayer, and fasting; therefore they had the spirit of prophecy, and the spirit of revelation, and when they taught, they taught with power and authority of God. (Alma 17:2-3.)

This indicates the great blessings that come to those who observe and keep this very sacred principle of fasting and prayer.

MISSIONARY OBSERVANCE

Recently it was my privilege to tour the Northern California Mission, and as I listened to the missionaries, your sons and daughters, make their reports and bear testimony, I was so pleased when they referred time and again to fasting and prayer, and this they resorted to often to obtain God's blessings for themselves in their work. They fasted and prayed for those who were sick among them, and when they found it difficult to impress people with the gospel message of the restored Church, they fasted and prayed about it and received great blessings from such fasting and prayer.

Many of them were fasting and praying that their folk at home, inactive, would become active in the Church. It seems to me you who are leaders would do well to fast and pray for the Holy Ghost to guide you in the selection of officers and teachers for Church positions. Let the Lord give unto you by his Holy Spirit the men and women whom he has chosen.

CALLING OF BRETHREN

We read in the thirteenth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles that there were in the Church at Antioch certain prophets and teachers, that among these were Barnabas and Saul. The record says,

As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them.

And when they had fasted and prayed, and laid their hands on them, they sent them away. (Acts 13:2-3.)

We had occasion in the upper room of the temple the other day to witness a similar experience in the selection of Elder Romney to the Council of the Twelve. As his name was presented, there was a unanimous feeling that this man had been called of God to the important position that he now occupies.

NEED FOR SPIRITUAL POWER

I feel, my brothers and sisters, that in our work, and our callings, also in our homes, that we individually need the spiritual power, the strength, the guidance, and the blessings that fasting and prayer will obtain.

On one occasion when Jesus came to his disciples, he found the scribes asking them questions. When he inquired as to the nature of their questions, a man stepped forward and said he had brought his son, possessed of an evil spirit, to the disciples, and they could not cast him out. He pleaded with the Savior to cast out this evil spirit that was sorely vexing his son. The Savior asked him if he believed, and he said, "Lord, I believe; help thou my unbelief." The Master did cast out the evil spirit from the son and restored him to the father. As he entered into the house, the disciples came to him and said, "Why could not we cast him out?" And Jesus answered, "This kind can come forth by nothing, but by prayer and fasting." (See Mark 9:14-29.)

It seems to me, my brethren and sisters, particularly my brethren holding the Melchizedek Priesthood, that when we are called to administer to the sick who are sorely afflicted, if we would humble our souls through fasting and prayer, we would be close to our Heavenly Father and have claim upon him for the blessings to those we love and seek to help.

CITY OF NINEVEH

In the interest of saving time (as many other examples showing the great value of fasting and prayer could be given) may I say that there are great powers, virtues, and blessings in this divine law. When Jonah was sent to the city of Nineveh to warn them of their destruction because of wickedness, they repented in sackcloth and ashes, and by decree all in that city fasted and prayed. Their flocks and herds were also required to do without food and drink. God accepted this display of repentance and humility through fasting and prayer and turned aside his anger and the city was not destroyed.

It seems to me that if a city could obtain such a blessing by fasting and prayer, a nation also could be similarly blessed of God. We as a people, by emphasizing this principle, could obtain great blessings for ourselves and for the Church in general.

Many times during this conference we have been reminded that conditions are serious, that the affairs of the world are in a muddle, that there are many uncertainties, that men in and of their own wisdom and learning are not finding the great answers to the problems of humanity and the world. And as a result, the hearts of men are failing them. Surely in these conditions of uncertainty, these conditions of wickedness and vice we need the sustaining and guiding power of Almighty God, which we can obtain from our Heavenly Father through the exercise of this great principle of fasting and prayer. As a people we need the direction, the revelations, and the blessings of Almighty God, which we can only obtain by humbling our souls through fasting and prayer and in keeping God's commandments. Therefore, we should fast and pray for those in high Church positions, that God will favor them with the revelations of his mind and will that we may be guided through this period of uncertainty and darkness.

EXAMPLE OF NEPHITES

We read in the Book of Mormon that in the beginning of the fifty-first year of the Judges, the people of Nephi enjoyed peace, prosperity, and plenty, but yet they were a faithful people in keeping the commandments of our Heavenly Father. However, during this year of the Judges, pride started to creep into the hearts of the people, and those who had been lifted up in this pride began to persecute their brethren; therefore it was difficult for the faithful members to exercise the freedom of their church beliefs. The account reads:

Nevertheless they did fast and pray oft, and did wax stronger and stronger in their humility, and firmer and firmer in the faith of Christ, unto the filling their souls with joy and consolation, yea, even to the purifying and the sanctification of their hearts, which sanctification cometh because of their yielding their hearts unto God. (Helaman 3:35.)

My brothers and sisters, if we fast and pray often I am sure that we, too, can wax stronger and stronger in our faith and in our humility that our hearts will be filled with joy and consolation; that we will also purify and sanctify our hearts, which sanctification will come because we do yield our hearts unto God.

May God bless us, may he help us to understand this great principle of the fast, help us to observe it in its true spirit, help us that we may give to the bishop the cash equivalent of the meals we do not partake of in the interest of the poor of the Church; and I am sure, and I promise you that as a people we shall be blessed. You will also be blessed individually in the observance of this great principle. May this be true, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER S. DILWORTH YOUNG

Of the First Council of Seventy

This conference, I am sure, has had as its theme the home.

EXAMPLE OF MCKAY FAMILY

Twenty-eight years ago I was adopted by the people of Ogden and Weber County. I believe now that I can safely say I belong to them. As I have seen it, I think that the greatest influence in Weber County through the years has been the example of the McKay family in establishing and keeping a home. I say the McKay family because President McKay has many brothers and sisters. I have never seen such unity in a family. Weber County knows that. I have had many happy associations with Brother Thomas McKay. I was happy that Brother Petersen said what he did the other day concerning him. If there were time, I could and would tell you other things which have shown me the breadth, and the love, and the desire of this good man who sits down in the lower tiers to give of himself to the people of that county, and to the Church. There isn't a person in Weber County but who knows that he can ask President David O. McKay to come and speak at the funerals of bereaved loved ones. All feel they can do that. All restrain themselves because of his time. They all call him affectionately David O., behind his back. To his face, of course, they give him his proper title, but everywhere one goes in Weber County it is "David O.," unless they want to tell a story about him, and then it is shortened to "D.O."

I am sure it is all done with affection. There is an old saying that "Home is where the heart is." People from Weber County are not deceived by the fact that Brother McKay lives on East South Temple Street. They know he is forced to live there, but that, had he his way, his address is, and always will be Huntsville, Weber County, Utah.

The example of this family and its resulting influence in our county is a testimony of the influence of good example in home idealism. Truly we of Weber County, and I suspect the rest of the Church also, know that if we will but follow the example of our beloved leader in establishing and keeping a home, we surely will find peace and joy.

MISSION TO THE INDIANS

I have one more thought. I would not argue as to which of the revelations is the most important, but there is no question that the longest revelation given to Joseph Smith the Prophet is the Book of Mormon. Each of its six hundred pages reveals the dealings of Jesus Christ with those whom he loved as his own family, the House of Israel. When the Prophet read the revelation, I do not know what was stirred up in his mind, but I know what he did. He read that the gospel had to be taken to the remnants of the House of Israel in this land. One of the first acts that he performed was to begin this work. He sent Oliver Cowdery, Parley P. Pratt, Ziba Peterson, and Peter Whitmer, Jr., on a mission to the Indian people. It was a tough, long haul they had in winter, on foot, through the wilderness from where they were at that time to the borders of Missouri, but the hazards of the journey did not stop them. What did they accomplish? Perhaps not much. They were able to talk to an Indian chief; they made the tribe quite excited; and then the Indian agent and the ministers of the surrounding territory descended upon them and drove them out. But one thing they did do from which we can take a lesson. They tried to fulfil a prophecy. It becomes our duty now to continue and try again to fulfil that prophecy; a prophecy that the gospel would go in the last days to these people until the time that they would take their proper place in the establishment of the Center Place and of Zion itself.

GOSPEL ACCEPTANCE INDIVIDUAL

Now I recognize that the acceptance of the gospel is an individual thing. We aren't going to convert these friends of ours in multitudes. I remind the missionaries who are assigned to these people that they must go from house to house and bear their witness to individuals. There may be many, but we must seek them out one by one. We have been their conquerors—I don't mean the Church. I mean the white people of this land. They have been the subjected people. We know the story of how they have been downtrodden. There is no time now to talk about that. They expect something from us. What they want is help to rise, not relief; understanding, not pity; opportunity, not charity. And I remind you that there are thirty-four million of them in these two Americas, only three hundred and thirty-four thousand of them in the United States, a hundred thousand in Canada, fifteen thousand in Alaska, three million, five hundred thousand in Central America, and seventeen million who are of the blood of Israel in Mexico, in addition to those of the South American continent.

AZTEC INDIAN BOY

I think I see one way by which many of these things are going to be accomplished in something which happened to me a short time ago, and with that I shall close. I was talking to a boy. He was a little older than the Prophet Joseph was when he received the First Vision; he was about the age of the Prophet when he organized the Church. He was an Indian boy of Aztec descent. His mother accepted the gospel years ago in a little village on the slopes of those immense volcanoes in the valley of Mexico. She and her sister came to this valley years ago, and by dint of hard work, perseverance, and love, they have reared a delightful family. They have sent three of their children on missions. This lad of whom I speak had just been given an honor, a scholarship to a great eastern university because of the fine work he had done in chemistry. I said to him, "What are you going to do when you finish? I suppose you are going to become a doctor of philosophy."

"That's right," he said.

"And after that, what? Where are you going?"

He looked up at me, and in the shy way that these people have (they don't like to stare at a person, they glance up at one quickly and want to be sure one understands) he said, "When I get through, I am going home."

"Where is home?" I asked, because I knew he had been reared right here.

"I am going back to the valley of Mexico whence my mother came and try to teach my people what I have discovered."

"What place does the gospel have in that?" I questioned.

He said, "I intend to teach the gospel along with the chemistry."

That, I think, is a key to what we may expect when these people, these loved ones of ours, these of the House of Israel, come into the Church in numbers. They will come if we but strive diligently.

I know the gospel is true. I bear my witness that Jesus is the Christ, that the Prophet Joseph Smith was inspired of God to do all of the things that he did to establish the kingdom and that these who sit on this stand behind me are verily prophets of God. In the name of Jesus Christ, I bear this testimony. Amen.

BISHOP THORPE B. ISAACSON

Second Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

President McKay, President Richards, President Clark, and my dear brothers and sisters, I feel very humble this morning.

I think the service that started here in the Tabernacle at eight o'clock this morning has been heavenly and divine. I sincerely pray that the Lord will sustain me, give me the strength and the inspiration that I know I need while I stand here. I have prayed humbly, I believe, that the Lord would purge my soul of everything that is not of him.

SPIRIT OF CONFERENCE

I have rejoiced with you in the spirit of this conference. The Spirit of the Lord has been here in rich abundance. No one could attend these sessions and not feel the holy influence of our Father in heaven. No one could come here with the right spirit, with the spirit of peace and love, and the spirit of worship, and not know that these brethren are inspired of the Lord.

We come here by the thousands. The first conference in this Tabernacle was held eighty-four years ago now this October conference, and we have assembled semi-annually since that time with very few exceptions. Many of the men and the brethren who have attended are not here now.

I am thinking of Bishop Marvin O. Ashton who spoke here five years ago at the Sunday session of the October conference. As I have gone about the Church, many of you fine brethren have expressed your great love and affection for Bishop Ashton. Yes, he loved the people, and the people loved him. He loved the Church, and he loved the Lord.

Many who have come to this block are impressed with the feeling and the spirit they have while they are here. Many of them tell us that they feel different here than they do anywhere else. Well, that is right. They do feel different here because this is a sacred block—this building, and the temple to the east have all been dedicated to the work of the Lord, and his influence is here.

INSPIRATION OF TEMPLE SQUARE

I would like to read a paragraph from three of the people who were recently here. One of them from Arizona sent this paragraph:

The inspiration which we derived on Temple Square will always be remembered, and there will always be a fond spot in our hearts for the people of Utah. Those who come from outside your state can only marvel at the wonderful feeling which we felt there. It brings a new understanding into our lives to realize that we are all the children of God, and it has meant much to me to know that life can still be joyous and beautiful.

Here is one from Delaware:

What golden memories we have from being in Salt Lake City. It seems to me that it means more because of the setting, and because of the spiritual uplift and devotion to principles and ideals. As I entered that great Tabernacle, I felt a peace, and that feeling has remained with me. We went from there filled with the highest admiration for your people and for the wonderful principles for which you stand.

Then this one came from Ohio:

The thought keeps going through my mind that God was really in that place. The unusual way in which all of your people demonstrated the true living of your religion gave me a real insight into Mormonism which we would have had in no other way. I am very grateful personally for the opportunity of my enlarged understanding of your principles.

People that come here in the right attitude feel the holy influence of our Father in heaven. It is up to you and me to make sure that they do not leave here with an incorrect feeling. Oh, my brethren and friends and associates, in the Church and out of the Church, who are somewhat inactive, and who are uninterested, I would plead with you with all the earnestness of my soul that you repent of your wrongdoings. Let the Spirit of the Lord come into your hearts, and you will know joy that you have never known before.

REPENTANCE OF WRONGDOINGS

Repent of your wrongdoings, and the Lord will forgive you, because he has told us that if we would repent and overcome our weaknesses and imperfections and come unto him,

... the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels. (Revelation 3:5.)

Let us repent of our wrongdoings, humbly and truly, so the Spirit of the Lord can dwell with us. To you, my brethren, who may be listening in on the air or who may be watching television or who may read the proceedings of the conference, I would plead with you that you not divorce yourselves longer from the activities of the Church because it is impossible for you to know the happiness that is waiting for you without the blessings of the Lord.

To our young people, stay very close to the Church. You young men in business, you young professional men and you boys in college, you young married people, don't feel any longer that you can get along alone. Take the Lord into your confidence with all your hearts. It ought not to be hard when we recognize and understand that he knows the feelings of our souls, anyway. Let us put aside that false pride, and you young people don't be too anxious for success. Don't be in a hurry. Don't want to make all the dollars you can, and while you are so doing, divorce yourselves from the Church.

IMPORTANCE OF FAITH

Oh, the blessings that await you if you will only come and mingle with the Saints of the Church! Attend your sacrament meetings. It seems that our people need to be continually encouraged to attend their sacrament meetings. They should come to sacrament meetings in large numbers as often as possible. We should partake of the sacrament and renew our covenants with the Lord, so that during the following week we may be able to withstand those temptations with which we are confronted.

To you young people, do not lose faith in the Church. Do not lose faith in the government. There may be things done by men in high places that you do not approve, but do not judge the government by that. Think of your founding forefathers, of your Constitution, divinely inspired of the Lord, and you will not lose faith in your land or in your government.

LETTER FROM KOREA

Have faith in the Lord at all times. I have a letter here from a young man in Korea that I would like to read, and if a young man in Korea can live and write as this young man has lived and has written, you likewise can go and do the same.

From Korea he wrote:

Dear Bishop: I wish I could find the words to explain my feelings while I read your most welcome letter. In a war-stricken world as I am now living in, I couldn't have received a more warm and appreciative wish than you gave me. A guy's soul gets so low and tired of seeing the world about one fall in ruins, and taking thousands of innocent people with it.

It makes a guy like me realize how lucky the American people are, but I wonder if they appreciate it. I have been here in Korea ever since the war broke out. I am really getting pretty tired, and I will be so glad when this mess is all over with.

My entire life has changed so much since I came here over two years ago. It seems more like ten years to me, since I have experienced so much in these last two years.

Before I left home I didn't realize what nice people I was accustomed to, but after seeing the outside world I now appreciate my family for teaching me the good things that they taught me. I begin to see the difference between people I was used to living with and those of the outside world. I have missed decent people who were taught the ways of the Lord, which he has asked us to live. I have missed friendly neighbors who always greeted me with a smile. I miss my Sunday School and the association of my people. All that I have seen here are temptation and sin that I would never have been able to fight down had it not been for the teachings that I received in my home and in this Church.

It seemed as if every time sin crossed my path because of loneliness,

I would then see my mother's face and my people at home looking at me as though they trusted me and expected me to be an example of right living until I returned home, to live so that I would be worthy of a fine girl and have life's happiness and a home and children.

God only knows the torture a guy goes through from being so far from home under such trying circumstances. I will say with all my heart that I believe in God and prayer. Otherwise I never would have succeeded and survived. When I felt alone, I would walk at night so that I could pray to my God. I prayed that he would help me live a clean life and find satisfaction and happiness in living that way. For that reason, I have been successful.

I went to school and was graduated, and then I went to Japan. I worked in an office as a typist. I found a liking for the work, and I worked hard to keep it and earn promotions. My most trying time in Korea was when the United Nations forces were so hard pressed. There I lost my best buddy. He was shot down through the head right before my eyes. I will never forget that as long as I live. That is my deepest regret in coming to Korea.

I have had several terribly close calls, but I know that God has saved my life and saved my soul. I trust him completely with it, and my wish is for him to be the judge. I guess I should have fear, but I don't any more. After seeing my buddy die, I feel I am no better than he was, so far that reason I want to leave it for God to decide, and I don't worry about it. We have lost lots of good boys over here, probably many more than the people of America realize. I know I would be the happiest guy alive if I was home to attend your meetings, and be part of them, and it is the true work of God that is striving to keep the world at peace today.

No person could be doing more to make a peaceful world than to live and teach God's ways of living. My prayer will always be with all of you in your work.

Our hearts and prayers go out to these boys that are there, and the thousands who will yet go. Oh, is it asking too much that we pray for them daily? Whether they are our own or not, they are somebody's boys. Let us pray for them. Let us write to them. Think how you would feel if you were a young man in the service, way over in Korea, and at the end of a hard day if you came to your bunk at night and found a letter from some of your folk or your friends, to help buoy you up.

TESTIMONY

Well, I want to bear you my testimony that I know that God lives. I know that he hears prayers. I know that his Spirit can dwell with men, and I know it can withdraw from them, and I know it is up to you and me to live close enough to the Lord that we can have the companionship of his sweet Spirit.

May the Lord bless us that we may take to our homes and apply in our lives the messages of these conferences. Oh, parents, stay close to your children. Love them with all your hearts. Hold them near and dear to you. They need you today as they have never needed you before.

May God bless the youth that they may stay close to the Church, and that we will be mindful of them, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

We are happy to see in the audience the state, county, and city officials, the state superintendent of schools, the president and deans from the Brigham Young University and the Ricks College, members of the Church Board of Education, and the Church Department of Education including directors of Institutes and Seminaries. We are pleased to express our pleasure at the presence of Dr. Wilbur LaRoe of Washington, who is present here today, and who will deliver the address at the inauguration ceremonies for Dr. Ernest L. Wilkinson, President of the Brigham Young University. These services will be held in the new Fieldhouse at Provo tomorrow at ten o'clock a.m. All are invited, whether you have received a printed invitation or not.

Among the educators present I wish specifically to mention the president of the Brigham Young University, the president of the University of Utah, the president of the Utah State Agricultural College, the president of the Weber College, and the president of the Branch Agricultural College at Cedar City. I have just been reminded too that Mrs. Wilbur LaRoe is accompanying her husband on this official visit, and we extend a hearty welcome to both.

The Tabernacle Choir will now sing: "Lamb of God," Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting.

The closing prayer will be offered by Edward B. Clark, Patriarch to the Davis Stake, following which this conference will stand adjourned until two o'clock this afternoon.

The proceedings of this afternoon's session will be broadcast over all stations as heretofore announced, and over television.

The choir singing for this session has been furnished by the Tabernacle Choir, Elder Cornwall conducting, and Elder Asper at the organ.

---

The Choir sang an anthem, "Lamb of God," after which the closing prayer was offered by Edward E. Clark, Patriarch to the Davis Stake.

Conference adjourned until 2:00 p.m.

THIRD DAY

AFTERNOON MEETING

The concluding session of the Conference convened at 2:00 p.m., Sunday, October 7th.

President David O. McKay:

This is the concluding session of the One Hundred Twenty-second Semi-annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City.

These services are being broadcast in the Assembly Hall and in Barratt Hall, 60 North Main, over a loud-speaking system, and by television.

The proceedings will be broadcast also over Station KSL, Salt Lake City, and, by arrangement through KSL, over the stations named in the first session of this conference.

This session will also be televised over the KSL television station, channel 5.

The music is furnished by the Tabernacle Choir under the direction of J. Spencer Cornwall, conductor, and Alexander Schreiner at the organ.

We shall begin this service by the Tabernacle Choir singing: "O Praise Ye God."

The opening prayer will be offered by Elder Elias Peterson, Patriarch to the North Weber Stake.

---

Singing by the Choir, "O Praise Ye God."

Elias Peterson, Patriarch in the North Sevier Stake, offered the invocation.

The Tabernacle Choir sang the anthem, "Hear Our Prayer."

President David O. McKay:

Musical harmony and expression sublime!

Following Elder Joseph F. Merrill of the Council of the Twelve, who will now speak to us, will be Milton R. Hunter of the First Council of the Seventy.

ELDER JOSEPH F. MERRILLOf the Council of the Twelve Apostles*

Brethren, sisters, and radio listeners: During the few minutes allotted to me, I purpose talking about a few matters that I feel are important enough to justify my asking your attention to them. They are not new, but they are current and vitally concern us in our daily lives. They have been much discussed but are in need of more attention than they have yet received from many of us. They have to do with both our material and spiritual well-being. They are directed to our own Church people, but we invite all others to consider them.

The Apostle Paul wrote, as you know, these words:

Know ye not that ye are the temple of God and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?

If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are. (1 Cor. 3:16-17.)

THE WORD OF WISDOM

As a means of preserving our bodies from certain types of defilement (destruction), the Lord gave to the Church in its very beginning, and to the human family generally, a revelation that has properly been called a law of health, better known among us as the Word of Wisdom, printed as section eighty-nine of the book of Doctrine and Covenants. Years ago I was present in a meeting where a prominent non-Mormon doctor of medicine referred to the Word of Wisdom as the Lord's Law of Health and said so far as he knew it was the best brief statement in the English language of the conditions that must be observed if good health continued. This is a truth related not only to the material world but to the spiritual realm as well, as has been said several times in this conference, quoting Joseph Smith in the Doctrine and Covenants. We get no blessing from God except by obeying the law upon which the blessing is predicated. I repeat, good health is continued only if we obey the laws of health.

In the revelation referred to, the Lord said liquor and tobacco are not good for man—truths that have since been abundantly confirmed by the observations and research work of highly-qualified investigators. However, in the revelation the Lord did not give reasons; it was unnecessary to do so. Some of them were already known. The Lord knew others would be discovered by his inquisitive children.

Let us summarize a few of the authoritative statements relative to the effects of liquor and tobacco. As to tobacco, it contains nicotine, one of the most deadly poisons known to the pharmacist. It affects injuriously the heart, the brain and mental powers, the nervous system, the kidneys and elimination organs, the muscular system, etc., thus weakening the body with the result that it is less resistant to various kinds of disease.

FACTS ABOUT TOBACCO

Dr. Irving Fisher of Yale University, long noted as a writer on matters relative to human health, wrote, among other things in the preface to Dr. Frank L. Wood's book What You Should Know about Tobacco, the following:

I have had unusual opportunities to become familiar with the many-sided tobacco problem. The evidence now exists sufficient to show that no one who smokes can achieve the best of which he or she is capable, whether this be a foot race, a prize fight, a golf game, a rifle score, writing, speaking, singing, acting, performing on violin, piano, or typewriter, attainment of health, strength, endurance, beauty, glamor, or any other excellence on which men and women set their hearts. It is time that those ambitious in all other lines of work should also learn the truth that tobacco harms, never helps.

The use of tobacco shortens life. This fact was satisfactorily demonstrated to the scientific world by Dr. Raymond Pearl of Johns Hopkins University, who published fifteen years ago a research paper in which he showed that on an average heavy smokers die about ten years sooner than non-smokers and moderate smokers from three to five years sooner. Everybody knows that college athletic coaches do not permit their boys to smoke. Yes, the use of tobacco is injurious to man.

EFFECTS OF ALCOHOL

Now relative to alcohol: Some of the facts relative to the injurious effects of consumed alcohol are briefly stated by the eminent authority, Dr. Haven Emerson, as follows:

1. We have learned that alcohol, as commonly used today, causes more diseases, disability, and death than any other cause of ill health which is wholly in the power of the individual to prevent and avoid.

2. Medical sciences have learned and found that alcohol is not a food, a stimulant, or harmful only in drunkenness. That was the former belief. The liver, stomach, and heart were supposed to suffer only from drunkenness. Those are the least of the damages alcohol causes. Deaths from alcoholism are the least of the harm that alcohol causes. It is the constant and severe interference with human relations, the disturbance of the conduct of people to each other, that is the major damage that alcohol does in our society today.

3. Alcohol is a depressant narcotic drug, not a stimulant. That cannot be too often repeated. The effects of alcohol are almost entirely, if not wholly, to be experienced by its toxic damage to the central nervous system, the brain, and spinal cord. It is upon those tissues that the action of alcohol shows most strikingly. The only thing that distinguishes man from the brute is his power of self-direction, self-control, judgment, discretion. Those things are the first qualities of man that are destroyed by alcohol, long before there is any obvious interference with the muscles and motor functions of the body.

4. Alcohol is not describable as a food which forms any part of a wholesome diet.

5. In recent times, it has been observed that the lifesaving reflexes of the body are all slowed from five to ten percent by amounts of alcohol too small to be socially appreciable, and in amounts far smaller than can ever be registered under the law or by the police as indicating intoxication. In amounts too small to be appreciated, alcohol slows the reflexes of the body, which we are endowed with to protect ourselves from destruction—the nervous reflex action of the eye, the ear, the muscles—which we depend on in this world of speed and power and uncontrolled human association. The evidence shows there is no form of human activity so far tested which does not show inferiority of performance as the invariable sequel of the absorption of alcohol in amounts smaller than would be recognized as of toxic significance.

6. Perhaps the most important of all is the positive statement that no evidence of improvement in human health has so far been found to result from the use of alcohol in the normal human being.

7. Alcohol, as used, causes many times more deaths than the infectious diseases.

CAUSE OF HIGHWAY ACCIDENTS

Thus writes Dr. Haven Emerson, a world-recognized authority on the effects of alcohol on the human body. Scientific observations and experiments absolutely prove that alcohol in amounts as small as only "a drink or two" causes a slowing of the reflexes of the body sufficient to result in many highway accidents. But the driver usually believes that this small amount makes him more alert—a safer driver after the drink than before. But this is not the case, as every traffic officer knows. Alcohol is a deceiver; it lies to the driver. Instead of making him more alert, it really makes him less alert and less safe in his driving. According to the estimates of the National Safety Council, and others qualified to give estimates, from twenty-five to forty percent of all highway accidents are due to drinking drivers—the majority of them having had, so they say, only "a drink or two." Such a driver is far more dangerous than the one who knows he is drunk.

This matter of traffic accidents in the United States is very important. It is said that they resulted last year in thirty-six thousand fatalities—more fatalities than we suffered during the same period in the Korean war.

SOCIAL AND SPIRITUAL EFFECTS

So far I have spoken only of the effects of alcohol on the body of the drinker, but there are social and spiritual effects of far greater importance that result from his drinking.

It is perhaps not so important what the drinker does to himself—great as this is—as to what he does to others—how his drinking affects others. At the conference of the American Association of Industrial Physicians and Surgeons last April, it was said by the medical director of a large steel company that hang-overs cost factories one billion man-hours every year, a tremendous loss in goods and wages, thus affecting many more people than the drinkers.

FIRST PRESIDENCY MESSAGE

In a session of the October conference of the Church in 1942, President Clark presented a timely message of the First Presidency in which was written the following:

Over the earth, and it seems particularly in America, the demon drink is in control. Drunken with strong drink, men have lost their reason; their counsel has been destroyed; their judgment and vision are fled; they reel forward to destruction.

Drink brings cruelty into the home; it walks arm and arm with poverty; its companions are disease and plague; it puts chastity to flight; it knows neither honor nor fair dealing; it is a total stranger to truth; it drowns conscience; it is the bodyguard of evil; it curses all who touch it.

Drink has brought more woe and misery, broken more hearts, wrecked more homes, committed more crimes, filled more coffins, than all the wars the world has suffered.

In the light of these factual statements, forcibly and eloquently put by President Clark, how is it that any sane member of the Church believing in the divine call of Joseph Smith, would dare to indulge in drink? Does he not know the sin and the danger of indulgence? This action not only harms him in person, thus defiling his body, but it makes him a danger to his family, to his associates, to society, and an offender of God.

DANGER OF MODERATE DRINKING

But there are many people who protest that drinking in moderation is not harmful. Have I not pointed out that the most dangerous potential killer on the highway is the driver who has taken only "a drink or two"? Is it not through example that we yield our most potent influence? Drinking a single glass is likely far more strongly to influence others to drink than would drinking a jug. Yes, the example of participation in a cocktail party, of drinking in a convivial set, of taking a glass with a friend—any of these is likely to be taken as a license by the unwary to indulge.

There is a grave danger in alcohol of which the novice may not be aware—the danger of becoming an alcoholic—of becoming one who drinks to excess, unable to control his drinking. Mrs. Marty Mann, a recovered alcoholic, executive director, National Committee for Education on Alcoholism, said a few years ago in a national radio broadcast that the years of her acute chronic alcoholism were the most painful years of her life. "I suffered constantly," she said, "not just one kind of pain, but all kinds of pain. I suffered physically, mentally, emotionally, financially, and socially—in every department of my life. I tell you, honestly, and on behalf of those three million human beings (alcoholics) that alcoholism is the most painful disease known to man."

A careful study shows that about one of every sixteen persons who takes his first glass becomes an alcoholic. But whether this will be his fate cannot be determined in advance, strange as it may seem. Hence, safety demands a refusal to take the first drink.

But it is not always easy to say, "I do not drink." Natural curiosity to learn how the stuff tastes, the invitation of agreeable companions, the fear of being regarded as a sissy or of leaning over backwards, or of throwing a damper on a jolly group, memory of attractive advertisements seen or read—one or more of these and other temptations must be waved aside by a refusal. But the fact that it is "smarter not to drink" is a truth that will give the necessary courage to everyone who is accustomed to pray and to respect himself. The Lord helps him who worthily tries to help himself.

THE PROBLEM OF DRINK

The problem of drink looked at in the light of national interests is one of the most difficult and dangerous this country faces. The custom of drinking prevails in all strata of American Society, among the rich and the poor, the old and the young, the educated and the ignorant, the strong and the weak, the official and the military. Drink is responsible, in part at least, for many of our existing difficulties. The per capita consumption in the District of Columbia is much the highest in the country—5.37 gallons in 1950, compared with 1.24 gallons for the whole United States, more than four times greater in Washington than the average. The consumption in Utah was 0.74 gallons, fourteen percent of that in Washington.

Does this great consumption in Washington have any significance? It was reported that at the conferences with Stalin at Teheran and Yalta during the war an abundance of liquor was in evidence. Did the presence of liquor have any influence on the harmful agreements (harmful to us) that were reached?

Crime in its many varieties is current in the United States, and the records show that nearly all criminals use liquor and tobacco. And as you know, many crimes are committed because the perpetrator is under the influence of liquor. As you also know, many destructive fires, causing loss of many lives and enormous losses of property, are due to the carelessness of smokers.

EVILS OF INDULGENCE

Indulgence in alcoholic beverages and tobacco is not only injurious to body, mind, and spirit—therefore hurtful to the consumer and greatly so to society—but it is very expensive, estimated to be about fifteen billion dollars annually in the United States—more than is spent for education, libraries, and charity. The picture is dismal indeed. Why is it, how is it, that intelligent, sensible human beings will persist in consuming liquor and tobacco in the light of the many, some dreadful, evils resulting from this consumption? Can it be that they are not well-informed of these effects? This is probably true in many cases, especially with the youth. Hence education is one of the means that should be employed intensively among all ill-informed persons. So many and great are the evils of indulgence that all feasible means should be employed to eliminate them. Certainly all schools should participate in this movement.

But as this movement is intensified, so will counter movements be, we may be assured; "conspiring men" will intensify their "evils and designs." Satan, the devil, is not asleep.

But Latter-day Saints—members of this Church—believing and knowing that God has spoken in modern times on the subject of liquor and tobacco, will you not be aroused, become converted and abstain from indulgence in the use of these things? Nothing less is expected of you by the Church and by non-members who know our teachings relative to them. Be wise, not foolish.

May the Lord help all of us to be sincerely obedient to his will, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER MILTON R. HUNTEROf the First Council of Seventy*

My dear brethren and sisters, I humbly ask an interest in your faith and prayers, and the Spirit of God to rest upon me on this occasion.

PREACHING OF GOSPEL

Shortly before the ascension of Jesus Christ, our Lord and Master, he gave his Apostles their final commission, saying unto them:

... Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature.

He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned. (Mark 16:15-16.)

After the ascension of the Lord, the Apostles went forth humbly, faithfully, diligently, from town to town, from village to village, from city to city, declaring the good message which the Lord had given them; preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ; establishing Christian communities. Gradually, one Christian community after another arose in the Mediterranean world. The gospel spread from land to land.

But also as time passed, the Apostles received very severe persecutions, which resulted in the death—the martyrdom—of all of them except John the Beloved. They sealed their testimonies with their blood, dying for the eternal truths which they had embraced.

FALSE TEACHINGS

As time went on, and as Paul the Apostle and others of the great prophets had predicted, heresies crept into the Christian Church. False teachings and false doctrines came into Christianity. Especially is this true toward the end of the fourth century A. D. At that time the Roman government made the Christian Church the state religion and outlawed all pagan religions. This resulted in thousands and thousands of pagans flocking into the Christian Church, naturally without being converted. They brought with them their choice pagan ideas, practices, religious rituals and doctrines, bringing about an adulteration of the gospel of Jesus Christ, which resulted in what is known as the Great Apostasy.

If the Savior had come back to earth at the beginning of the fifth century A.D., I doubt whether he would have recognized the Christian Church as the one that claimed descent from that which he had established, so far had it gone astray. Christianity had actually become a composite of Christian beliefs, practices, and doctrines; Jewish teachings and rituals; Greek, Roman, and Egyptian pagan philosophies; and pagan religions of various brands. The Holy Priesthood had been withdrawn from the earth. The power of godliness was no longer present in the Christian Church. Thus there was a complete falling away from the gospel which had been established by the Son of Man. The Church lay in darkness, and the darkness enveloped the earth. This spiritual darkness continued for hundreds and hundreds of years.

GOSPEL RESTORED

Finally, during the early part of the nineteenth century, Jesus Christ, the God of heaven and earth, stretched forth his hand again to reveal once more the gospel plan of salvation to the human family and to establish his Church upon earth. This great and marvelous work came about in fulfillment of the prophecies made by many of the ancient prophets. They had predicted that there would be a restoration of all things in the latter days and that all the rights, rituals, doctrines, powers, priesthoods, and ordinances necessary for the salvation and exaltation of the human family would be restored. (See Acts 3:21.)

From heavenly beings this gospel was restored to the Prophet Joseph Smith, and the promise given by the Lord that it would never be taken from the earth again nor given to another people. (See D. & C. 27:13.) As part of that restoration, the Holy Melchizedek Priesthood was brought back to earth again. The Savior, as he had done in the Meridian of Time, established offices in that priesthood. In this dispensation they consisted of a First Presidency, Twelve Apostles, seventies, elders, and others to carry forward the work of the Lord.

COMMANDMENT IN PRESENT DAY

The commandment from Jesus Christ, our Savior, came to the Twelve in modern times, just as it did to the Apostles in his day:

Therefore, go ye into all the world; and whatsoever place ye cannot go unto ye shall send, that the testimony may go from you into all the world unto every creature.

And as I said unto mine apostles, even so I say unto you, for you are mine apostles, even God's high priests; ye are they whom my Father hath given me; ye are my friends;

Therefore, as I said unto mine apostles I say unto you again, that every soul who believeth on your words, and is baptized by water for the remission of sins, shall receive the Holy Ghost. . . .

Verily, verily, I say unto you, they who believe not on your words, and are not baptized in water in my name, for the remission of their sins, that they may receive the Holy Ghost, shall be damned, and shall not come into my Father's kingdom where my Father and I am.

And this revelation unto you, and commandment, is in force from this very hour upon all the world, and the gospel is unto all who have not received it. (Ibid., 84:62-64, 74-75.)

ASSIGNMENT TO THE TWELVE

Acting in accordance with this revelation and also several others, such as the one which appointed the Twelve Apostles to hold the keys of opening the doors of the gospel of Jesus Christ to every nation throughout the earth; the revelation to the effect that the gospel should be taken to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, preparatory to the coming of the Lord, and other similar pronouncements, the Twelve Apostles did go forth throughout the world. During the past one hundred and twenty-one years, they have opened the doors of the gospel to most of the nations.

The history of the work of the Twelve in carrying forward their missionary assignment presents a marvelous story. In addition to the great work that they have done, the Apostles also have sent many other gospel messengers to the places where they could not go.

OTHERS CALLED

Now, the Lord, in establishing the gospel on the earth in the latter days, did not give revelations entirely to the effect that the Twelve were to be the only ministers of the restored truths. He also gave revelations to the seventy, designating them as "especial witnesses" of Christ, and calling them to be ministers of the restored gospel. "... first unto the Gentiles and then to the Jews." (Ibid., 107:25-26, 34, 38, 93-97.) And again, he also gave a revelation to every faithful elder in the Church, commanding him to proclaim the message of salvation. He said unto the elders:

Go ye into all the world, preach the gospel to every creature, acting in the authority which I have given you, baptizing in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.

And he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned. (Ibid., 68:8-9.)

During the past hundred years, thousands upon thousands of elders have gone forth in harmony with this divine command. I believe there is no time in the history of the human family where a Church has put forth a greater missionary effort in accordance with the command of God than has the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints during the past one hundred and twenty-one years.

The Lord not only commanded the elders to go forth and preach the gospel, but he also gave a command in a revelation to Joseph Smith to the effect that every person who is baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is morally obligated in the sight of God to do missionary work. In other words, he is to proclaim the words of eternal life to the honest in heart. In fact, the commandment of the Lord to every baptized member of the Church of Jesus Christ is as follows: "... and it becometh every man who hath been warned to warn his neighbor." (Ibid., 88:81.)

If every Latter-day Saint would take that revelation seriously, thousands and thousands of the honest in heart who live among us would gladly receive the words of eternal life and affiliate themselves with the true Church and kingdom of God.

LIVING OF GOSPEL

If all Latter-day Saints would live the gospel in every detail, as it has been revealed from the mouth of Jehovah through the prophets, our lights would so shine to the world that multitudes of good people would actually ask to join the Church of Jesus Christ. Our neighbors would see the light shining forth from Latter-day Saints, because the gospel had made them live such good lives, and they would readily accept this Church as being "the only true and living Church upon the face of the whole earth." (Ibid., 1:30.) Certainly the gospel would then roll forth throughout the world, as Daniel predicted it would, like a great "stone cut out of the mountain without hands." (See Daniel 2:27-49.) It would roll forth until it "filled the whole earth."

One of the obstacles we meet in our efforts to spread the gospel message is the fact that so many Latter-day Saints do not live the gospel. And, on the other hand, many members of the Church do not take the time to tell their neighbors about the gospel. They do not invite their neighbors to attend Church with them nor to come in contact with Church influence in other ways. I sincerely believe that there are many honest in heart who would like to investigate the gospel truths and later on probably join the Church if they were invited to participate and were encouraged to do so. God will hold us accountable to do our share along this line. We must warn our neighbors.

MISSIONARY ASSIGNMENT

When the Lord established the gospel through the Prophet Joseph Smith, he gave the members of the Church many great assignments. I believe that there is no assignment that the Lord gave to the Church greater than that of missionary work.

If one should read the Doctrine and Covenants through and tabulate the various subjects that the Lord revealed information on, he would find that missionary work holds a dominant place. In my study of modern revelation, I have found that there is no subject that the Lord revealed more about, that he talked on more times and in more ways than the missionary assignment. In fact, the gospel of the kingdom must be taken unto every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people preparatory to the coming of the Lord; and after this great assignment has been successfully completed, according to the words of Jesus Christ, our Lord and Savior, "... then shall the end come." (D. & C. 133:37; Matthew 24:14.)

Not only must the gospel be taken "to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people" here in mortality, but it must also be preached to all of our departed ancestors in the spirit world. A great missionary campaign must go forward until all who have died without the law of the gospel will have the opportunity to accept or reject it. Temple work will not be completely effective without missionary work. In fact, the people in the spirit world have to learn the various gospel truths, receive the gospel plan of salvation, repent of their sins, and prepare themselves to receive the temple ordinances which have been performed for them vicariously before that great work reaches a fulfilment and gives to the people the blessings that they should receive.

Therefore, it is very evident that missionary work is one of the greatest assignments which God has placed upon the Church. In fact, the Prophet Joseph Smith on one occasion said, "After all that has been said, the greatest and most important duty is to preach the gospel [of Jesus Christ]." (Joseph Fielding Smith's Teachings of the Prophet Joseph Smith, p. 113.)

THE THING OF MOST WORTH

When the gospel was being restored to earth during the early part of the nineteenth century, a number of brethren came to the Prophet Joseph Smith and asked what the Lord would have them do in this great work. Their concern was to learn what would be the most important thing for them to do. The word of the Lord came to the Whitmer men as follows:

And now, behold, I say unto you, that the thing which will be of the most worth unto you will be to declare repentance unto this people, that you may bring souls unto me, that you may rest with them in the kingdom of my Father. (D. & C. 15:6; 16:6.)

I believe that that revelation applies as aptly to you and me as it did to John and Peter Whitmer, Jr. I know of no way whereby we can help to bring salvation to our own souls better than by doing all that we can to bring salvation to the souls of others. In other words; we save our own souls in proportion to the service we render to the honest in heart who are seeking after truth by giving to them the gospel of Jesus Christ, or the plan of life and salvation.

There are many other revelations that could be cited which indicate the importance of the missionary assignment, but we haven't time on this occasion to quote them.

ENCOURAGEMENT TO SEVENTIES

As a member of the First Council of the Seventy, the duty rests upon me and others of the Council to help carry the message of salvation to the honest in heart and to do our utmost in promoting missionary work. I would like to take this opportunity, therefore, to encourage all the seventies throughout the Church to engage in missionary work that they might magnify their callings as seventies. If we fail to do this, we may stand under condemnation at the judgment day for not having magnified our priesthood.

The First Presidency has asked for three seventies from each quorum—a thousand seventies—to go into the mission fields this fall. I should like to encourage the stake presidents, the bishops, the seventies, and all who are concerned, to cooperate on this great assignment and to respond to the call of the First Presidency.

The call from the First Presidency is a call from the Lord, because these men are the duly authorized servants of God here upon the earth. They hold the keys of the kingdom; and God the Eternal Father and his Only Begotten Son accept all that they do in the office of their calling as if these acts had been performed personally by Jesus Christ.

STAKE MISSIONARY PROGRAM

Also, I would like to encourage all of us as Church members to take greater advantage of the stake missionary program. I am sure we have done a good job in the past, but I feel confident that we have hardly scratched the surface. I am of the opinion that there are thousands and thousands of seekers after truth who live among us who would receive the gospel of Jesus Christ if they had a fair chance. If we would spend more time in doing missionary work, great would be our joy in this life, and eternal should be our reward in the world to come. The Savior made this point clear and definite wherein he said:

Remember the worth of souls is great in the sight of God; . . .

Wherefore, you are called to cry repentance unto this people.

And if it so be that you should labor all your days in crying repentance unto this people, and bring, save it be one soul unto me, how great shall be your joy with him in the kingdom of my Father!

And now, if your joy will be great with one soul that you have brought unto me into the kingdom of my Father, how great will be your joy if you should bring many souls unto me! (Ibid., 18:10, 14-16.)

My dear brothers and sisters, I do humbly trust and pray that God will bless us to the extent that we will not only continue with the great missionary spirit that we have shown in the past, but that we shall also catch a fulness of the spirit and greatness of this assignment and vigorously carry it forward until we do prepare the world for the coming of the Savior, that he may reign as Lord of lords and King of kings.

TESTIMONY

I bear testimony that this is the true gospel of Jesus Christ. I know this fact as I know that I am alive. I know that Joseph Smith is a prophet of God and one of the greatest prophets that has ever lived on this earth. I know also that if you and I will live according to the teachings of the commandments that we have received in the Church of Jesus Christ, someday we shall come back into the presence of God and receive exaltation, which he has declared to be the greatest gift that he has in store for those who love him and keep his commandments.

May God bless us in carrying forward this great missionary assignment and in all of our walks of life, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER BRUCE R. McCONKIE
Of the First Council of Seventy

Two great truths must be accepted by mankind if they shall save themselves: first, that Jesus is the Christ, the Messiah, the Only Begotten, the very Son of God, whose atoning blood and resurrection save us from the physical and spiritual death brought to us by the Fall; and next, that God has restored to the earth, in these last days, through the Prophet Joseph, his Holy Priesthood with the fulness of the everlasting gospel, for the salvation of all men on the earth. Without these truths man may not hope for the riches of the life hereafter. (See THE IMPROVEMENT ERA, vol. 38, pp. 204-205.)

Those words were given by the First Presidency of the Church in a testimony to the world on the occasion of the one hundredth anniversary of the establishment of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles in this dispensation, and if the Spirit will give me utterance, I would like to say a few things with reference to them.

SALVATION CENTERED IN CHRIST

We are the people of God. We are the members of the kingdom of God on earth, which is this Church, and we have the knowledge and light and revelation which causes us to know that salvation is centered in Christ. We believe in Christ. We are the Church of Christ. We believe that through his atoning blood and the sacrifice which he worked out, all men will be raised in immortality, that is to say, the body and the spirit will be reunited, a resurrection will be brought to pass; and we believe that those who obey the laws and ordinances of the gospel will gain, in addition to immortality, the glorious gift of eternal life.

We have the witness and knowledge that Christ was the First-born of the Father, that in the spirit world, in the pre-existent eternities, he obeyed the laws of the Father and by diligence and righteousness ascended even there to the status of a God.

We recognize him as the Creator, under the Father, of the world and all that in it is. We worship him as the God who revealed his saving truths to all the ancient prophets, those mighty leaders who have come in every age when he has had a people on the earth.

We believe that he came into the world, born of Mary, literally and actually, as we are born of our mothers; that he came into the world, born of God the Eternal Father, the Almighty Elohim, literally and actually, as we are born of our earthly fathers.

We believe that he had the power to lay down his life, and the power to take it up again, because Mary was his mother and God was his father.

We certify of Christ; we preach of Christ; and we have the knowledge that salvation is in and through him and him alone. "Salvation was, and is, and is to come, in and through the atoning blood of Christ, the Lord Omnipotent" (see Mosiah 3:18), and

"how great the importance," as Lehi expressed it, "to make these things known unto the inhabitants of the earth." (See II Nephi 2:8.)

ACCEPTANCE OF PROPHETS

Now it is not possible, in my judgment, for people in the world to accept Christ and come to salvation, unless at one and the same time they accept the prophets whom Christ has sent and receive the administration of holy ordinances under their hands.

Christ and his prophets are one. We could not believe in Christ if there were not prophets to declare Christ and his saving truths unto us. The Apostle Paul reasoned on this subject, and he said:

... how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard?
and how shall they hear without a preacher?

And how shall they preach, except they be sent? (Romans 10:14-15.)

Except for Christ, there would be no salvation. Except for the prophets of God, sent in the various ages of the earth's history, the testimony of Christ would not be borne, the message of salvation would not be taught, and there would be no legal administrators who could perform the ordinances of salvation for men, that is, perform them so they will be binding on earth and sealed eternally in the heavens.

So it is that the Lord has sent prophets. No one would suppose that he could believe in Christ and reject Peter, James, and John. The Lord and his prophets go hand in hand. Christ said, "I am the true vine, and my Father is the husbandman"; then he said to his Apostles, "Ye are the branches." (John 15:1, 5.) The branches and the vine are connected. He taught also that if the branches were torn away from him, they would wither and die and be cast into the fire. If people in the world would pick the fruit of eternal life off the branches, they have to accept the prophets, for the branches are the prophets.

GOSPEL DISPENSATIONS

This has been the system that the Lord has had from the days of Father Adam to the present moment, and it will continue eternally. The Lord sent Adam in the beginning to teach the principles of salvation. Adam had a dispensation of the gospel, that is, the Lord revealed direct from heaven to Adam, dispensed to him, the saving truths; and anybody that lived in the days of Adam, to be saved in the celestial kingdom, had to accept Jesus Christ in whom salvation lay, and also had to accept Adam as the revealer, the prophet, the legal administrator who taught the laws of salvation and administered the ordinances thereof. It went in just that manner in every succeeding dispensation.

In the days of Enoch, if a man would be saved in the celestial kingdom, he accepted Christ as the Savior of the world and Enoch as his prophet. And so in the days of Abraham, of Moses, of Peter, James, and John, and of this day.

I suppose that the Church procedure was not too different in former days. They had testimony meetings then, and when people stood up in them, as they were moved upon by the Holy Ghost, they bore witness that Jesus Christ was the Son of God who would come, and that Adam was his prophet, or Enoch, or the head of whatever dispensation was involved; and that is the way it is today. We certify of Jesus Christ, and we certify of Joseph Smith, and they are one. They are united perfectly.

For he that receiveth my servants receiveth me;
And he that receiveth me receiveth my Father;
And he that receiveth my Father receiveth my Father's kingdom;
therefore all that my Father hath shall be given unto him. (D. & C. 84:36-38.)

VISION OF ABRAHAM

Now may I mention the great vision that the Patriarch Abraham had? You recall that the Lord showed him the pre-existent hosts and, more particularly, the noble and great in that world. Abraham saw them, the intelligences, the spirit sons of God our Father, the noble and great spirit who were among them, and the Lord said to him, "... Abraham, thou art one of them; thou wast chosen before thou wast born." (See Abraham 3:23.)

As with Abraham, so with all the prophets of God. Sometimes someone may wonder, that is, someone in the world, how is it that the Father and the Son would appear to a fourteen-and-a-half-year-old boy in the spring of 1820, to usher in, as we express it, the Dispensation of the Fulness of Times.

Joseph Smith sat with Father Abraham in the councils of eternity, and Joseph Smith was ordained as Abraham was ordained to come down and be the head of a gospel dispensation here. He had ascended by virtue of obedience, intelligence, progression, and righteousness to a high state of spiritual perfection in that world. When he came here, he brought with him the talents and abilities, the deep spirituality, and the innate righteousness that he developed back there under the tutelage of God the Father.

In the eternal worlds, the Firstborn spirit offspring of the Father was Jehovah who is Jesus Christ. He was pre-eminent. Standing next to Christ was the great spirit, Michael. Christ was ordained as a lamb slain from the foundation of the world, chosen to come here and be the Redeemer. Michael was prepared and chosen and sent here as Father Adam, the first man of all men, the first flesh upon the earth, the head of the human race, and the presiding high priest, under Christ, over all the earth.

PLACE OF JOSEPH SMITH

The spirit men who were associated with Christ and with Adam in the pre-existent eternities, and who were more valiant than all their fellows, were the ones chosen to head the various dispensations of the gospel. One of these was the Prophet Joseph Smith. It doesn't take much reflection then, it seems to me, for us to know that Joseph Smith was one of the dozen greatest spirits that God the Eternal Father had in all the councils of eternity; that he came so as to be here at the appointed time and at the express hour and at the very moment that the Lord designed to open this dispensation. He was here to take his part in that event.

I do not think that the Father and the Son would have appeared to an ordinary fourteen-and-a-half-year-old boy, if he had gone out into that grove of trees to ask the Lord which of all the churches was right. I think the Lord had been preparing Joseph Smith for that event from all eternity; that Joseph Smith had the spiritual stature, the strength for righteousness that enabled him to endure the vision; that he had the talent and ability to press forward in righteousness in the kingdom of God on earth: first, to establish it; and then, somewhat, to perfect its organization before he was taken home, before he sealed his testimony with his blood.

In my judgment Christ and his prophets are one; and salvation in this day is, first, through Christ and his atoning sacrifice, and it is, second, through accepting the atoning sacrifice and the doctrines of Christ as they have been revealed by the Prophet Joseph Smith, and as they are taught by the living oracles who wear the mantle of the Prophet and stand at this moment at the head of the kingdom of God on earth.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCE

May I just tell you one experience that I had. I have never told this to any person before, except my wife. Six months ago in the Solemn Assembly, when the First Presidency of the Church were sustained, as I sat down here behind one of these lower pulpits, the voice of the Lord came into my mind as certainly, I am sure, as the voice of the Lord came into the mind of Enos, and the very words were formed, and it said:

"These are they whom I have chosen as the First Presidency of my Church. Follow them"—those few words.

I have had a testimony of the divinity of this work from my youth. I was reared in a family where love was the motive force, where my parents taught me righteousness, and I have grown up with a testimony. But that witness was an added assurance. It meant to me, if I hadn't known before, which I did know before, that this is the Lord's Church; that his hand is over it; that he organized it; that these men who preside are called of him; that they are his anointed; that if we will follow them as they follow Christ, we will have eternal life, which is my prayer for myself and for all Israel. In the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Tabernacle Choir and the congregation joined in singing the hymn, "I Need Thee Every Hour."

ELDER CLIFFORD E. YOUNG

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve

It has been a refining influence to attend this great conference. I cannot recall when I have felt more at peace than I have during these sessions. It seems to me that from the very beginning with President McKay's opening address, followed by others of the brethren including Brother Thomas E. McKay who spoke so beautifully and tenderly, everything done and said has contributed to a peace that I am sure we all feel, and we all felt as we sang that beautiful hymn, ["I Need Thee Every Hour."]

MARION G. ROMNEY

I was very grateful in the selection of Brother Marion G. Romney to the Quorum of the Twelve. I have been intimately associated with him for the past ten years—I had not known him prior to our being called to be Assistants—but I have learned to love him and to appreciate him for his sterling worth, for his integrity; and I say to you, my brethren and sisters, without any fear of contradiction, that I know of no man who has ever been chosen to fill this high and sacred trust who is better prepared and more worthy than is Marion G. Romney. I hope he will not feel embarrassed because of my saying this, but I say it from the depths of my heart.

I love these men. I have learned to love the Authorities as I have never loved them before. I was reared in a home where the Authorities of the Church were always held up to us as servants of the Almighty, men who were trying to their utmost to establish the Church and kingdom of God in the earth, men who were unselfish in their service. In our home it was regarded almost as a sin for anyone to say anything unkind of those whom God had chosen to direct the affairs of the Church.

I have been grateful for that heritage. I have tried to implant that in the hearts of my children. My wife was reared in the same atmosphere, and she too reflected in her life that absolute confidence and deep appreciation of those whom the Lord had chosen.

LESSONS FROM MISSIONARIES

I have recently had the experience of visiting two of our missions. Two very striking lessons were brought home to me as we labored with these missionaries, as we heard their testimonies, listened to their reports, and felt of their spirits. They told how they were proselyting, how they would go into the homes where they were invited in—many times they were turned down—and how they would teach the people.

First the missionaries would present to them the message of the restoration and the coming forth of the Book of Mormon. This would open up the way for a cottage meeting, and then they would teach the families how to pray. They would teach them that God hears and answers prayers. They would unfold the story of the restoration of the gospel, which of course would take them back to the teachings of our Savior and the promises that he made when he instructed his disciples:

Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.

Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. (Matthew 28:19-20.)

The elders go into homes, and they teach the investigators these divine concepts, prayer, faith in God, confidence in his work, to observe all things that the Lord has commanded, to render obedience to those divine principles by which we may enter into his kingdom and into his Church, teaching them the law of tithing, the Word of Wisdom, all of these things, my brethren and sisters, these cardinal concepts, and as we listened to the missionaries explain their methods, the reaction of the people to them, I felt and I say to you that people now are responding to the truth, perhaps more than ever in the history of the Church. As we listened to these reports, I thought, can we do less here at home than follow these divine concepts? Should we do less than teach in our homes family prayers, kneeling down and supplicating our Heavenly Father with our children night and morning? Should we do less than teach our children to observe the law of tithing, the law of the fast?

Can we do less than teach them all of these principles that we proclaim to the people of the world, obedience to which makes them eligible for membership in the Church?

That lesson has come home to me. Are we doing at home what we expect our missionaries to do in the world, and are we ourselves hiding our lights, setting our lights under a bushel, or are we letting our lights so shine, that others, seeing our good works, may be led to glorify our Heavenly Father?

MISSIONARY SACRIFICES

Another lesson that impressed me was this: We listened to some of the missionaries tell of their backgrounds. One young boy told of coming from a home in Idaho, of his widowed mother, with five children, the mother being left with a mortgaged farm, and the bishop came and asked if one of her boys could go on a mission.

The oldest was asked to go, and the mother said, "Bishop, he may go." That young man told of the struggles of his mother to make ends meet and to help him in the performance of his missionary labors, and he bore a strong testimony of the goodness of the Lord, not only to him, but also to that devoted mother who was making possible that mission.

Another one was by a young girl, and I never heard a stronger testimony—it was of another widowed mother. She comes from a stake in the east. The mother, going out and taking day work, made possible that girl's service in the mission field.

On my way home I happened to stop in the home of my daughter in Chicago, and she, not knowing that I knew, was telling me of the sacrifice of a widow in her ward that was making it possible for her daughter to labor in the mission field.

"Why," she said, "Dad, that good little woman takes whatever she can get to do without complaint."

PRESENT-DAY FAITH

We are inclined to tell about our forebears, of the heritage they have left for us. We have been reading in the Deseret News serially of the great work of President George Albert Smith's grandfather, Elder George A. Smith, of his colonizing in southern Utah, and the struggles of their living in wagons, of babies being born in those wagons, as they sought to establish a settlement at Parowan. All of these we read and are deeply touched and inspired. These things are a great heritage to us and to our children, but I say to you, my brethren and sisters, that we have today just as much faith in Israel as we ever had, and if we could hear all of these experiences that are a part of the lives of these missionaries, we would hear of the struggles, and many times the heartaches, that make possible these young men and women going into the mission field and giving of their time for two years or two and a half years to preach the gospel which means so much to you and to me and to the world.

EVIDENCE BUILDS TESTIMONIES

Verily, it is a testimony to us of this great work. Testimonies do not come all at once. They are accumulations of evidence, and these are just a few. They are the simple things.

I remember on one occasion of President Grant being in our home and having with him a good friend, a banker, from the East as his guest. President Grant had given him the story of Joseph Smith to read, and during our visit Brother Grant had had Sister Young sing, "Come, Come, Ye Saints."

As Sister Young concluded, that gentleman remarked, "That is an epic! That is one of the finest expressions of faith that I have ever heard in poetry." Then he made this remark: "President Grant, I have read 'Joseph Smith Tells His Own Story,' and I say to you that no imposter ever wrote it. It was written by one who believed in his own destiny."

Now, brethren and sisters, that is the beginning of a testimony, and if that man would follow through, from just those two little things, God would finally, through the power of the Holy Ghost, reveal to him the truth of all things. This is the promise that is made to the people of the world—

And when ye shall receive these things, I would exhort you that ye would ask God, the Eternal Father, in the name of Christ, if these things are not true; and if ye shall ask with a sincere heart, with real intent, having faith in Christ, he will manifest the truth of it unto you, by the power of the Holy Ghost.

And by the power of the Holy Ghost ye may know the truth of all things. (Moroni 10:4-5.)

That is the way testimonies come. Those are the promises that are given by our missionaries to the world. Can we do less at home than to accept those promises, to accept the Lord as we ask our friends in the world to accept him?

May God help us so to do, my brethren and sisters. I leave with you my testimony. I thank the Lord for my standing in this Church and for its great privileges and blessings; and I can sing with you as we sang a few minutes ago, "I Need Thee Every Hour," and I know he is near to us if we will serve him and keep his commandments. God bless you, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

• ELDER EZRA TAFT BENSON

Of the Council of the Twelve

My beloved brethren and sisters, there is something comforting in the scriptures regarding "he that shall endure to the end." (Matt. 24:13.) I must confess, however, that this to me has been one of the most glorious conferences that I have ever attended or ever expect to attend. I stand before you this afternoon in fasting and prayer, with a heart full of gratitude and thanksgiving to the Lord for the opportunity which has been mine to attend this conference.

RICHNESS OF CONFERENCE

I cannot recall another, unless it was the conference which I attended in April of 1947 after spending a year in war-torn Europe, that has impressed me so deeply as this conference which now draws to a close. And as a father in Israel, I am grateful beyond my power of expression that my wife and my family of six children have come under the influence of the spirit of this conference and the counsel which has been given by the brethren.

As we left the Friday morning session, my good wife turned to me and said, "Of all the conferences I have attended in the Church, I have never felt so richly the spirit as I did this morning during President McKay's opening address." I am sure she but echoed the feeling of hundreds of others. Truly, it has been a time of rejoicing. I would to God, my brethren and sisters, that every man, woman, and child in the world could have heard the counsel which has come to us during this conference and could have in their hearts a desire to accept that counsel because I have never seen greater evidence of spiritual statesmanship than that represented in the counsel given to us by the First Presidency of the Church. With all my heart I sustain them.

GRATITUDE FOR THE BRETHREN

I am grateful today that as a young man in far-off England I came under the influence of the leadership of President David O. McKay. I love him almost as I love my own father, and I sustain him with all my heart as prophet, seer, and revelator, which I testify to you he is. And I love with him his counselors as men of God. I love all these brethren with whom I have the glorious privilege of associating.

I am very grateful for the brethren who have been added to the General Authorities in this conference. I have known them all for a number of years, and to know them is to love them. I have received sufficient witness of the Spirit to satisfy my soul that the inspiration of heaven directed the presidency in the selection of these our brethren.

I am happy to welcome Elder Marion G. Romney into our Council. He knows something of the joy and happiness that awaits him in this body of men, and their close association with the First Presidency of the Church. I first met Brother Romney thirty-three years ago on a basketball floor in Rexburg. We were representing two Church schools in a friendly but vigorous competition. I have always felt that he saw very clearly, but on the question of the final score in that game he has never been fully clear. I have loved him for his devotion, for his integrity, and for his testimony, and I love these brethren who have been added as Assistants to the Twelve.

STREET MEETING EXPERIENCE

I have but one thought to add, my brethren and sisters. I have set aside two or three times that which I had in mind to say, as it has been treated much better than I could have treated the subject. I would like to bring this thought to your attention through a brief experience. Some months ago while attending a meeting of agricultural and farm cooperative leaders in an eastern city, I had occasion to leave my hotel room and cross the street to the nearby post office to mail some letters. As I entered the door of the post office on a side street, I heard words coming through an open window at the opposite side of the building, which sounded very much to me like a Mormon missionary preaching on the street.

After mailing the letters, I eased over to the open window, and there I saw two young men in blue serge suits standing on the corner of the steps of the post office. One young man was bearing his testimony regarding the coming forth of the Book of Mormon and the mission of the Prophet Joseph. He was earnest; he was sincere; he spoke with conviction. I thrilled with what he said. Some fifty or seventy-five people were listening in addition to the moving congregation that is always part of the street meeting. Standing at his side was his companion. In one arm were copies of the Book of Mormon, and the hats of the two brethren in his other hand.

When the street meeting ended, I went out and introduced myself, visited with them a moment, and then I turned to the young man who had been holding the literature in his arm and said, "Elder, what were you doing while your companion was preaching and bearing testimony?" The answer filled my soul with thanksgiving. He said, "Brother Benson, I was praying to God that my companion would say the right thing that would touch the hearts of the people and bring them a conviction of the truth of this great latter-day work."

SUPPORT FOR ONE ANOTHER

Support for one another, that is the one thought that I have to leave with you, my brethren and sisters. One of our great needs as a people is greater, more loyal support for one another. You see it demonstrated in the leadership of the Church. It is very common out in the stakes and the missions, and, oh, how important it is that we uphold and sustain one another in our labors.

What do you do when one of your associates is standing before the public attempting to do his duty? And when he does a particularly good job, maybe performing even beyond your own ability, what is the reaction in your heart? Do you have a little pang of jealousy, or do you rejoice and thank God for the manner in which he has magnified your associate? If you do the latter, you have one of the marks of greatness. If there comes a feeling of jealousy, a wish that you might be in his place, then you have not learned the lesson fully of mutual support and true loyalty.

God help us to support one another. May it start in the home as we support our families. May there be a spirit of loyalty, unity, love, and mutual respect. May husbands be loyal to their wives, true to them, love them, strive to ease their burdens, and share the responsibility for the care, training, and the rearing of the children. May mothers and wives show a spirit of helpfulness to their husbands, uphold and sustain them in their priesthood duties, and be loyal and true to the calls that come to them from the priesthood of God.

SUPPORT OF WIVES

Occasionally when attending stake conferences, and members of the stake presidency and other local brethren are speaking. I indulge in this practice—I look over the audience and try to pick out the wives of the men who are speaking. I like to look into their faces as their husbands are up bearing their testimonies and preaching the gospel.

Sometimes you will find a wife who puts her head down as if she felt sorry for the poor man. But more often you will find the type of support which brings her to look squarely at him, and you can just feel and see in her face that she is praying for him, that she has faith in him, that she wants him to succeed. In such cases it is likely that before they came to the meeting, they knelt together in family prayer, and if she were called upon to lead in that prayer, she invoked God's blessings upon her husband, in the event he would be called upon in the conference.

It is a glorious thing to have that kind of support. I am grateful for it beyond my power of expression. I am thankful that in my home I have that loyalty—not only prayer, but fasting whenever there is any great responsibility pending.

God help us, my brethren and sisters, to support one another. May we support our bishops in the wards in which we live and express our gratitude for their leadership. Let them know that we love them and that we sustain them. Give the same support to our Relief Society workers, teachers in the other auxiliary organizations, and in the priesthood quorums. Let us support one another.

RESOLUTION TO HEED COUNSEL

May we go from this conference with a resolve in our hearts to heed the counsel which has been given, my brethren and sisters. If we do so, we have nothing to fear, no matter what the conditions of the world might be, for the God of heaven has given us his word that it is his purpose to provide for his Saints. He has said of his servants, "They shall go forth and none shall stay them, for I the Lord have commanded them." (D. & C. 1:5.) In the early days of the Church, yea, even a year before the Church was organized, when there was only a handful of followers of the Prophet Joseph, the Lord said this,

Therefore, fear not, little flock; do good; let earth and hell combine against you, for if ye are built upon my rock, they cannot prevail.
 . . . perform with soberness the work which I have commanded you.
 Look unto me in every thought; doubt not, fear not. (Ibid., 6:34-36.)

God bless us that we may go forward without doubt and without fear, but with resolute hearts to live the gospel of Jesus Christ, and that we may heed the counsel that has been given in this glorious conference, because I testify to you that it has come from servants of God under the inspiration of heaven.

This is God's work, my brethren and sisters. God the Father and the Son did appear to the Boy Prophet in the Sacred Grove. I know that to be true as I know that I live. God lives. Jesus is the Christ. Joseph Smith is a Prophet of God. These men whom you have sustained as the Presidency of the Church and the other General Authorities are also men endowed with the same authority and with the same power to bear off the kingdom. God help us to support them and to sustain them in their leadership, and to go forward united as a people, supporting one another, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT DAVID O. McKAY

My brethren and sisters, the time draws near for the closing of this, the one hundred and twenty-second semi-annual conference of the Church.

APPRECIATION EXPRESSED

Whenever we receive a favor or a gift, the least we can do is to express appreciation by saying "thank you." Very often those words seem very feeble in expressing the feeling we have of a favor bestowed.

In your behalf I should like to say "thank you" to groups, perhaps some individuals, who have conferred favors upon us since last Friday morning. I hesitate about naming persons, because undoubtedly in so doing we may miss others who equally merit our appreciation.

First, I wish again to express appreciation of the service rendered by our Singing Mothers. Just their presence, I repeat, was an inspiration. I wish to commend Sister Madsen upon her ability to train that choral group so ably in attack, expression, interpretation, and those mothers for having taken the time to practice in their various wards and at least once or twice as a group. The Lord bless them for the service they rendered in this conference!

I wish to mention also in appreciation the men's chorus of the Tabernacle choir under the leadership of J. Spencer Cornwall, for the inspirational numbers they gave us last evening in that memorable priesthood meeting.

And of course, we must not close the conference without expressing appreciation to the Tabernacle choir, its leader, assistant, to the organists, and to every member. That singing group has attained, through merit, outstanding recognition as one of the great choral organizations of the world. They merit the gratitude of all members of this Church. I do not know of another choir in the world that gives so much time and means, financially, in their service, as the members of this choral group. In your behalf, I thank them with all our hearts for their unselfish devotion and continual attention to this great duty.

I wish to express appreciation to KSL and the specialists who have given us such efficient service, and to the other stations in this state and surrounding states, that have graciously given us of their time. On one or two occasions, as you know, we have run over-time, but this red signal has continued, undoubtedly at great financial cost. We thank these stations, one and all.

I should like to say a word of appreciation to the ushers in the Tabernacle, to the caretakers on the Tabernacle block and on the Church Office grounds—ushers and laborers under the direction of Irvin T. Nelson, Brother Marble, and other able overseers. You do not see them at work, as some of us do, but you see the results of their labors in these beautiful grounds, and if you would happen to be at the Church Office some morning before seven o'clock, you would see one of these brethren already at work, and if you were to say to him, "Well, you are early," he would say, "Yes, I always come early because I want all this lawn to be well sprinkled before the brethren come to their offices."

"TRUE NOBILITY"

To them and to all faithful workers I should like to repeat in appreciation one of the two choicest poems that Edgar A. Guest has written:

"Who does his task from day to day
And meets whatever comes his way,
Believing God has willed it so,
Has found true greatness here below.

"Who guards his post, no matter where
Believing God must need him there,
Although but lowly toil it be,
Has risen to nobility.

"For great and low there's but one test:
'Tis that each man shall do his best.
Who works with all the strength he can
Shall never die in debt to man."

—"True Nobility," Edgar A. Guest

(Used by permission of the author. Copyright, Detroit Free Press.)

The Lord bless these workers, one and all!

I wish to express appreciation to the presidencies of priesthood quorums, and especially to the bishops who have come to this conference with groups of their lesser priesthood. I mentioned one case last evening. At the conclusion of that priesthood meeting, a bishop met us with two of his quorums of deacons. I commend that fellowship.

On our way home today Sister McKay commented upon the number of young people in attendance at conference, and I said, "That is a good sign." If we can get some of the boys under the influence of the bishoprics, boys who perhaps have unfortunately come from broken homes, or more unfortunately, homes in which God does not dwell, we shall save souls here at home equally as precious as those whom we are seeking out in the world. Continue in that good work.

We express appreciation also to the sisters and to all who are laboring in the auxiliaries—in the Relief Society, the Sunday School, the Young Men's and Young Women's Mutual Improvement Association, and in the Primary. Time will not permit to elaborate, but these general boards and stake boards and the officers and teachers on the firing line are rendering to you parents and to the Church generally a wonderful service. God will reward them.

EXPERIENCE OF PAUL

In conclusion, may I call attention to the experience that Paul had just as he neared Damascus with papers in his pocket to arrest all who believed in Jesus Christ. A light suddenly shone about him, and he heard a voice saying, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?"

And he said, "Who art thou, Lord?"

The answer came, "I am Jesus, whom thou persecutest. It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks."

Saul said, "What wilt thou have me do?"

The voice answered, "Go into the city, and it will be told thee what thou must do." (See Acts 9:4-6.)

There are two elements in that incident, commenting briefly upon which I will close my remarks. The first is that the Savior recognized his authority on earth. He could, in a few words, have told Saul what he should do, but there was a branch of the Church in Damascus, presided over by a humble man named Ananias, and Jesus recognized that authority. He knew Saul's nature. He knew that in the future it would be difficult for him to recognize the authority of the Church, as instances later proved.

He said, "Go into the city, and there it will be told thee what thou must do," and Saul had to receive from the very man whom he was going to arrest instructions regarding the gospel of Jesus Christ.

There is a lesson for us all in this Church. Let us, too, recognize the local authority. The bishop may be a humble man. Some of you may think you are superior to him, but he is given authority direct from our Father in heaven. Recognize it. Seek his advice, the advice of your stake presidents. If they cannot answer your difficulties or your problems, they will write to others, the General Authorities, and get the advice needed. Recognition of authority is an important principle.

DIVINE INTEREST IN CHURCH

The other element in that incident to Paul near Damascus is the great fact that Jesus, our Lord, is interested in his Church, and in the members. As he was interested then, so he is interested today.

I like to feel that he is watching over us, that he is grieved when we do not comply with the ideals and the standards he has given us in the gospel. He was grieved with Saul, a chosen servant, who was going about blindly to destroy the Church. He is delighted when he finds the brethren whom he has appointed doing their duty and trying to live clean, upright lives, living in accordance with the standards of the gospel.

I like to feel that his servants whom he has chosen in this dispensation are also interested and I hope that President George Albert Smith, who was with us not long ago, is pleased with what we have done during the last six months. I am sure he is pleased with the setting apart of the temple site in Los Angeles because I know that was an enterprise that was dear to his heart.

I like to feel that President Heber J. Grant is near us, ready to help, especially pleased to see that the Church is growing. And President Joseph F. Smith, President Lorenzo Snow, President Wilford Woodruff—those men, I have met—President Woodruff, in our home, closely associated with President Smith, and as you know, with President Grant and President George Albert Smith.

I like to think that President John Taylor is equally interested, also President Young, and especially the Prophet Joseph. The work over on the other side is real, and the curtain sometimes between us and them is very thin. I hope the Lord will help us to go forward as these, his former representatives, would like us to go forward, that we shall always realize, as has been said once or twice in this conference, that this is the Church of Jesus Christ, who is our head.

Now let us go back to our homes with that testimony.

IMPORTANCE OF THE HOME

Among the many great messages that we have received I should just like to emphasize two: One, of course, is the home, Thirteen thousand men of the priesthood were here last night. Every one should go back to his home and look around and see wherein he can make it more ideally a Latter-day Saint home.

One day a young son, just married, invited his father to visit him and his bride in their new home. The young son took the father from room to room and showed him the furnishings, the paintings on the walls and so forth, and the father said, "This is lovely. I congratulate you, but, son, I have looked in vain for anything that indicates that you have a place here for God."

In writing about it later, the young man said, "I went through the rooms later, and I found that Father was right."

Let us go back to our homes and see whether the spirit of our homes is such that if an angel called, he would be pleased to remain.

PRIESTHOOD ACTIVITY

The other great message is for the priesthood quorums to be more active, to reach out and get the indifferent, approaching them personally, and, as has already been said, "Reproving betimes with sharpness, when moved upon by the Holy Ghost; and then showing forth afterwards an increase of love toward him whom thou hast reproved, lest he esteem thee to be his enemy." (D. & C. 121:43.)

The Prophet Joseph Smith could not have written that of his own wisdom. That is one of the great flashes of inspiration that prove his divinity.

LOYALTY TO COUNTRY

Finally, let us be true to our country and to our country's ideals. Nearly three thousand years ago an ancient prophet said that this is a land choice above all other lands, and it is, and the government of the United States as given to us by our fathers is the real government under which individuals may exercise free agency, individual initiative.

Oh, let us oppose any subversive influence that would deprive us of our individual freedom or make this government a dictator instead of a servant to the people.

Time is up. In conclusion I repeat the words of the Lord, "Wherefore, now let every man learn his duty, and to act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence.

"He that is slothful shall not be counted worthy to stand, and he that learns not his duty and shows himself not approved shall not be counted worthy to stand." (D. & C. 107:98-9.)

God help us all, that we may live more nearly to the ideals of our Savior as revealed in the restored gospel of Jesus Christ, I pray in the name of the Redeemer. Amen.

---

The Tabernacle Choir sang, "Thanks Be to God."

S. Norman Lee, Patriarch of the Box Elder Stake, offered the benediction.

Conference adjourned sine die.

GENERAL PRIESTHOOD MEETING

The General Priesthood meeting of the Church convened in the Tabernacle at 7:00 p.m., Saturday, October 6th.

In addition to the great crowd that met in the Tabernacle, the Assembly Hall to the south of the Tabernacle, and Barratt Hall (60 North Main), were filled with men of the Priesthood.

President David O. McKay was present and presided at this meeting and conducted the services.

The Tabernacle Choir Men's Chorus furnished the choral music for this meeting, and joined with the congregation in singing as an opening number "O Say, What Is Truth?"

Elder David F. Haymore, formerly president of the Spanish-American Mission, offered the opening prayer.

The Tabernacle Choir Men's Chorus then sang, "The Lord Is My Shepherd."

BISHOP LEGRAND RICHARDS

Presiding Bishop of the Church

Brethren, I have certainly enjoyed this conference with you, and the spirit thereof, and I appreciate the privilege this night of addressing this great body of Priesthood.

A CALLING OF SERVICE

As I thought of the Priesthood being gathered here, knowing that this Tabernacle is full, and the Assembly Hall, and Barratt Hall, representing the Priesthood of this great Church, I thought of the Apostle Paul, speaking of the Priesthood of his day, when he said that the Lord had given some apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists and some pastors, and teachers, for the perfecting of the Saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ, until we should all come to a unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God,—that we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness whereby they lie in wait to deceive.

Now, if you will analyze this statement you will see that Paul understood that our calling is a calling of service; the work of the ministry,—the great missionary cause of this Church. The edifying of the body of Christ, and the perfecting of the Saints:—all this work that we do in the wards and the stakes of Zion, and in the branches, in order to try and teach the Gospel, so that the people, after they take upon them the name of Christ and become members of His great Church, will not be tossed to and fro by every wind of doctrine, but that we watch over the Church and see that they are taught the Gospel.

I hope that in all of our efforts, we will try to plant a testimony in the hearts of the membership of this Church so that they will be able to stand no matter what teachings may come among us.

KNOWLEDGE OF GOSPEL

In some of our Priesthood council meetings, there has been some apprehension for fear that our own might be led away from us because of the missionary efforts of other churches. One large church in the land has publicized that their greatest missionary effort for the next ten years would be conducted right here in the state of Utah, and we have lost a few. I think we have gained more from them than they have taken from us.

We wonder how any of ours can ever leave us if we have taught them the Gospel, and are watching over them as the Priesthood of the Church, so that they will not be led away by these false teachings.

I was interested in attending a conference here in Salt Lake a few weeks ago, in visiting with Sister Williams who used to be on the M. I. A. Board of the Church. Formerly she wrote a column in the Deseret News called the "Question and Answer" column. She told about a young girl, one of our Latter-day Saint girls who went east, and wrote home, and said something like this:

"I have been asked so many questions about our Church and what we believe in since I have come here, that I am writing to ask you to tell me what the first principles of the Gospel really are. I know the first two are that we should not use coffee or tea or play cards."

That was about her conception of what the first principles were, but she had that testimony that burns inside and she wanted to know more about our teachings.

ADVICE TO MISSIONARY

I had a missionary write me once, who said something like this: "I met a minister the other day who knows more about religion than I ever dreamed of. I told him if he had something better than I had, I would join his church."

I wrote him back, and said, "You said just the right thing exactly. If he has something better than you have you ought to join his church. But," I said, "have you ever stopped to figure out how it is possible for him to have something better than you have. Has he something better than a personal visit from God the Eternal Father and His Son, Jesus Christ, to this earth to open a new gospel dispensation? And in answer to the question of the boy prophet, which of all the churches he should join, he was told that he should join none of them for they all taught for doctrine the commandments of men. Now why worry about all of the other churches with an answer like that coming direct from the Savior of the world, the one who has the right to speak and to pronounce judgment upon all the Christian churches in the world?"

Then I went on to add, "Does he have something better than a visit from Moroni with the plates from which the Book of Mormon was translated, a visit from John the Baptist with the Aaronic Priesthood, Peter, James and John with the Melchizedek Priesthood and the keys of the holy apostleship?" and then I continued by referring to the coming of Elijah the Prophet of whom Malachi testified that if it were not for his coming the whole earth would be utterly wasted at his coming, and then of Moses and Elias. Then I said, "If he has something better than that you join his church."

STORY OF PROPHET JOSEPH

I usually make a similar statement to the missionaries when I interview them for their missions. I say "when you go to buy a suit, it either fits or it doesn't fit. Now," I say, "Take the story of the Prophet Joseph Smith. Does it fit, or doesn't it fit? Then I enumerate these things, and then add, "If you can believe the Prophet's story, you know we do not have just another Church, but we have the only true Church, for no other church is built upon such a foundation. When you hear that song of what rapture filled his bosom because he saw the God of love, I think of it so many, many times. I think of the rapture that fills the bosoms of our missionaries when they get in the field and catch the spirit of this work. I have seen many of them that I think could have given their lives and given them gladly for the testimony of Jesus that they had because of the rapture that filled their bosoms because of the spirit of this great latter-day work.

My feeling is that if we could get that spirit into the hearts of our young people we could trust them anywhere. They don't need to know all of the answers to the scriptures. They don't need to be able to explain all of the writings of Holy Writ. They need to know what the God of Heaven has done in our day, and then the rest of it is only a process of study and information in order that they might be able to better preach and teach and know of the teachings of the prophets of old.

When I went on my first mission, President Anthon H. Lund addressed us missionaries, and said something like this:

"Now, brethren, when you go on your missions, if you ever lack for anything to say, just bear testimony that you know that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God and the Book of Mormon is true, and I promise you that you will have something to talk about."

MISSIONARY EXPERIENCE

I have put that promise to the test. One time while I was secretary of the Netherlands Mission, and had only been there a few months and did not know the language very well, the Mission President told me that if I would write down the addresses of the brethren, including President Grant's who was then president of the European Mission, he would not call on me to speak.

But there was one greater than the mission president there, and that was President Grant, and he said, "I want to hear from Brother Richards." So while I was sitting down in front taking the minutes of the meeting I was announced as the next speaker. As I walked up on that platform with an audience of some 1500, many of whom came with their stovepipe hats and their walking sticks, I thought of the promise of President Anthon H. Lund that if you ever need anything to talk about, just bear witness that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God and that the Book of Mormon is true and the Lord will give you something to talk about, and one of the finest testimonies of my life came out of that experience that night. There are some Latter-day Saints here in Salt Lake today who give credit to my testimony that night for having started them to investigate our message. I have truly learned the truth of the words of the scripture: "for the letter killeth but the Spirit giveth life."

I just feel that if we could feel that rapture in our bosoms from telling these glorious stories, and that our young people could feel it, we would not need to worry too much about interpretations of the scriptures.

STRENGTH OF THE MORMON POSITION

I am impressed with a statement that Brother Orson F. Whitney used to tell from this stand, and published in the little pamphlet he wrote on the "Strength of the Mormon Position." He told about an interview he had with a prominent Catholic priest who once occupied this pulpit here in this tabernacle, in these words:

"Many years ago a learned man, a member of the Roman Catholic Church came to Utah and spoke from the stand of the Salt Lake Tabernacle. I became well acquainted with him, and we conversed freely and frankly, a great scholar with perhaps a dozen languages at his tongue's end. He seemed to know all about theology, law, literature, science, and philosophy. One day he said to me, 'You Mormons are all ignoramuses. You don't even know the strength of your own position. It is so strong that there is only one other tenable in the whole Christian world. That is the position of the Catholic church.'

"The issue is between Catholicism and Mormonism. If we are right, you are wrong. If you are right, we are wrong, and that is all there is to it. Protestants haven't a leg to stand on, for if we are wrong they are all wrong with us since they were a part of us and went out from us, while if we are right, they are apostates whom we cut off long ago. If we have the apostolic succession from St. Peter as we claim, there is no need of Joseph Smith and Mormonism. But if we have not that succession, then such a man as Joseph Smith was necessary, and Mormonism's attitude is the only consistent one. It is either the perpetuation of the Gospel from ancient times, or the Restoration of the Gospel in the latter days." And we know it has been restored and so that is all there is about it. That ought to settle all disputes when we have to discuss religion with any other church.

They might be able to out-argue some of our young people, but they can't take away the visit of the Father and the Son nor the visit of the other holy messengers, nor the visit of Moroni and the information contained in that Book of Mormon.

EXPERIENCE IN SUNDAY SCHOOL

When I was a boy in the little town where I was raised, I had the privilege of leading the Sunday School in reciting the testimony of the three witnesses. I remember upon that occasion Karl G. Maeser and Brother George Goddard were there. Brother Goddard used to teach us to sing, "Take away the whiskey, the coffee and the tea. Cold water is the drink for me," and "Who's on the Lord's Side, Who? Now is the time to show. We ask it fearlessly, who's on the Lord's Side, who?"

I will never forget that experience, and the testimony of those three witnesses has never left me. It is a marvelous thing when the Lord touches your heart to realize that these things that He has given unto us are divine, and that they come from Him.

MARRIAGES OUT OF THE CHURCH

As we travel about the Church we see a good many people who have strayed away from the Church. Sometimes their testimonies become dim for a time because some of them have married out of the Church. They think they can get away from the Church. I remember that while I was president of a stake in California a young lady came into my office one day selling neckties.

She said, "I guess you don't remember me, do you, Brother Richards?"

I said, "No, I don't believe I do. Who are you?"

Then she told me that she had taught Sunday School under me here in Salt Lake when I was superintendent of a ward Sunday School. Then I remembered her and said, "What is the rest of the story?"

She said, "I fell in love with a Catholic boy, and I loved him so much that I didn't think it would make any difference to the Lord whether I worshipped him in the Catholic church, or the Mormon Church, so I went all the way with him, and we were married by his priest, and I agreed to raise my children in the Catholic church. Now we have three children, and I told him the other day that I was the biggest hypocrite in the whole world, that I didn't believe a thing that was going on in his church, that I knew that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, that the Book of Mormon was true. I don't know what is going to become of you and me and the children, but I am going back to my Church."

I was in New York some time ago, and the president of the stake told me about a woman there who, on her deathbed, called the stake president and her bishop. She had married a Catholic, a Salt Lake girl, and she went east with him, and he died, and he left her quite an estate, but he left his old maid Catholic sister to administer it, with the instructions that if she attempted to bring her children up in the Mormon Church she was to be cut off entirely from the estate.

On her deathbed, with her son and daughter having entered their twenties she plead with her bishop and stake president to see if they could not do something to save her children to the Church.

She said, "I made an awful mistake. If I had it to do over again, I would crawl on my hands and knees back to Salt Lake City in order to raise my children in the Church, if I had to go out washing every day to earn a living for them."

I was in Chicago attending a conference meeting, and a little mother with a baby in her arms sitting down in the center, at the close of the meeting came up and said, "Bishop, I would like to shake your hand."

I said, "I would certainly be glad to shake yours." Then she started to cry, and I said, "You're a western girl, aren't you?" I got a nod of approval, and I said, "And you married out of the Church?" and I got another nod. She couldn't talk. Her emotions had gotten the best of her. I said, "And your husband does not like you to come and meet with your people?" and I got another nod. Then I said, "And you're homesick—homesick for your Church and for your people." With that she sat down on the front bench, covered her face in the shawl that wrapped her little baby, and wept like her heart would break.

"TESTIMONY OF THE SPIRIT"

I tell you this world is not big enough that you can run away from the testimony that the Lord plants in your heart—as President Clark tells us so often—"the testimony of the Spirit."

I want to bear witness of that testimony. I would like to see us plant it in the hearts of our young people. I would like to see them encouraged to bear their testimonies in Sunday School and in our fast meetings. President Brigham Young is accredited with having said that we can get a testimony quicker on our feet than we can on our knees, and I believe it. As I have gone around this Church and listened to men who have been called to represent the Adult Group of the Aaronic Priesthood, I have seen those men stand up and weep. One man right near here recently said he had lived in his ward 16 years, and his bishop had never asked him to do anything. He stood there and wept with gratitude and thankfulness for the opportunity he had to speak.

I heard another man who manages a chain store, who was called to represent that group, and before he got through, he had caught the spirit of it, and he said, "I haven't done as I should have done, but I am here today to tell you that before this year ends I am going to be ready to ask my bishop for a recommend to take my wife and children to the temple and have them sealed to me."

He had had a long time to think about it but he had to get on his feet before he felt inspired to make such a resolution. It is a little like the story they tell of the old lady who came home from fast meeting one day, and said to her daughter, "That is the best fast meeting I have ever attended."

The daughter said, "Is that so, Mother? Who spoke?" "I did," she said.

There is something about this testimony of the spirit that is the most wonderful thing in all the world. It was what Peter had when Jesus announced that he was the Son of God, and that was more than the multitude could take, so one by one they went away. Then Jesus turned to Peter and to the apostles, and asked them why they did not leave also. Then Peter replied, "Whither shall we go, Lord, for we know that thou hast the words of eternal life?"

RESPONSIBILITY OF PRIESTHOOD

Brethren, you are called in this great Priesthood of the Lord for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ, for the perfection of the Saints, and it is our responsibility to plant in their hearts a testimony of the divinity of this work, so that no matter where they go, and no matter what arguments are brought, they know that these fundamental facts are true—that God the Father and His Son Jesus Christ did appear to the Prophet Joseph, and if these facts are not true then we have no right to be holding this conference because then the whole thing is a deception.

Our testimonies of this great latter-day work to many are like the testimonies of the women who went to the tomb, and saw that the body of Jesus had arisen and when they told this story it seemed to the people to be but idle tales. Many think when we bear them our testimony of the marvelous work and wonder the Lord has brought forth, that it is nothing but idle tales.

But it is God's eternal truth. Of this I bear you my testimony in the name of the Lord, Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

Second Counselor in the First Presidency

The Bishop is a hard man for a quiet man to follow.

I always enjoy the Bishop. He has such a marvelous enthusiasm, a wonderful testimony, and a wide experience, that he always stirs me. I thank him for his sermon tonight, and for its uplifting thought and word.

POWER OF THE PRIESTHOOD

Again, brethren, it is a great privilege to meet with you here in this Priesthood meeting. Again I am impressed with the power of the Priesthood. Again I am reminded that this is the greatest gathering of Priesthood—these gatherings of ours,—that can be held in the world. Greatest because of the great number of men who come together with one thought, one allegiance, one Priesthood. Greatest, because in the second place, we hold the Priesthood of Almighty God, with all the powers, rights, and authorities which are incident to that Priesthood.

I wonder if we believe that? I wonder if in our hearts we all have that firm conviction that we are possessed of the Priesthood of God, that that Priesthood gives us certain powers, certain rights, spiritual rights? I hope we do.

AN EVERLASTING ENDOWMENT

My brethren, I wish we could all appreciate that wherever we go, this Priesthood goes with us. The Priesthood is not like a suit of clothes that you can lay off and take back on. It is an everlasting—depending upon ourselves—an everlasting endowment. If we could get that into our minds and hearts, so that it was really a part and parcel of us, we would be far nearer to a solution of our many difficulties—the difficulties of life that beset us—than we are today.

If we really had that thought, that conviction, and that recollection of the character of the Priesthood which we hold, and that we could not lay it aside, and that God would hold us responsible if we prostituted it, it would save us from doing a good many things, save us from going a good many places. If, every time we started a little detour away from the straight and narrow, we would remember, "I am carrying my Priesthood here. Should I?" it would not take us long to work back into the straight and narrow.

I often think that I should try, and I do try, never to be anywhere or engaged in anything, so that if suddenly called to the bedside of the sick, and particularly of my own, I would have to go blushing, or trying to forget where I had been, what I was doing.

Brethren, if we could just hold a few simple little things like that in our minds we would find it so much easier to tread the narrow way. If you were called to the bedside of your loved one, not in the condition, and not so you could invoke as a right, and feeling you had a right, the power of the Priesthood, and the worst happened, what are you going to do about it? What are you going to think about it? What is your wife going to think about it? For the chances are the wife is living more nearly as she should than you, if you were thus guilty. Oh, my brethren, don't sell your birthright—your Priesthood birthright—for a mess of pottage.

CHASTITY TO BE GUARDED

I would like to urge you young people to guard, even as you guard your life, your chastity. I would like you to remember and to know that for a moment of ecstasy you can have an eternity of pain. It is not worth it, and if you would keep yourselves straight, then never make the first approach. I am telling you boys that if you will conduct yourselves properly, if you let it be known to your associates of the opposite sex that you are strict, you will never have much difficulty with them. It is only when you begin to edge over that they, if they be bad, come along.

INCIDENT IN LIFE OF SAVIOR

I was thinking this afternoon, after I went home from meeting, of an incident in the life of the Savior. I was moved to this thought, more or less following out some of the ideas I tried to express this morning. You remember that awhile after the Savior was crucified and resurrected, Peter, Thomas, Didymus, Nathaniel of Cana, James and John, and two others—seven of them altogether—responded to Peter's suggestion that they go fishing. Peter evidently thought that it was all over. Even though the Savior had visited them at least twice before, he did not understand what it was all about.

So they went fishing. They fished all night and caught nothing, as you will remember. The next morning, as the day dawned, they were near shore, and they saw, standing on the beach, a man. The man asked them if they had caught any fish, and they said no. He said, "Throw your net on the other side." They did, and it was filled.

Then John said, "It is the Lord." And I think John had in mind an earlier experience at the beginning of the Savior's mission, when on one occasion, he entered a boat belonging to Peter, and had him push it out from the shore so that the people could not gather round too close to him, and preached a sermon. Then he told Peter to row out and get some fish. Peter said, "I have fished all night and have not caught anything, but if you say so, I will row it out." So he went out a little distance. The Savior told him to throw out his net, and he caught the fish, so many that he had to call for his partners, the sons of Zebedee, to come and help him.

At that sight, Peter said, "Depart from me. I am a sinful man, O Lord." And after a little conversation, the Lord said, "Fear not, as hereafter you will catch men."

I think that John remembered that as he heard the direction to put the net on the other side, and then he said, "It is the Lord." You will remember that they caught the fish, great quantities of them.

Peter—I love Peter. He had a little trouble the night before the crucifixion, but Peter was a great man, the man whom the Lord chose to be the senior in the presidency. Peter girded his coat about him, for he was naked. I have always thought there was a lesson in that—that Peter would not appear before the Lord nude.

At golf clubs and other places you men run around nude. I wonder if that is quite right. I would think about it if I were you.

Peter went ashore, and the other men came ashore. They saw it was the Lord, and the Lord told them to bring some more fish. He had fish, and he had bread. The fish was cooked. They ate their meat there on the seashore, there in the early morning light.

CHARGE TO PETER

When they had finished, the Lord said to Peter, "Peter, lovest thou me more than these?"

And Peter ignored the second part of the question and said, "Lord, thou knowest I love thee." The Lord said, "Feed my lambs."

Then he renewed the question, "Peter lovest thou me?" "Yea, Lord, thou knowest I love thee." And the third time the question came, and then as the record says, Peter was grieved, and said, "O, Lord, thou knowest all things. Thou knowest I love thee." "Feed my sheep."

I have always thought that that was a commandment that was just as pertinent, and belonged just as much to us as it belonged to Peter. It was an everlasting command to the bearers of God's Priesthood.

And so to you brethren I repeat that the Lord has said you are to feed his sheep. What are you going to feed them? Are you going to feed them—spiritually, I mean, of course—the right kind of food, or are you going to feed them with doubt, with rationalizing? Are you going to try to feed them on mysteries? Are you going to try to weaken the commandments of the Lord regarding the Word of Wisdom by yourselves smoking or drinking? Are you going to feed them alleged spiritual materials that are not spiritual, but are destructive of their faith?

ONLY ONE WAY

Here I want to return to my theme song, unity. The Lord has told us, in the books what are his commandments. He has laid down the truth. Read the books. I think we sadly lack the reading of the scriptures. They are wonderful books. You can find no more interesting stories, if you will, than you find in the Bible, and none that are more interesting, more faith-promoting, than you find in the history of our Church. Read them. You learn the food you should feed, and then feed it.

And the unity comes in this: that there are not two ways, there is only one way. We should always feed the same food to all of our youth.

Brethren, the weight of our responsibility as parents, grandparents, we who bear the Priesthood, the Priesthood of Almighty God—the weight of that responsibility, if we really sense it, is almost crushing. Yet, Brethren, if we shall live righteously ourselves, if we shall serve the Lord, if we shall keep his commandments, he will give us the strength and power to live as we should, to teach as we should, to lead as we should, and we shall get that strength and that power in that direction in no other way.

Brethren, I plead with you, magnify your Priesthood. Remember it is with you always, never do anything to prostitute it or pollute it. Live righteously always.

TESTIMONY

I bear my testimony to the truth of the Restored Gospel, that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, that Joseph was a prophet, that those who have followed him, down to and including our present prophet, seer and revelator, are prophets of the Almighty. It is our duty as the Priesthood so to recognize, so to honor, and so to obey. May the Lord help us so to do I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

---

The Men's Chorus and the congregation joined in singing the hymn, "I Know that My Redeemer Lives."

PRESIDENT STEPHEN L RICHARDS

First Counselor in the First Presidency

It seemed to me that I could feel the strength of your testimonies in that glorious song, and that helps to fortify me for my attempt to fill this, my first assignment in my present capacity, to address the General Priesthood meeting of the Conference.

I feel deeply humble in this undertaking, and I sincerely ask for the Spirit of the Lord to attend me and for your cooperation and faith and prayers.

I understand that it is appropriate and desirable at this meeting to bring before the Priesthood, which includes our presiding officers in stakes and wards and missions, some items which need attention. So with your indulgence and President McKay's permission, I will bring before you a few items first affecting our missionary service, in the hope that their mention here may be helpful to the carrying forward of our missionary procedure.

These items are not necessarily related.

INTERRUPTIONS TO MISSIONARY WORK

We would appreciate it, and we speak for the mission presidents, if you would discourage parents, other relatives and friends, visiting missionaries in the missions. We have had a large number of instances brought to our attention where serious interruption has come to the missionary work by reason of these visits, some of which have been very protracted. If you can use your influence and give the information to discourage these visits and ask the parents and their other friends to let these missionaries pursue the courses which have been arranged for them, they will contribute very greatly to our work.

We have had numbers of requests for leaves of absence for missionaries to come home to the funerals of their kinspeople. We appreciate the fact that their hearts are touched on these sad occasions, but we have learned that very frequently the visit home only serves as an interruption to the mission, that no considerable good is accomplished, and that the missionary himself is often disappointed to think that he left the mission field, his companion, and his assigned work to go home for such funerals.

I am very grateful to note that it has been the disposition of most of our missionaries in the field to desire to stay with their labors, and they themselves, have, in a number of instances, discouraged their kinspeople from requesting their return. If you can bring this matter, as occasion requires, to the attention of the families, it will serve a good purpose in the continuity of our missionary work.

CALLING OF SEVENTIES

Now we are confronted with some new questions in missionary work on responses to the call of the seventy to go into the mission field. May I first express for the First Presidency appreciation and gratitude for the generous response coming to this call. We have on file at the present time responses from many stakes of the Church, indicating that they will fully comply with the request, and that their quotas will be met. This is encouraging.

IMPORTANCE OF GOOD HEALTH

There are, however, brethren, in the sending of these older men, some safeguards that should be considered. First, the question of health. Our mission presidents have advised us that many of the older men have not been able to endure the rigorous work, the climate in some cases, and the exactions that are put upon our missionaries. These older missionaries are often asked to be companions to younger men. You heard this day something of the vigorous work that they do, the long hours they spend, entailing a good deal of walking and very strenuous exercise.

It is not possible in many instances to assign older men to the so-called easier jobs. If they are to make their greatest contribution they must fit into our missionary program, and in order to do that they must have good health. We have a great sympathy for our mission presidents. They have many problems, so many, indeed, that a great part of the time their attention must be given to exceptional cases, so that we ask you brethren as you send these older men to us, to make careful inquiry into their health. Sometimes our doctors' examinations—we are generally grateful for their service—are not too searching and we find when they get to the mission field, particularly some of our older brethren, have some weaknesses that deter them, and sometimes preclude them, from carrying forward their missionary work.

I know that it is difficult to get the older men to come, but we must have them in good health. There may be a few exceptional cases where older couples with a car can do some special service in a mission, but generally speaking the seventies must enter into the work with the same vigor and we hope with full physical equipment to carry forward the mission program as the younger men.

WELFARE OF FAMILIES

We have discovered, too, in recent months in the coming of these older men, that very considerable apprehension is feared for the welfare of some of their families. It is reported in cases that come to us that families are left without adequate support, and we have a few cases where couples have been recommended with the understanding that they would leave minor children with relatives or friends and without parental guidance.

President McKay has long taken the position that that is not wisdom to call parents away from their children, even for this great missionary service, so before both of the parents are sent, they must always be free from the parental responsibility that goes to minors in the home. Where the man is sent, care must be exercised to see that his family may have proper care in his absence. That will entail a discernment on the part of the bishop, and he should exercise caution and wisdom before recommending a man whose children and family may suffer too greatly in his absence.

We do not want to take the sacrifice out of missionary work. We know the history of it in the past, and we know that it does entail, sometimes great deprivations and sacrifices, but we want to use wisdom in taking men away from their families.

MISSIONARY EXPENSES

Another item—it is a part of our traditional missionary custom for the family to pay missionary expense. Exceptions are made. There are friends sometimes who like to contribute. Sometimes the ward, sometimes the quorum, will contribute. But it is deemed preferable to have men sent, who, either by themselves, or through their families, can make some substantial contribution to their missionary labors.

We do not look with favor, because we feel that it lacks in certain material elements in our missionary work, upon having support come wholly either from the quorum or from the ward, or from outside sources. It is true that there are many generous people who send funds into the Church itself, to be helpful to missionaries who need help, and I assure you that it is a great satisfaction to have at our disposal some limited funds which can help out a missionary who hasn't quite been able to finish, whose parents have perhaps reached the end of their financial resources. But in the main it is preferable to send missionaries who can contribute substantially to their own support.

THE LANGUAGE OF PRAYER

We have discovered in the mission field in particular, and in other places, also a lack of proper teaching with reference to prayer. I know that I myself have been shocked out in the mission field as I have heard missionaries called on for prayer who seem to have had no experience or training whatever in the use of the language of prayer.

I do not know that it is a matter of vital importance, but I think, my brethren, that in the quorums and in the classes, you would do well, as in the homes also, to teach the language of prayer—"Thee and Thou," rather than "you." It always seems disappointing to me to have our Father in Heaven, our Lord, addressed as "you." It is surprising how much we see of this in the mission field among the young men who come to serve there. I think you might make note of it, and avail yourselves of any opportunities that may come in order to teach the sacred and reverential language of prayer.

SUPPORT FOR DESERET NEWS

That is all that I had for you, my brethren, with reference to the missionary items. I would like to take a few moments to mention a few other items of general import, and also with reference to our Priesthood work. I am not going to preach about it, but I know that Brother Petersen will not object if I say to you that I think that the loyalty of this Priesthood can well be shown in supporting the official organ of this Church, the Deseret News. I don't think that we ought to have to appeal for your support in that respect.

We need an organ for the Church, of course we do, and a good one. We have one. Why should Latter-day Saints forsake that paper and give help to competition? I believe we can seriously think over that matter. Personally, I love the paper. My grandfather was its first editor. I am proud of it, and proud of its history. I appeal for your support for it.

APPEAL TO ELDERS

Now, brethren, I have taken occasion on times before, and there isn't time now, to elaborate much, to make as earnest an appeal as I know how to make to the elders of this Church who have been neglectful and careless, and who have set themselves in process of losing that Priesthood of which President Clark has so impressively spoken.

I do not suppose that I can appeal to too many of them here tonight. They are probably not here. They are in your quorums. Their presidencies are here, at least in large measure. Brethren, will you obey the injunction given by President Clark to go out for these lost sheep and bring them in, and succor them, encourage them, and if necessary, rebuke them in order to bring them to a realization of what they are losing.

Some years ago I took the liberty of sounding a little slogan to our brethren, as I went around the Church, in the care of these people. It was a very simple thing. I do not know whether you will agree with it or not. "If they don't come to us, we will go to them." I put that forward once, and a young elders' quorum president said, "I don't believe it." He said, "We provide the quorum facilities for them. If they don't come it is their own fault."

Of course it was not long before he changed his mind when we reminded him that that was not the missionary spirit. I think we can't go to any who need our help more than to these brethren who have been careless and neglectful about their Priesthood.

I sincerely hope that in the administration of the quorums you are emphasizing the fraternal aspects of these great institutions. I have long been persuaded that these quorums ought to be our clubs. They ought to be the places where we find our dearest associations, and we need not look far beyond them for that fraternity which we all crave. The fraternity of the Priesthood in our own quorums!

NEED FOR EFFECTIVE VISITING

In your visits to these people, I am sure that you need to exercise great discretion and judgment. I wish all of the Melchizedek Priesthood—perhaps many of them did last night—might have seen the demonstration in the bishops' meeting which was held on this stand last evening. There were some very excellent constructive suggestions which were given.

I believe, my brethren, that you will make far more progress in frankness than in attempting to beat about the bush with these men. I believe if you have the proper spirit you can go to them and talk about their condition, and their needs without spending time in visits talking about the weather and politics and current affairs.

One of the most successful missionaries that I ever knew, when I asked him what the elements of his success were, said, among other things, that he always told people on whom he called that he never had time to talk anything else but the Gospel, and he begged them to excuse him from any other discussion.

I am persuaded that if we went to our members and talked to them about their faith, and the things they were losing, and the things the quorum and the Church hold out for them, that we would make more progress in their reformation. It requires some courage, it requires some tact, and most of all it requires love. They say love is, in the end, the only irresistible force in the world, and if we have love sufficient, and friendship, and these brethren know our love for them, I think we can approach them and speak frankly to them, and thus help them. I sincerely trust that we may.

Nearly all of these men are good at heart, but careless. There are a few that are mean. Perhaps they deserve rebuke, and rebuke might be the best means of bringing them to an understanding of their position, but remember how that rebuke has to be made, "reproving betimes with sharpness, when moved upon by the Holy Ghost." That is the only rebuke that is permissible under the constitution of the Priesthood.

PRIESTHOOD DIVINE

Now, my brethren, I love this Holy Priesthood. I know that it is genuine. Every interpretive sense that the Lord has given me testifies to me that it is divine. I have felt its influence as I have administered in the ordinances of the Gospel. I have felt its stimulation. I have felt an essence pass from me in administering to the Saints that I know was of divine origin. I have seen its results. I know that it is divine. I know that it is authentic. Its source is not far removed from us—into the area of dim antiquity. We do not have to debate about its origin. Why, it is proximate to us.

A man today said that I ordained him a High Priest some time ago, and asked if I had a card to give him the derivation of my Priesthood. I said, "No, I don't have a card for you, but I think you can remember it—four steps. I was ordained by President Joseph F. Smith. He was ordained by President Brigham Young. Brigham Young was ordained by the three witnesses, one of whom was Oliver Cowdery, who with Joseph was ordained by angelic ministers."

That is how close it is to us. There is no debate about it. There is no question about the authenticity of this great power. We are fortunate indeed not to have to search the records of ancient days in order to establish this divine authority, upon which the Church and Kingdom of God is founded.

GRATITUDE FOR ASSOCIATIONS

I express my gratitude for it, and I express my gratitude for my association with my brethren of the Priesthood. I have had a most impressive experience in the last six months. I had thought I had always been close to my brethren, but I found that I had never been into the full confidence of this wonderful relation until I came to be associated with my beloved President, and President Clark,—without any reservations, without a necessity of concealing private feelings, but with a freedom of thought and expression welcomed by all, that to my thinking, is the badge of true friendship, brotherhood and understanding.

I thank the Lord that somehow, in his providence, I have been brought to that great blessing, and I ask the Lord to help me that I may be in a measure worthy of it. And I ask the Lord to bless every one of you, my brethren, that each may magnify the sacred calling that the Lord has vouchsafed to him.

I do so humbly in the name of Jesus. Amen.

PRESIDENT DAVID O. McKAY

My esteemed fellow workers in the Priesthood:

My heart is filled with gratitude tonight, as it has been throughout this conference, for the knowledge I am sure we all have that God is with this people. That expression of brotherhood, love, just given by Brother Stephen L Richards is akin, indeed it is identical, with the spirit that prompted the Apostle of old to say, "I know that I have passed from death unto life because I love the brethren."

That is the sublime feeling which every member holding the Priesthood may experience if he will do his duty and live uprightly before the Lord.

UNBECOMING GAMES

I have in mind only one or two items to give at the conclusion of this impressive conference. One that I mention by way of caution is that in your carnivals that you hold in order to raise money for building purposes, you avoid those games which are unbecoming, or that will cast in any way reflection upon our young girls or men who hold the Priesthood. We know the difficulties that you have to raise fifty per cent of the cost of these edifices, and we commend you highly, and our sisters, for the effort you put forth. But there are some games which are carried on in carnivals outside the Church which are unbecoming the recreation furnished by the Church officers.

One I will name is a feature in which young Beehive Girls come out in public in bathing suits, sit on a spring board before young men who throw balls to hit a certain spot which will loosen the spring-board, and cause the young girl to drop into a tank of water.

I have seen colored and white men do that for so much money, but let us not have our young girls do it, nor men who hold the leadership in the Priesthood.

FELLOWSHIP IN THE PRIESTHOOD

Now, there are three other items which I will name, just briefly I hope, and I will illustrate each by practical experiences. The first is the value of companionship in quorums, already mentioned by my counselors.

One of the most pleasing experiences of this great conference was meeting a bishop who came to the stand and said, "I am here with some of my deacons, whom I should like to have the privilege of meeting you." A true leader accompanying his quorum boys to conference!

Fellowship in the Priesthood! If we can get the bishops to fellowship the priests in every ward, and in some way, at opportunities favorable, meet those young men and young women of corresponding age in some social or groups or meetings, and win their admiration and confidence, we can avoid some unpleasant things which are occurring in our towns. For those priests and girls determine largely the moral atmosphere of your town. You bishops are the leaders. Your counselors can aid you in associating with the teachers and the deacons.

This companionship applies also to Elders.

There are many ways in which we can get these indifferent elders together without inviting them to do things which are difficult. Some of them do not like to pray. They hesitate about standing in public to preach, and some of them would rather go fishing or playing golf on Sunday than attend meeting. But, not one of those indifferent elders will refuse an invitation, for example, to come to a funeral of one of the townsfolk, or one of their members, or of one of their members' wives, and if you will come as a quorum and sit together as a quorum, there is one means of fellowship. Our High Priests are doing it more than Seventies or Elders.

I have attended a number of funerals where I have seen reserved seats for High Priests, in paying respect to a departed brother. There is group fellowship.

Again these indifferent men will come to your quorum socials. Make those socials of a high order, and thus you will come in personal contact with them.

We must be mutually helpful. This world would not exist if it were not for the mutual aid we give one another from the time we are born until we are laid away.

REVERENCE

A second principle to which I wish to refer is reverence. I have spoken upon this several times, and intend to continue to speak upon it, because I look upon reverence as one of the highest qualities of the soul. An irreverent man is not a believing man. I think a man cannot testify of his knowledge of the existence of God and take God's name in vain. He can do it by words, but as the old king in "Hamlet," his words will fly up, but his thoughts remain below.

I was deeply impressed with the lesson that President George Q. Morris taught his missionaries in the Sacred Grove. They have an entrance there now, a sort of fence and a gate leading into the sacred spot, where they hold the service.

There as you enter the gate is a sign, "Quiet Please." I wish everybody in the Church could experience that quiet attitude of several hundred missionaries in that Sacred Grove, and as soon as the Amen of the benediction was given, these elders retired without consultation, without shaking hands, to the outside part of the grove.

In our meeting houses today we have reverence just as soon as the hour comes for worship, but in Sunday Schools particularly, at the change of classes there is a hub-bub. That is not educative to our children. They have done away with the marching we used to have when I was in the Sunday School work in Weber. They now think it undignified for older persons to march.

Well, Superintendents, you may do this, at least—when you separate for class work, let a class rise and pass out to the room, and then another class follow, without this careless, sometimes boisterous attitude of everybody's mingling and talking as he goes to his class.

Reverence indicates high culture, and true faith in deity and in his righteousness..

KINDNESS TO ANIMALS

The third is kindness. The first line in what is now known as the "Psalm of Love" is this: "Love suffereth long and is kind."

A true Latter-day Saint is kind to animals, is kind to every created thing, for God has created all. He is right, the author of the "Ancient Mariner" when he deplores the killing of the albatross, when he wrote these lines:

"He prayeth best who loveth best all things both great and small,

For the dear God who loveth us, he made and loveth all."

I am mentioning this because I have seen, in my travels, such cruelty in the world, particularly in the Near East. I was touched with the treatment that those people gave, and probably now give, the humble little donkey. Every caravan is led by that poor, humble creature, carrying a heavier load than his own weight, it seemed sometimes. Often the driver, the leader of those camels, if he became weary would climb on top of the load the donkey was carrying. As you drive along those highways, on the roads you would see the carcasses of the donkeys that walked and carried, struggled and staggered until they fell. They were unloaded and left for their bones to bleach on the side of the highway.

Camels, if a bit obstreperous, would have steel prongs piercing the sides of their jaws. If they happened to pull back, the clamp would close and those prongs penetrate not only the skin but the flesh as well.

However, we need not go to the Near East to see cruelty to animals. We see it around here if we but open our eyes. It is a good thing to teach our boys to be kind. A man who was working for me once on the farm came home about sundown, and said, "I have just killed a porcupine over there."

"I said, 'Why did you kill it?'"

"Oh," he said, "just for fun." And I said, "Did you kill it or is it over there suffering?"

"Oh, I killed it." Well, I wondered, so I just took time to cross those two creeks and go over to the little hill. He had not killed it. The poor creature was just stunned, its head was beaten, and he was struggling. What fun can there be in treating dumb animals in that cruel way!

KINDNESS TO WIVES

But I mention this now, because I think we are cruel to our wives. I have here two letters, one anonymous, another signed by a woman. They are asking "What shall we do? Our husbands are cruel to us."

Says one, "My husband has a terrible temper. He comes home and scolds the children. He is cruel to me. At first he seemed to be a good, loving husband, but when my first baby was born, then was born my troubles."

Brother Bowen is aiding greatly in taking care of appeals for cancellations of sealings. I am grieved, brethren, I say "I" because the responsibility of cancelling those sealings rests upon the one who holds that key. I am grieved indeed to note in those appeals the number of instances which indicate that some husbands treat their wives cruelly.

I cannot imagine a man's being cruel to a woman. I cannot imagine her so conducting herself as to merit such treatment. Perhaps there are women in the world who exasperate their husbands but no man is justified in resorting to physical force or in exploding his feelings in profanity. There are men, undoubtedly, in the world who are thus beastly, but no man who holds the Priesthood of God should so debase himself.

Some of us are now past the threescore and ten. We can look back over the short life, and it does seem short, and treasure those things which seem most precious. Tonight, one of those things, one of the most precious possessions is my memory of a home in which love was supreme, in which I cannot recall ever a cross word having passed between father and mother. We owe that blessing to our children.

"Love suffereth long and is kind."

The spirit of kindness is as enduring as love itself. Let us go home, and if we have been cruel, either by treating our wives with indifference, or by scolding, or loud talking, if we have been cruel to our children by neglect, or by striking them, let us see if we cannot repent and look introspectively and see whether or not we are not to blame for some of the conditions that arouse these passions.

CHILDHOOD EXPERIENCE

Now, brethren, I wish to bear you a testimony which I think I have never before given in public. Since childhood it has been very easy for me to believe in the reality of the visions of the Prophet Joseph Smith. What I am going to say may seem very simple to you, but to me it is a heart petal.

When a very young child in the home of my youth, I was fearful at night. I traced it back to a vivid dream in which two Indians came into the yard. I ran to the house for protection, and one of them shot an arrow and hit me in the back. Only a dream, but I felt that blow, and I was very much frightened, for in the dream they entered, one a tall one, and a smaller one, and sneered and frightened mother.

I never got over it. Adding to that were the fears of mother, for when father was away with the herd or on some mission, mother would never retire without looking under the bed, so burglars or men who might enter the house and try to take advantage of mother and the young children were real to me.

Whatever the conditions, I was very much frightened. One night I could not sleep, and I fancied I heard noises around the house. Mother was away in another room. Thomas E. by my side was sleeping soundly. I became terribly wrought in my feeling, and I decided to pray as my parents had taught me.

I thought I could pray only by getting out of bed and kneeling, and that was a terrible test. But I did finally bring myself to get out of bed and kneel and pray to God to protect mother and the family. And a voice as clearly to me as mine is to you, said, "Don't be afraid. Nothing will hurt you." Where it came from, what it was, I am not saying. You may judge. To me it was a direct answer, and there came an assurance that I should never be hurt in bed at night.

EASY TO BELIEVE

I say it has been easy for me to understand and believe the reality of the visions of the Prophet Joseph. It was easy for me in youth to accept his vision, the appearance of God the Father and his Son, Jesus Christ to the boy praying. I thought of nothing else. Of course that is real. It was easy for me to believe that Moroni came to him there in the room. Heavenly beings were real from my babyhood on, and as years came those impressions strengthened by reason and strengthened by the inspiration of God directly to my soul.

I know that those visions were real, and that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, and when we say this it means that I know that Jesus lives, that Christ is our Redeemer and that this is his Church. We are merely his representatives. When we accept that, then the reality of God the Father, Father of our spirits, is easy to accept.

These things being real, brethren, we cannot do anything else but try our utmost to do what Jesus Christ, our Redeemer, asks us to do, for he has given us the Gospel that bears his name, and in the words of Peter, "There is none other name given under heaven whereby we must be saved."

God bless you. With all my heart I bless you, and pray that peace and love and kindness will abide not only in your hearts, but in your homes, that your wives, our wives and our children may have memories sweet of a home in which God was pleased to dwell.

May this be our lot, our experience, throughout the Church in all the world, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

"Jesus, Lover of My Soul" will now be sung by the Men's Chorus, following which Elder Eldred L. Waldron, formerly president of the Hawaiian Mission, will offer the closing prayer, and this conference will be adjourned until ten o'clock tomorrow.

We will have the Church of the Air at eight o'clock tomorrow morning, and we are to be there at ten minutes to eight.

There are present, as nearly as can be counted, 12,908 men holding the priesthood, nearly 13,000. I believe that is the largest attendance in the history of the Church. That includes the three places, the Tabernacle, Barratt Hall, and the Assembly Hall, and 440 on the grounds who could not get in.

---

The Tabernacle Choir Men's Chorus sang the hymn, "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," after which the benediction was pronounced by Elder Eldred L. Waldron, formerly president of the Hawaiian Mission.

---

The congregational singing of the Conference was directed by J. Spencer Cornwall, Conductor, and Richard P. Condie, Assistant Conductor of the Tabernacle Choir.

The Salt Lake Tabernacle Choir was in attendance at the Sunday sessions and presented musical numbers at those meetings, J. Spencer Cornwall conducting the singing of the Choir.

The Salt Lake Tabernacle Choir Male Chorus, J. Spencer Cornwall, Conductor, furnished the choral music for the General Priesthood meeting Saturday evening, October 6.

The Choir singing for the Friday morning and afternoon sessions, October 5, was by the Relief Society Singing Mothers, with Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen conducting; Frank W. Asper at the organ.

The singing at the Saturday morning session was by the congregation, J. Spencer Cornwall conducting, and Alexander Schreiner was at the organ. The singing at the Saturday afternoon session was also by the congregation. Elder Richard P. Condie led the singing at this meeting, and Roy M. Darley, Assistant Tabernacle organist was at the console.

The Choir singing of the Tabernacle Choir and Organ broadcast Sunday morning 9:00 to 9:30, as also that for the Church of the Air broadcast was directed by J. Spencer Cornwall. Frank W. Asper was at the Organ, and the spoken word was by Richard L. Evans.

Accompaniments and interludes on the great Organ were played by Alexander Schreiner, Frank W. Asper and Roy M. Darley.

---

Stenographic notes of the Conference were taken by Frank W. Otterstrom and Joseph Anderson.

The One Hundred Twenty-second Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints

The One Hundred Twenty-second Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints convened in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Utah, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, April 4, 5, 6, 1952.

The general sessions of the conference were held at 10:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., Friday, Saturday and Sunday, and the General Priesthood meeting was held in the Tabernacle Saturday evening, April 6, at 7:00.

The proceedings of the general sessions were broadcast over Station KSL, and by arrangement through KSL over the following stations:

In Utah: KSUB at Cedar City, K SVC at Richfield, KJAM at Vernal, and K VNU at Logan.

In Idaho: KGEM at Boise, KID at Idaho Falls, KEYY at Pocatello, KBIO at Burley, KVMV at Twin Falls, and KRXX at Rexburg.

In Colorado: KEXO at Grand Junction.

In Arizona: KTYL at Mesa.

In Nevada: KLAS at Las Vegas.

The proceedings of the general sessions were also televised over KSL television station, channel 5.

All general sessions of the conference and the General Priesthood meeting were broadcast in the Assembly Hall, on Temple Square, and in Barratt Hall (60 North Main Street), over a loud-speaking system and by television. Thousands in addition listened to the services on the Tabernacle grounds by means of amplifying equipment.

President David O. McKay presided and conducted the services at each of the sessions of the conference, including the General Priesthood meeting.

Included in this record is also a full report of Columbia Broadcasting Company's Church of the Air, Sunday morning, April 6, from 8:30 to 9:00, and the Tabernacle Choir and Organ broadcast from 9:00 to 9:30.

FIRST DAY

MORNING MEETING

The conference commenced Friday morning, April 4, at 10 o'clock, with President David O. McKay presiding and conducting the services. The Tabernacle was crowded to capacity as time came for opening the first session, and the Assembly Hall to the south of the Tabernacle, as also the Barratt Hall, was crowded with people, and many others assembled on the grounds.

President David O. McKay:

This is the opening session of the One Hundred Twenty-Second Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City, Utah.

All of the General Authorities of the Church are in attendance, excepting President Stayner Richards, one of the Assistants to the Twelve, now presiding over the European Missions, from whom we have just received the following cable:

"Greetings for a wonderful General Conference. Trust that you shall be abundantly blessed, and sustained in health. You are constantly in our prayers. President and Sister Stayner Richards."

We are pleased to note the presence of the following state and educational officials, whom we welcome cordially to this session of Conference; Governor and Mrs. J. Bracken Lee; Mayor and Mrs. Earl J. Glade; Dr. A. Ray Olpin president of the University of Utah; Dr. Ernest L. Wilkinson president of the Brigham Young University; State Superintendent of Schools, Allan Bateman; Heber Bennion, Secretary of State; and undoubtedly others whom we have not recognized, to all of whom we extend cordial welcome, as to all of you here assembled and listening over radio or television.

Elder Joseph Anderson is the Clerk of the Conference.

These services, and all general sessions of Conference, will be broadcast in the Assembly Hall, and in Barratt Hall, over a loud-speaking system and by television, and we might announce at this time for the benefit of our listeners that in addition to all these sessions being given over television, the Church of the Air Service from 8:30 to 9:00 a. m. next Sunday morning, and also the Choir Broadcast from 9:00 a. m. to 9:30 a. m. next Sunday morning may be seen over the television.

All other sessions will be broadcast over the following stations:

In Utah: KSUB at Cedar City, KSVC at Richfield, KJAM at Vernal, and KVNU at Logan.

In Idaho: KGEM at Boise, KID at Idaho Falls, KEYY at Pocatello, KBIO Burley, KEEP at Twin Falls, and KRXX at Rexburg.

In Colorado: KEXO at Grand Junction.

In Arizona: KTYL at Mesa.

In Nevada: KLAS at Las Vegas.

We express appreciation to the stations named for their cooperation in broadcasting the proceedings of this conference. We thank them for their service which will continue throughout the conference. However, in the interest of time, we shall not repeat this announcement at every session.

All general sessions will also be televised over KSL Television Station, channel 5.

We are pleased to inform you that the singing of this morning's session will be furnished by the Brigham Young University Combined Choruses, with Norman Gulbrandsen and Crawford Gates conducting, and Brother Frank W. Asper at the organ.

We shall begin this session by the Brigham Young University Combined Choruses singing, "The Heavens are Telling," conducted by Elder Norman Gulbrandsen.

The opening prayer will be offered by

Friday, April 4
